I do not see how we can reasonably pass such a proposition as that on the ground that the cases where we do not require guilty knowledge are a class of their own, where it is reasonable to put the man on inquiry as to what the fact is. If he is required to have a license, he must know that he has got the license; if he is required not to sell to a child under 7 years old or under 15 years old, it is reasonable to put on inquiry a liquor seller who sells liquor to a boy, whether a boy of 15 or 14 years old, but to make criminal the transportation of an ordinary product seems to me to be a very harsh rule indeed.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to say, Mr. President, that this bill is not intended to affect common carriers at all; and, on the other hand, it is not intended to affect sales in the States, as it necessarily could not affect them under the Constitution, but it does affect sales in the Territories and in the District of Columbia, and in those only. I shall, however, consider this matter further when the bill again comes before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over on the objection of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] will be printed with the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be ordered to be printed, in the absence of objection.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has gone over under the objection of the Senator.

Mr. MITCHELL. I know it has, but I should like to make a single remark regarding it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Chair will hear the Senator.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not know that I have any objection to the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota, but I should like to know what I am voting on, and for that reason I desire to see the amendment in print.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment has been ordered to be printed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1908) to authorize the establishment of a biological station on the Great Lakes under the control of the United States Commission of Fish and Fisheries was announced as next in order.

Mr. PERKINS. At the request of my colleague [Mr. BARD], I desire that that bill may go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The bill (S. 3342) for preventing the adulteration, misbranding, and imitations of foods, beverages, candies, drugs, and condiments in the District of Columbia and the Territories, and for regulating interstate traffic therein, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4825) to provide for a union railroad station in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That bill will go over under the arrangement made that it will be taken up to-morrow morning.

The bill (H. R. 6847) to correct the military record of Michael Hayes was announced as next in order.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That bill has been reported adversely.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] desired to be present when action should be taken on that bill. If there be no objection, it will go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The joint resolution (S. R. 52) authorizing the President of the United States to invite the government of Canada to join in the formation of an international commission to examine and report upon the diversion of the waters that are the boundaries of the two countries was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. As the provisions of that joint resolution have been incorporated in the river and harbor bill, I would suggest to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who reported the joint resolution, that it may as well be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. MORGAN. I think it may as well remain on the Calendar for the present.

Mr. LODGE. Very well. It may as well remain on the Calendar, as the conferees have not yet agreed upon the general bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The bill (S. 4861) to regulate the assessment and collection of personal taxes in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. McMILLAN. Let that bill go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over, retaining its place.

HALL OF RECORDS.

The bill (S. 5113) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon to be used for a hall of records was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS], who reported that bill, is not present, and I understand when the bill was heretofore before the Senate that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who is also absent, objected to its consideration. I think the bill had better go over under the circumstances, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. VEST. I do not understand that the Senator from Maine objected to this bill. There never has been any objection to this bill. It has passed the Senate three times. When the bill has gone to the other House, on the proposition to select a site a general scramble commences, with the result that we thus far have got no hall of records.

This bill has been before Congress for twenty years. Every department of the Government, and especially the Treasury Department, I had almost said begged that it might be passed; but at any rate has suggested again and again the necessity for a hall of records. If a fire should take place to-morrow, as it has occurred twice in the Quartermaster-General's Bureau, the papers destroyed would involve the Government in the loss of millions of dollars. Three Presidents have recommended the erection of this building, as have half a dozen Cabinet officers, and yet it seems impossible to get any legislation upon the subject.

Mr. COCKRELL. If my colleague will permit me, I desire to say that I think the Senator from Maine, who is absent, did not object to this bill, but to the Senate bill 2532, which is Order of Business No. 1091 on the Calendar, in regard to the purchase of an entire block beyond Lafayette Square.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I will not make any objection, and I have no objection to the bill; but it was my impression that the Senator from Maine had objected to it, and therefore I thought it ought not to be taken up in his absence.

Mr. COCKRELL. My recollection is that the Senator from Maine did not object to this bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL CIRCUIT JUDGE.

The bill (S. 944) to provide for the appointment of an additional circuit judge for the ninth judicial circuit was announced as next in order.

Mr. PERKINS. In the absence of my colleague [Mr. BARD], I request that this bill go over and take its place under Rule IX.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over under Rule IX.

LOUDON PARK NATIONAL CEMETERY.

The bill (S. 4932) providing for the extension of the Loudon Park National Cemetery, near Baltimore, Md., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of War to purchase such additional land as may be necessary for the extension of the Loudon Park National Cemetery, near Baltimore, Md., to provide burial for such soldiers, sailors, and marines as are by law entitled to interment in that cemetery, and appropriates $15,000 to provide for the purchase of the land and for its necessary improvement.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INCREASED PENSION FOR TOTAL DEAFNESS.

The bill (S. 1359) authorizing an increase of pension in certain cases was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That from and after the passage of this act all persons on the pension roll of the United States, or who may hereafter be placed thereon, receiving pension for total loss of hearing due to causes originating in the military or naval service of the United States and in the line of duty, shall be entitled to receive, in lieu of the amount now paid in case of such disability, the sum of $40 per month: Provided, That said increase shall in no manner affect the rate of pension now being paid and allowable for partial deafness, the rating for which shall be continued and determined in accordance with the provisions of existing law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. BATE. I should like to ask the Senator who has the bill in charge what is the present rate of pension for such disability as this bill proposes to increase the rate to $40 per month?

Mr. COCKRELL. Thirty dollars per month is the present rating.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that the present rate is $30 per month. The bill as introduced provided that the rate should be $50 per month, and the committee on pensions of the Grand Army of the Republic urged on the Committee on Pensions of the Senate the propriety of increasing it to that amount. After giving the matter very careful consideration, the Committee on Pensions thought an increase to $40 per month was an adequate increase, and that it was but justice to the few soldiers who are afflicted in this way. There are only 239 of them on the pension roll.

Mr. BATE. Do I understand that the pension is for entire deafness?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; for total deafness.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to increase pension for total deafness."

NATIONAL APPALACHIAN FOREST RESERVE.

The bill (S. 5228) for the purchase of a national forest reserve in the Southern Appalachian Mountains, to be known as the "National Appalachian Forest Reserve," was announced as next in order.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, owing to the absence of my colleague [Mr. SIMMONS], I ask that that bill may be passed over for the present, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over, retaining its place.

PROTECTION OF GAME IN ALASKA.

The bill (H. R. 11535) for the protection of game in Alaska, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I ask that that bill may go over this morning, for this reason: I supposed it was pending before the Committee on Territories, and I submitted to the chairman of the Committee on Territories an amendment to the bill, which I hoped would be adopted when the bill was reported. I have not that amendment with me at present. I shall be ready to have the bill taken up when we meet again.

Mr. BATE. I have no objection to the bill going over, but the committee having charge of it have reported it favorably, and there is an earnest desire for early action upon it.

Mr. PERKINS. I will state to the Senator from Connecticut that this is the same as the bill which is now pending before the Committee on Territories.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That is what I supposed.

Mr. PERKINS. I introduced this bill early in the session, but the Committee on Territories has not had an opportunity to consider it. This bill has passed the House of Representatives and was referred to our Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game. It is believed by the people in Alaska that such legislation is necessary to save and prevent the destruction of the few deer and birds remaining there. I think it a wise bill and that it should become a law. Unless the Senator from Connecticut has some objection to offer to it, other than that there is a similar bill now pending in the Committee on Territories, I hope the bill may be considered at this time.

Mr. BATE. I wish to say that a bill similar to this has been introduced and referred to the Committee on Territories, where it has been under consideration. The junior Senator from California [Mr. BARD] and myself have had it in charge as a subcommittee. We have acted favorably upon it, though we have not yet reported it back to the Senate. I think it is the same as the pending bill.

Mr. PERKINS. It is the same as the pending bill.

Mr. BATE. There is no objection, so far as I know, to the bill pending before the Committee on Territories.

Mr. PERKINS. The bill has the approval of my colleague, who has been endeavoring to collect data and make a report on the bill pending before the Committee on Territories; but while gathering that data the pending bill passed the House of Representatives, and it has been considered by another committee of the Senate and favorably reported.

Mr. BATE. Do I understand that this is a House bill, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is a House bill.

Mr. BATE. There is some urgency in regard to the passage of this bill. Those interested in affairs in Alaska are very desirous that action should be taken on the bill at an early day.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I doubt whether the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] heard what I said. I said that, as I understood, this bill or a similar one was pending before the Committee on Territories, that I had presented to the chairman of that committee an amendment which I desire to have adopted to the bill, and supposed that it would be considered by that committee. I have not the amendment here now. If I had, I should be willing to proceed with the consideration of this bill. When I can get the amendment which I desire to propose, I shall be ready for the consideration of this bill.

Mr. PERKINS. I beg pardon. I did not understand the statement of the Senator, and therefore I withdraw my request for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

CHARLES F. SMITH.

The bill (S. 5214) granting an increase of pension to Charles F. Smith was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Charles F. Smith, late first lieutenant Company K, Fifty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Boyd, widow of Augustus Boyd, late captain and assistant quartermaster, United States Army, and to pay her a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

PROTECTION OF CITIES AND TOWNS IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

The bill (H. R. 53) for the protection of cities and towns in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That any incorporated city or town in the Indian Territory having a population of 2,000 or more is hereby authorized to issue bonds and borrow money thereon, to be used for the construction of sewers and waterworks and the building of schoolhouses, such bonds not to exceed an amount the interest on which at 5 per cent per annum would be liquidated by a tax of 5 mills upon the dollar of the valuation of the taxable property in such city or town, to be ascertained by the last assessment for purposes of taxation; that before such bonds shall be issued the same shall be authorized by a two-thirds majority of the qualified voters of such city or town voting at an election held for that purpose, notice of which shall be published for four consecutive weeks prior thereto in a newspaper of general circulation published in such municipality: Provided, That such bonds shall not be issued until it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the judge of the United States court for the judicial district in which such municipality is located, by petition of the mayor and council thereof, that all the requirements of this section have been complied with, who shall thereupon cause to be entered upon the minutes of his court a judgment or decree reciting the facts as he finds them to be: Provided, however, That before any election shall be held for the purposes herein named a census shall be taken and the population of said municipality ascertained by some suitable person, or persons, appointed for that purpose by the said judge of the district court, who shall make a sworn return to said judge showing the number of inhabitants thereof, and that the judgment or decree shall set forth the population and taxable wealth of the municipality, and said order or decree shall be printed on said bond and made a part thereof and shall be final and conclusive against said municipality in any litigation on said bonds.

SEC. 2. That such bonds shall contain all necessary and usual provisions expressing the contract, shall be signed by the mayor, and countersigned by the treasurer of such municipality, who shall keep a proper record of such bonds. Said bonds shall not bear a rate of interest exceeding 5 per cent per annum, payable semiannually, and none of said bonds shall be sold at less than their par value.

SEC. 3. That any municipality incurring any indebtedness for the purposes provided for in this act shall, by ordinance which shall be irrepealable, provide for the collection of an annual tax sufficient to pay the interest on such bonds, as the same falls due, and also to pay and discharge the principal thereof within twenty years from the date of contracting the same: Provided, That if any municipality shall have the authority under any special act to issue its bonds, the amount of the bonds issued under the special act shall be first deducted, and there shall only be issued under this act such additional bonds as shall not exceed the limit provided in this act.

Mr. BATE. May I inquire by whom that bill was reported?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The bill was reported by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES], from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BATE. I thought that it had been reported by the Committee on Territories.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Indian Affairs reported the bill.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I inquire what is the size of the towns authorized to issue the bonds provided for in the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Cities or towns having a population of 2,000 or more.

The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

It proposes to pay, from the funds in the Treasury belonging to the Choctaw Nation of Indians, two Choctaw warrants for $1,250 each and issued to James M. Shackelford, the owner, for legal services he rendered as the attorney of the Choctaw Nation.

Bennett, late of Company F, Nineteenth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

Burr, late of Company G, Twelfth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

CHARLES D. PALMER.

The bill (H. R. 13371) granting an increase of pension to Charles D. Palmer was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "forty" and insert "thirty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles D. Palmer, late of Company F, One hundred and fifty-ninth Regiment Ohio National Guard Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have the report in the case read. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the language of the bill—"Fifty-ninth Regiment Ohio National Guard Infantry"—and to the language of the report. They do not seem to me to agree at all. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. GALLINGER on the 19th instant, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13371) granting an increase of pension to Charles D. Palmer, have examined the same and report:

The report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives is as follows:

"Charles D. Palmer, the beneficiary named in this bill, and now 57 years of age, served as a private in Company F, One hundred and fifty-ninth Ohio Volunteers, from May 2 to August 22, 1864, when honorably discharged; and again served as corporal and private in Company F of the Thirty-sixth United States Infantry from February 10, 1866, to February 10, 1869; in Company B, Sixth United States Infantry, from April 12, 1873, to June 1, 1877, when honorably discharged; and again in Company D, Fourth United States Infantry, from March 2, 1878, to May 14, 1881, when he was discharged by way of favor to support his mother.

"He is now and has been since August 4, 1890, a pensioner under the act of June 27, 1890, at the maximum rating, namely, $12 per month, for total inability to earn a support by manual labor, the result of disease of heart, feet, and urinary organs.

"A claim to pension under the general law, filed in June, 1897, and based upon rheumatism and resulting disease of the heart, alleged to have been contracted by him while at Maryland Heights in the summer of 1864, was rejected April 2, 1902, upon the ground of no record in the War Department of the existence of said disabilities, the absence of medical treatment for the same in the service or at discharge, and claimant's inability to furnish competent and satisfactory evidence to connect his disability with his military service.

"The soldier filed the testimony of two comrades of the One hundred and fifty-ninth Ohio, to the effect that they were exposed to a severe rain storm at Maryland Heights in the summer of 1864, and that the beneficiary took a cold, which resulted in rheumatism, as a result of such exposure.

"The captain under whom he served during his first enlistment in the Regular Army also testified that it was his conviction that the beneficiary was a great sufferer from rheumatism, owing to exposure while serving in Wyoming, and that this disability was contracted in line of duty.

"Several acquaintances who knew the soldier between his discharge in 1869 and his reenlistment in 1873 testified that he was then suffering from rheumatism, and medical evidence filed by him showed treatment for the same in 1872 and perhaps earlier.

"The continued existence of rheumatism since the soldier's final discharge from the Army, in 1881, is shown by the testimony of several acquaintances, these witnesses testifying that the soldier complained of pain and aching of his legs, that he limped when walking, and that he also complained of his heart troubling him; and medical testimony as to the treatment of the soldier between 1884 and 1892 and 1897 and 1898 has also been filed, such treatment having been given for rheumatism of the shoulders, back, and hips, disease of the heart, kidneys, and disease of eyes.

"The soldier alleged that he had become totally blind in August, 1896, and proof shows that he has been totally blind since 1899; that he requires the aid and attendance of another person, and that he is in a destitute condition, having no means of support except the pension of $12 per month.

"The certificate of medical examination made in August, 1898, rated him $14 for rheumatism, $17 for disease of heart, and $6 for disease of legs, and also found him to be totally blind in both eyes.

"The rheumatism in this case is no doubt due to the long service of this soldier, and inasmuch as in addition to these disabilities he is also suffering from total blindness and is in destitute circumstances, your committee believes that, following established precedents, an increase of pension to $40 per month is warranted, and therefore report the bill back with the recommendation that it pass."

Your committee adopt the foregoing report and recommend the passage of the bill, when amended by striking out in line 8 the word "forty" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "thirty," it being the policy of your committee not to increase beyond $30 per month the pension of any soldier who is pensioned under the act of June 27, 1890.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the only matter to which the Senator from Missouri desires to call attention is the service, I believe the bill ought to be amended by striking out the words "National Guard" and inserting "Volunteer."

Mr. COCKRELL. That certainly ought to be, for I do not think the National Guard was in existence from 1862 to 1864.

Mr. GALLINGER. Evidently it is a mistake.

Mr. COCKRELL. I never heard of the National Guard until in recent years.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 7 strike out "National Guard" and insert "Volunteer."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CROOKSTON, MINN.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other governmental offices in the city of Crookston and State of Minnesota, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, not to exceed the sum of $75,000.

Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination and of his recommendation thereon, and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Treasury Department, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites, and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary; and said commission shall within thirty days after such examination make to the Secretary of the Treasury written report of their conclusion in the premises, accompanied by all statements, maps, plats, or documents taken by or submitted to them, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected.

The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall not exceed $6 per day and actual traveling expenses: Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

The bill (H. R. 12054) granting a pension to Elizabeth A. Burrill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Elizabeth A. Burrill, widow of Orrin A. Burrill, late of Company A, Fiftieth Regiment New York Volunteer Engineers, and to pay her a pension of $12 per month.

Mr. COCKRELL. I beg to call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to the word "Engineers" in the bill. It reads "Fiftieth Regiment New York Volunteer Engineers."

Mr. GALLINGER. It is manifestly a mistake.

Mr. COCKRELL. The report shows that it was volunteer infantry.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is what it ought to be.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to strike out "Engineers" and insert "Infantry."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 7 strike out "Engineers" and insert "Infantry."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to ask unanimous consent of the Senate for the immediate consideration of the bill. It provides for putting $30,000 of the funds of the Choctaw Nation and $20,000 of the funds of the Chickasaw Nation in the hands of a commission consisting of the governor, treasurer, and an ex-chief of each of the nations, to be distributed among indigent members of the nation, the funds distributed among the nation to be charged against each individual and reported to the Government and taken out of his distributive share of the funds of the nation when the funds are divided by the Dawes Commission. There can be certainly no objection to the bill. It is earnestly asked by the authorities of the nation. The statement is made that there is great suffering among those people on account of the failure of crops last year, and it is earnestly urged by the Secretary of the Interior in a letter addressed by him to Mr. CURTIS, of the House of Representatives. In the conclusion of his letter he says:

> The Department again urges that the relief requested be furnished as speedily as possible and that the bill be passed.

I ask unanimous consent to have the bill taken up by the Senate at this time for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

Whitney until he reaches the age of 16 years.

Mr. WARREN. I should like to amend the committee amendment by striking out "thirty-five," before "dollars," making the pension stand at fifty, as introduced, so that the pensioner may draw $50. I move to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "fifty."

Mr. GALLINGER. I will simply say in regard to the amendment to the amendment that under the rules of the committee $35 is the rate the committee allows. Of course it is in the discretion of the Senate to determine otherwise, if the Senate chooses.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I will take only a moment's time. It is said "the exception proves the rule," and I would like this bill to be an exception. This pension is for the widow of a gallant officer, who served both as a volunteer and a regular. He was wounded at Bull Run, and afterwards served long, faithfully, and brilliantly in the Regular Army.

> The report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives, hereto appended, is adopted, and the passage of the bill is recommended.
> The House report is as follows:
> "Records of the War Department show that Thomas Holloway, now 59 years of age, served as a private in Company K, Twentieth Pennsylvania Emergency Militia, from June 18, 1863, to August 1, 1863, when honorably discharged with his company.
> "The claim of the soldier, filed under the general law on November 29, 1893, and based upon dislocation of the left kneejoint while guarding the Northern Central Railroad bridges on the line between York and Harrisburg, Pa., in June, 1863, was rejected September 25, 1897, upon the ground of no record in the War Department of the alleged injury and claimant's inability to furnish satisfactory evidence of the incurrence of such injury in the military service and line of duty.

"In support of his claim the soldier filed the testimony of one of the members of his company to the effect that while returning from a scout one day in July, 1863, the members of the company informed him that the claimant had been injured and sent home; the testimony of another one shows that upon missing the claimant from the company he was, upon inquiry, informed that he met with some injury and was sent home; that thereafter he saw him about the camp limping; that he was lame, but was unable to say in which leg the lameness was; and the testimony of another comrade shows that on or about June 25, 1863, while in camp on the Northern Central Railroad, opposite Bainbridge, Pa., affiant visited the quarters of their captain for the purpose of securing a pass to leave camp, and upon arrival at the captain's tent he found the claimant in conversation with the captain, noticed that he was then in distress, and heard the captain say, 'You can not march with that leg, and I will have to send you home,' and that thereafter he saw the claimant go about limping.

"Another member of the soldier's regiment also testified that when the regiment was discharged he heard some one say that claimant had his leg fractured in the Army, but was unable to state under what circumstances he got hurt.

"A shopmate of the soldier testified that upon his return from the Army the claimant worked in the same shop with him; that at that time he was lame in one of his legs, and informed the affiant that he met with some accident or injury to that leg while in the Army, and continuously thereafter he continued to limp and appeared to be lame in one of his legs.

"Certificates of medical examination of the soldier made in 1891 and 1896 rated him $10 for dislocation of the left knee, and described the disability as follows:

"'There is evidence of a former forward dislocation of the left knee with patella firmly fixed and knee joint firmly anchylosed, causing 1½ inches shortening. The leg is tender on pressure and painful on walking. He walks with a limp.'

"A claim of the soldier under the act of June 27, 1890, was rejected upon the ground that he did not serve ninety days during the war of the rebellion.

"The evidence in this case filed by the soldier indicates that he was injured as alleged by him, and while the proof is not as specific as it might be, yet your committee are willing to resolve any doubts that may be in the case in his favor, and recommend that the relief sought for in the bill be granted.

"The bill is reported back with the recommendation that it pass."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Fifty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Alabama?

CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS SHEETS.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4008) granting a pension to Christopher Columbus Sheets. It is a short bill. The beneficiary is a very old man. The bill was almost reached on the Calendar this morning.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, the facts which I called to the attention of the Senate on yesterday related mainly to that part of the Philippine Islands known as the Visayan district and covered the period during which General Hughes was in command. General Hughes was succeeded by General Smith. During a portion of this time General MacArthur was the general in command of our armies in the Philippine Islands. In order that I may do no injustice to any of these officers I prefer to let them speak for themselves.

There are a few more facts to which I wish to allude in relation to the Visayan district and which appears in the testimony of General MacArthur taken before the Committee on the Philippines. I invited General MacArthur's attention to that part of his official report which was made to him by General Hughes. I have already called attention to the testimony of General Hughes, in which he stated that the methods of warfare conducted in that district were not civilized because they were an uncivilized people against whom the war was waged. I read from page 894 of the hearings:

Senator RAWLINS. There is a summary of the killed and wounded on each side on page 239 of your report.

General MACARTHUR. What report?

Senator RAWLINS. I think it was made by General Hughes. This question could have been appropriately put to him, but I will ask your explanation of it. A summary is given of the killed and wounded on each side. This is page 239:

"Enemy's loss: Killed, 95; wounded, 6; captured, 4; rifles," etc. "Our loss: Killed, 5; wounded, 31."

Again, I find on page 243 a summary for December:

"Enemy's loss: Killed, 88. Our loss: Killed, 1; wounded, 3."

And again, on page 247, summary for March:

"Enemy's loss: Killed, 29; wounded and captured, 5. Our loss: Killed, 2; wounded, 1."

On page 249, summary for April:

"Enemy's loss: Killed, 19; wounded, 5."

On page 250, summary for May:

"Enemy's loss: Killed, 134; wounded, 21. Our loss: Killed, 2; wounded, 8."

On page 251, summary for June:

"Enemy's loss: Killed, 141; wounded, 1; prisoners, 54. Our loss: Killed, 1; wounded, 9."

Summary for the year, on this same page:

"Enemy's loss: Killed, 801; wounded, 38; captured, 100. Our loss: Killed, 40; drowned, 3; wounded, 72."

Then I put this question:

What I wanted, if you could, is to give an explanation as to the disproportion of the killed and wounded of the enemy as compared with the killed and wounded of our own troops.

General MACARTHUR. It arises from the fact—that our soldiers are trained in what we call "fire discipline." That is, target practice. In other words, they know how to shoot.

I invite attention to his explanation—

That, in substance, is one explanation that he gives of the circumstance to which I have alluded. Then I presented this phase of the question to General MacArthur in the following language:

Senator RAWLINS. I have recently, with reference to these figures, examined to a certain extent the proportion of killed and wounded in the civil war; also in the war with Mexico, and we have had frequent reports as to the proportion of killed and wounded in the South African war, and I find that in all those wars the proportion of killed and wounded seems to be about the same as that shown in our loss—taking the summary for a year, killed, 40; wounded, 72. It is usually about 3 wounded to 1 killed. Now, I suppose our troops in the civil war on both sides were as accurate in their aim as our troops in the Philippines. I suppose our troops in Mexico were as skilled marksmen as the troops in the Philippines. I appreciate that the general fatality of the enemy in our troops would be much greater; but I can not quite understand the explanation you give as to the fatality resulting from wounds actually inflicted.

General MACARTHUR. There is a point there I will try to make plain.

Senator PATTERSON. What is the proportion of the killed to the wounded?

Senator RAWLINS. You mean here?

Senator PATTERSON. Yes.

Senator RAWLINS. In the summary?

Senator PATTERSON. Yes.

Senator RAWLINS. The summary of the enemy's loss, 800 killed and 30 wounded; while the summary of our loss is, killed, 40; wounded, 72.

Senator PATTERSON. That shows there are about 25 killed to 1 wounded.

General MACARTHUR. It shows that is what we have tabulated as reports, Senator; it does not show all the facts, because we did not get hold of their wounded.

It occurred then to Senator PROCTOR that the explanation which General MacArthur had given of the disproportion between the killed and the wounded in the enemy's loss was not quite tenable; and after the statement which was thus presented by General MacArthur for his explanation, the military men upon the committee, including the distinguished member of the Committee on Military Affairs and a man of military experience, Senator PROCTOR, made this suggestion to relieve that situation:

Senator PROCTOR. They carried off their wounded, I suppose?

General MACARTHUR. Yes. I was going to explain how that occurred, especially in the early operations, where the tactical operation was normal; that is, where we fought in line and observed the usual method of tactical action. In the first instance the insurrection had an abundance of men, but a limited number of arms. I have a memorandum on that subject I can introduce at the proper time.

Senator BEVERIDGE. So that the reason the proportion of the wounded to the killed is so small is because the wounded were removed and you have no data from which to give figures?

These figures relate not to the early operations of the Army in the Philippines, but cover a later period, when it is not claimed that there were any surplus men, and the men who then existed in small bands under the direction of the commanding officers of our Army were men who were directed to pursue the Filipinos swiftly, continually, and unrelentingly, to give them no rest. It was in the execution of those commands that we find in these official reports the number of the enemy killed and wounded and our loss in respect of the killed and wounded. I submit for the consideration of fair and reasonable men whether we have any explanation which is satisfactory of the disproportion in killed and wounded of the enemy as compared with the killed and wounded of the American troops. Whenever our men came in contact, within gunshot of the enemy, they pursued them swiftly, and they would have no time to gather up and carry away the men who fell and were disabled and to make their escape.

The fact is, as appears from the official reports in relation to the campaign in the district of the Visayas, that our troops were directed not to encumber themselves with prisoners; and a fortiori were directed not to encumber themselves with the burden and care of the wounded, and when small bands of Filipinos were encountered by our soldiers they were swept from the face of the earth. It was in execution of the programme and policy to make that district a howling wilderness and to exterminate all the people who might be above the age of 10 years.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. RAWLINS. With pleasure.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose there are a great many Senators in this body who can answer the question, but in the ordinary reports of battles, in ordinary wars, whether with foreign nations or in a war like our late civil war, do not the reports from the field of battle of the victorious army always contain, within the bounds of reason, a pretty fair estimate of the enemy's wounded, whether carried off or not? For instance, it seems to me the reports we have been in the habit of getting in such cases contain a fair approximate estimate of the wounded, which generally turns out to be nearly correct.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, as I have stated, in the course of this examination, as the attention of General MacArthur was called to this very matter, the reports of the different wars waged do show the number of killed and wounded. In such official reports is shown substantially the same relative proportion of wounded to killed of the enemy as of the army from which the report emanates.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. RAWLINS. With pleasure.

Mr. PATTERSON. I wish to ask the Senator from Utah whether, in all the reports which have been made to the War Department by our officers in the Philippines of the killed and wounded, any attempt of any kind has been made to account for the enormous disproportion between the killed and wounded, or whether there is any suggestion that the reason the number of wounded was not found to be greater was that the Filipinos had been able to carry off their wounded?

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I have been able to find no official report on that subject. I made an examination of the official reports, and finding that for the year 1901 the number of killed in the Visayan district, of the enemy, was 800, I think, and only 30 wounded, I had the curiosity to endeavor to ascertain whether that condition of things prevailed, and I could find nothing to show it in the official report. So I called the matter to the attention of General MacArthur when he was upon the stand. His first reason, as I have already read it to the Senate, was that the aim of our soldiers was so unerring that, in spite of the changing vicissitudes of the field and of the enemy, their shot struck a vital spot, and every wound therefore carried death to the victim.

But that was so untenable a proposition when the matter was presented to him that it was immediately abandoned. Resort was then had to another equally untenable theory, that while the Filipinos were being swiftly pursued by our troops with messengers of death, they were able to stop and pick up and carry away their wounded. That, however, is too absurd to appeal strongly to the reason of intelligent men, and we have the only explanation remaining, which is that contained in reports not entirely official which came out in the course of the court-martial of Captain Waller, to the effect that his direction from his superior commander was to encumber himself with no prisoners, that he should not encumber himself with the embarrassment and care of wounded, that he should make of that land a howling wilderness and exterminate all who should be over the age of 10 years.

Mr. President, let me invite attention to some of this language, and I first read from an official report bearing date December 24, 1901, Headquarters Sixth Separate Brigade:

CIRCULAR } HEADQUARTERS SIXTH SEPARATE BRIGADE,
No. 6. } Tacloban, Leyte, P. I., December 24, 1901.

To all station commanders:

The brigade commander has become thoroughly convinced from the great mass of evidence at hand that the insurrection for some time past and still in force in the island of Samar has been supported solely by the people who live in the pueblos ostensibly pursuing their peaceful pursuits and enjoying American protection, and that this is especially true in regard to the "pudientes" or wealthy class.

He is and for some time past has been satisfied that the people themselves, and especially this wealthy and influential class, can stop this insurrection at any time they make up their minds to do so; that up to the present time they do not want peace; that they are working in every way and to the utmost of their ability to prevent peace. He is satisfied that this class, while openly talking peace, is doing so simply to gain the confidence of our officers and soldiers, only to betray them to the insurrectos, or, in short, that while ostensibly aiding the Americans they are in reality secretly doing everything in their power to support and maintain this insurrection.

Under such conditions there can be but one course to pursue, which is to adopt the policy that will create in the minds of all the people a burning desire for the war to cease; a desire or longing so intense, so personal, especially to every individual of the class mentioned, and so real that it will impel them to devote themselves in earnest to bringing about a state of real peace—that will impel them to join hands with the Americans in the accomplishment of this end.

The policy to be pursued in this brigade, from this time on, will be to wage war in the sharpest and most decisive manner possible. This policy will apply to the island of Samar and such other portions of the brigade to which it may become necessary to apply it, even though such territory is supposedly peaceful or is under civil government.

Further on in this same report this occurs:

In dealing with the natives of all classes, officers will be guided by the following principles:

First. Every native, whether in arms or living in the pueblos or barrios, will be regarded and treated as an enemy until he has conclusively shown that he is a friend. This he can not do by mere words or promises, nor by imparting information which, while true, is old or stale and of no value; nor can it be done by aiding us in ways that do no material harm to the insurgents. In short, the only manner in which the native can demonstrate his loyalty is by some positive act or acts that actually and positively commit him to us, thereby severing his relations with the insurrectos and producing or tending to produce distinctively unfriendly relations with the insurgents.

Not only the ordinary natives but especially those of influence and position in the pueblos who manifestly and openly cultivate friendly relations with the Americans will be regarded with particular suspicion, since by the announced policy of the insurgent government their ablest and most staunch friends or those who are capable of most skillfully practicing duplicity are selected and directed to cultivate the friendship of American officers, so as to obtain their confidence.

* * * * * * *

Neutrality must not be tolerated on the part of any native. The time has now arrived when all natives in this brigade who are not openly for us must be regarded as against us. In short, if not an active friend he is an open enemy.

Mr. President, turning to a report made February 13, 1902, from the headquarters of Sixth Separate Brigade at Tacloban, Leyte, in the Visayan district, we have this language:

This, in outline, is "the policy" to be pursued henceforth. A few details are worked out in the following paragraphs, but all concerned are informed that any actions on their part conceived and executed in the general spirit of "the policy" outlined above will be approved and commended by the brigade commander.

Mr. RAWLINS. I read from page 1578.

Mr. HOAR. Did the Senator state at what time that reached Washington?

Mr. RAWLINS. I am unable to state what time it reached Washington. There is a date at the end of it, "War Department, Adjutant-General's Office, April 15, 1902." That may be the date; I do not know.

Commanding officers of all stations will notify all natives living near them that for their protection they will move to within certain prescribed limits, and that so long as they remain peaceful will be afforded all opportunities to obtain food and other necessities. They will in general be paid for all labor and any assistance they are called upon to render the United States forces, and will not be disturbed in their affairs so long as they observe the requirements of loyalty to the United States Government.

Continuing:

As long as the war still actively exists, it is not necessary to seek or wait for authority from these headquarters to do anything or take any action which will contribute to its termination. It is desired that all battalion commanders give their subordinate officers a degree of confidence and latitude in operation such as is accorded to them by the brigade commander. Such restraint and supervision only should be exercised as is dictated by sound discretion, and as may be essential to securing concert of action and cooperation when desirable, adherence to authorized methods, and a uniform policy and harmonious action in working for a common end. Subordinate commanders and young officers of experience should not be restrained or discouraged without excellent reasons, but should be encouraged to hunt for, pursue, and vigorously operate against armed bodies of insurgents wherever they may be found.

The only point of that is to show the latitude that was allowed, and the virtual direction therein contained that civilized rules of warfare were no longer to prevail without expressly so directing. There you read between the lines of these clauses the policy that civilized warfare, as expressed in the testimony of General Hughes, would be abandoned against these people, because he claims they were uncivilized people many things could be done; villages, innocent so far as any proof against them was concerned, were to be destroyed in order that, if possible, some insurrecto might thereby be punished; and by punishing the women and children, they might reach more effectively the sensitive regard for them of their husbands and parents.

On December 13, 1901, this official report was made, dated Batangas, P. I., and addressed "To all station commanders:"

The brigade commander therefore announces for the information of all concerned that wherever prisoners or unarmed or defenseless Americans or natives friendly to the United States Government are murdered or assassinated for political reasons, and this fact can be established, it is his purpose to execute a prisoner of war under the authority contained in sections 59 and 148. This prisoner of war will be selected by lot from among the officers or prominent citizens held as prisoners of war, and will be chosen when practicable from those who belong to the town where the murder or assassination occurred.

Mr. President, just analyze that for a moment, and think of it. If in any town anywhere anybody commits one of the crimes there designated, it is made the excuse for selecting, if they have any such in custody, a person from the town where the crime has been committed, whether he had any connection, even the remotest, or any relationship in the slightest degree with the culprit who committed the crime, he was to be taken out by some method of chance and shot to death as an evidence of the justice and the benignity of the government of occupation under the American flag! That is the proclamation issued by General Smith. If they do not at the time happen to have a prisoner in custody—and I suppose prisoners were scarce among them, although we have a report that in the year 1901 50 were taken in this district—if they did not happen to have in their custody at the time they desired to apply this law of retaliation some native from the village or the town where the offense was committed, they went to some other town or to some other village and by a death raffle selected some other person to be taken out and to be shot. Strange that these things could appear upon the official records, as they do.

But I read from the same directions, given by General Chaffee, dated Manila, Headquarters Division of the Philippine Islands, September 30, 1901:

HEADQUARTERS DIVISION OF THE PHILIPPINES,
Manila, P. I., September 30, 1901.

MY DEAR GENERAL HUGHES: I inclose to you a copy of the indorsement made by me on your letter of September 10, in which you refer to discharges from the First and Ninth Infantry.

Then he refers to certain things which are not material to my purpose. At the bottom of page 1591 I read this language from these instructions:

The condition of mind of officers and men in these islands is largely in error, and they must be given to understand that they are in error; by which I mean their opinion is that the people are far more friendly than they really are, and that they are satisfied with our presence among them. In a considerable sense this may be true; women and children are probably friendly toward us, but as a rule I would not trust 50 per cent of the male population and they must not be trusted. It is our duty to suspicion every male inhabitant in these islands, and the proof of any error in this regard must rest with them, not so much in words as by action, which can not be misunderstood.

I reiterate:

It is our duty to suspicion every male inhabitant in these islands, and the proof of any error in this regard must rest with them, not so much in words as by action, which can not be misunderstood.

This order was dated September 30, 1901. The commanding general of our Army thus—whether based upon correct or incorrect information it is not for me to presume to say—sets up a new standard, new at least to the Anglo-Saxon mind, accustomed to the beneficent presumption of the common law, that every man, without exception, in the Philippine Islands is presumed to be under suspicion, and that word "suspicion" ought perhaps to receive some analysis until it is proven by the party suspected by acts and not by words that the suspicion should not attach to him.

We read something about the law of suspects enacted during the bloody reign of the French Revolution and the long category of things which constituted a person a suspect under the law of suspects, with consequences fatal to the persons who were thus under suspicion, and the bloody code thus enacted, known as the law of suspects, bears a very striking resemblance to this law of suspects as announced by the commanding general of our Army in the Philippines. I will read a little further at the top of page 1592 of General Chaffee's instructions to General Hughes:

While I do not urge inhuman treatment of any person in these islands, it is necessary that we be stern and inflexible, and both officers and men must be cordially supported in their duty in this regard. There is one thing necessary, and that is the wholesome fear by these people of the Army, and that every hostile motion of any inhabitant toward the troops will be quickly and severely punished. This does not interfere at all with our cordial support of the civil authority in these islands; on the contrary, it is the very best aid that we can afford for the establishment of civil government.

I have all the time thought that we do not appreciate the fact that we are dealing with a class of people whose character is deceitful, who are absolutely hostile to the white race, and who regard life as of little value, and, finally, who will not submit to our control until absolutely defeated and whipped into such a condition. It is to our interest to disarm these people and to keep them disarmed, and any means to that end is advisable. It will probably cost us a hundred lives to get back the guns lost at Balangiga.

"Any means to that end is advisable."

What becomes of your rules of civilized warfare? Why does the Secretary of War send to us that catalogue of direction in regard to methods of civilized warfare when the commanding general of our armies in his instructions to his subordinates says they must be disregarded and any means looking to the end stated here are to be approved and commended; and, as I have already read, that absolute and unqualified discretion was remitted to these subordinate commanders and that that authorization emanated from the highest source of military command in the islands?

Mr. CARMACK. If the Senator will permit me, I wish to call attention to the peculiarity of the langage used in the order, where the General says, "I do not urge inhuman conduct." It struck me as a very peculiar expression to be used. It seems to me he ought to have said, "I forbid inhuman conduct." It struck me, when the Senator read it, as a very peculiar expression—"I do not urge inhuman conduct."

Mr. RAWLINS. That is to be interpreted in accordance with the rule of grammar that two negatives make an affirmative. It was intended to convey to those to whom the instructions were issued that they were left to practice with impunity, without disapproval, inhuman conduct in the districts over which they presided. That is the only intelligent and reasonable interpretation which can be put upon it.

Mr. CARMACK. Undoubtedly.

Mr. RAWLINS. And, of course, the facts which I have already presented and which may still further be presented afford ample warrant for the belief that those subordinate commanders put that very interpretation upon it, and for that reason, with the direct approval of the highest military officer in the islands, practiced the most inhuman conduct of which the mind can conceive.

Mr. President, I read briefly from a report made by Maj. L. W. T. Waller, major, United States Marine Corps, commanding, dated Basey, Samar, P. I., November 23, 1901, in which he says:

I wish to recommend especially Capts. D. D. Porter and H. I. Bearss, either a medal of honor or a brevet. These officers carried out their instructions in the face of hardships, dangers, and incredible obstacles. Not only was personal courage of a high order displayed, but intelligence, determination, and zeal. Each footstep in the advance up the cliffs carried its own dangers.

And continuing in his work of commendation.

I read next from headquarters Sixth Brigade, Tacloban, November 29, 1901. This memorandum respectfully forwards to the adjutant-general Division of the Philippines the communication of Major Waller. Referring to the same matter, that part of it, this is forwarded by Jacob H. Smith, brigadier-general, United States Army, commanding, with this recommendation:

Maj. L. W. T. Waller, United States Marine Corps, now brevet lieutenant-colonel, has proven himself to be an officer of exceptional merit and carries out my wishes and instructions loyally and gallantly. He deserves another brevet for his services thus far, and I urge this recognition; also a general order from division commander congratulating him and the Marine Corps of his command.

I concur in his recommendations of following officers and men:

For brevets of major, United States Marine Corps: Capt. D. D. Porter; Capt. H. I. Bearss.

What had Waller and these men done? Waller makes a detailed report of his proceedings. Subsequently he was arrested and tried. He said that Smith had given him certain directions, to make of Samar a howling wilderness and to spare no one above the age of 10 years. He shot his prisoners with methods of extreme torture and cruelty. They were selected by lot. The defense of Major Waller was that he had complied with the orders of his superior commander, and he was promoted for complying with the orders of his superior commander; and the reason for such promotion was that with "exceptional merit he carries out my wishes and instructions loyally and gallantly." You will notice he carries out even his wishes and not merely his instructions. In the same court-martial the same Major Waller, thus commended, testified as to the character of his instructions, and in that testimony he was corroborated, as the official report of the War Department shows, by Captain Porter and Captain Bearss, who were also commended for promotion and received promotion for meritorious conduct.

Mr. President, I have been dealing with what is known as the Visayan district. If we had a map before us we would find it intermediate, practically, between Luzon and Mindanao. It is not upon the island of Luzon. It is to the south of it. It covers that part of the Philippine Archipelago occupied by what are known as the Visayans, of whom there are about 3,000,000. If I may be permitted to sum up the situation of affairs there, we have seen the villages burned without excuse; we have found methods of torture employed for the purpose of compelling the giving of information. The witnesses who thus testified not only gave the facts coming within their immediate knowledge and observation, but stated the repute that those things were equally prevalent in places elsewhere to which their observations did not extend.

We know it was reputed to have been done not only in this part of the islands, but throughout the archipelago wherever our army penetrated, and we can imagine the result of this kind of operation in those islands. Of course the people there could not love the hand that smote them, and I think General Chaffee was right when he said that every man capable of feeling the sentiments of indignation could not but be an enemy of the United States. It was the inevitable and necessary logic of the situation.

What race of people under the sun would love a government that would inflict upon them such cruelties, such injustice, such death and desolation? What man fit to exist upon the face of the earth would not feel to the depths of his soul that if he had the power he would wreak vengeance upon the heads of those who had practiced cruelties and barbarism as if their reason had fled to brutish beasts, nothing surpassing it in all the history of darkness and barbarism of which we have any accounts? Of course Chaffee was right—that those people were universally, without exception, enemies to American rule; and those who think otherwise are grievously mistaken. This commander, General Chaffee, knew that not only as to the Visayan district, but as to every other district in the islands.

I know not whether this policy which he outlines was conceived by him. I am unable to fix the responsible head from whom emanated these barbarities, which would disgrace the annals of even a semicivilized country, not to speak of the nation which claims to hold aloft the escutcheon of honor and justice and fair dealing.

Mr. President, having there a people who, by reason of our injustice and wrong, feel in their souls an undying enmity and hostility to our rule, they will never submit. They will struggle to the point of their own extermination. If our dominion is to be established there, General Chaffee doubtless knows that the only logical theory which would be effectual in its execution would be the extermination of the people, making the land a howling wilderness, and taking the lives of all who would retain a memory of the wrongs which were inflicted upon their race of people. Hence the fixed limit of ten years. Those beneath that age would forget the wrong and in the end might possibly be schooled into some measure of respect for the cruel practice which had destroyed the lives of their people.

Oh, my God! that is the logic upon which Chaffee based the brutal orders and instructions which he issued to his subordinate commanders. Did Chaffee, alone, unaided, in coldness, and in brutality and in savage and unrelenting disregard of every humane sentiment or possibility of human suffering, conceive this iniquitous scheme? Whence, from what diabolical source was it derived? The American people ought to know. Is there any penalty beneath the sun adequate to be meted out to the merciless wretch who has thus brought such dishonor upon the American name and the American people?

But, Mr. President, this is but one phase of the tragedy. The Visayan district is a little more remote from the headquarters of the Army of the Philippine Islands. The magnanimity of our dealings with those people seems to be augmented in direct ratio as we depart from that center, and as we converge to it we find things more unspeakable than even those to which I have been able thus far to make allusion. I refer to the territory immediately around the city of Manila, almost within gunshot of it, extending into Batangas and Laguna and Tayabas. In Luzon what do we find? I invite the attention of the Senate to a report dated December 16, 1901, to the civil governor of the Philippine Islands from Cornelius Gardener, who was made major of the Third Infantry United States Army and provincial governor of Tayabas. On page 884 of the hearings he uses this language:

Since I have been governor I have traveled all over this province with no other escort than natives. Secondly, as civil governor I feel it my duty to say that it is my firm conviction that the United States troops should, at the earliest opportunity, be concentrated in one or two garrisons, if it is thought desirable that the good sentiment and loyalty which formerly existed to the United States Government among the people of this province should be conserved and encouraged.

Being in close touch with the people, having visited all the pueblos one or more times, having lived with them in their homes, I know that such a sentiment once existed. Of late, by reason of the conduct of the troops, such as the extensive burning of barrios in trying to lay waste the country so that the insurgents can not occupy it, the torturing of natives by so-called "water cure" and other methods in order to obtain information, the harsh treatment of natives generally, and the failure of inexperienced, lately appointed lieutenants commanding posts to distinguish between those who are friendly and those unfriendly and treating every native as if he were, whether or no, an insurrecto at heart, this favorable sentiment above referred to is being fast destroyed and a deep hatred toward us engendered. If these things need be done, they had best be done by native troops, so that the people of the United States will not be credited therewith.

Almost without exception soldiers, and also many officers refer to the natives in their presence as "niggers," and the natives are beginning to understand what the word "nigger" means.

Note the words:

If these things need to be done, they had best be done by native troops, so that the people of the United States will not be credited therewith.

This officer still has some regard for the honor and good name of his country. Continuing, on page 885 he says:

The attitude of the Army, thereby meaning most of its officers and soldiers, is, however, decidedly hostile to the provincial and municipal government in this province and to civil government in these islands in general. In Manila especially it is intensely so, even among the higher officers. The work of the Commission in the establishment of provincial governments is ridiculed, even in presence of the natives. It is openly stated that the Army should remain in charge for the next twenty years.

Note this:

Outrages committed by officers and soldiers against natives in an organized municipality and province, when reported by the presidente or governor to the military authorities, are often not punished. This, in my opinion, is unfortunate, because loyal natives begin to fear that local self-government promised them will not last long, and that any slight disturbance in a province may at any time be made the pretext to again place it under military rule, and this is just the thing the insurgents at heart most desire.

Mr. President, in this connection I ought to allude to the fact that this report was in the hands of Governor Taft when he testified before the Philippines Committee that Tayabas was one of the provinces included in the list of what are known as pacified provinces. Governor Taft said that he would lay before the committee all the reports which he had received from the provincial governments of such provinces, but he did not lay before the committee this one report. He carried it to the Secretary of War. He continued to testify for some ten days after the 7th of February, when he thus carried this report away and lodged it with the Secretary.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] was enabled to rise and point to the reports of the governors—all the reports from the governors that we then had—in proof of the proposition he made that the islands were indeed pacified and were content with American rule. We finally got this. How? General Miles made a request that he be permitted to go to the islands to see if he could not bring order out of chaos, and when his proposition failed to receive the approval of the Administration, and the correspondence in relation to that subject having been directed to be sent to Congress, it became necessary to lay it before Congress, and the Secretary of War, in explanation of the refusal to adopt Miles's plan, said it was spectacular. That made it necessary for Miles, in honor, to disclose the basis upon which he had made the suggestions he did to the President and the Secretary of War. He incidentally alluded to this report of the governor of Tayabas, which had come under his observation, giving the date of it.

Thereupon my colleague upon the committee, the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], invited attention to the fact that one of the reports had been withheld and insisted that the Secretary of War furnish it to the committee in order that we might have complete information. Then only was this dragged forth from the seclusion which it had occupied from the time Governor Taft had received it, and when it should have been laid before the committee seeking to ascertain the whole truth about this matter. Why was this information, officially given and important to the Congress and to the American people in order that they might appreciate the real situation in the island, thus withheld?

The excuse was that it should be sent to General Chaffee in order that they might investigate it. What kind of an investigation would the very men who are the subjects of the accusations contained in the report make of their own conduct, and what kind of a report would they necessarily make to the Secretary of War and to the American people? You might as well convert the culprit arraigned at the bar of justice into the jury and judge to try himself, with the expectation of getting any result in the way of ascertaining the truth, as to refer this report, making charges against the army in the Philippines, to the determination of the army itself. I have no doubt that in due time we will receive the result of this investigation, and that the charges made by Governor Gardener will be denounced as untrue, just as we find the report in the case of Sergeant Reilly and others in regard to the water cure.

Mr. President, I next invite attention to another report, dated December 18, 1901, which was not laid before the Committee on the Philippines until long subsequent, and it was dragged out also before us at the same time that the report from the province of Tayabas was. The only difference between these two reports is that the one from Batangas was not specifically promised in his testimony by Governor Taft, while the other was. Why was it withheld? Not that it contained any facts that the American people should not know; not that there is anything which could not safely be intrusted to the American Congress, undertaking to deal by legislation with every interest in the islands; not that there is any reason on earth why we should not be possessed of the facts therein reported. Mr. President, no such excuse as that can prevail with those who are desirous of knowing fully and fairly what pertains to this archipelago. Let us see what it says.

OFFICE OF THE PROVINCIAL SECRETARY,
Batdngas, P. I., December 18, 1901.

HON. CIVIL GOVERNOR,
Manila, P. I.

SIR: Pursuant to section 7, last paragraph, of the provincial government act No. 83, and in compliance with your excellency's telegram dated day before yesterday, I have the honor to report to your excellency that the conditions of the province during the present year can not be more deplorable.

The mortality, caused no longer by the war, but by disease, such as malaria and dysentery, has reduced to a little over 200,000 the more than 300,000 inhabitants which in former years the province had.

All the highways and wagon roads and bridle paths are almost impassable, even for cavalry, in the wet season, except in a few places where they have been repaired by the military.

Working animals have been decimated by the epizootic (rinderpest); agriculture, the province's only source of wealth, is entirely prostrated, and as a climax to all these events, the war, with all its fatal results.

Continuing, on page 888, after alluding to some incidental matters which I will not take the time to read, the governor says:

After all, I foresee the coming of famine with all its horrible consequences. It is true that during the coming year, in so far as the resources of the province will permit, the famine referred to may be partly remedied by giving work to the poor in the repair of roads, construction of bridges, and opening of means of communication between the pueblos. These resources shall become exhausted—as they will undoubtedly—since agriculture is dead, owing to the lack of working animals, which has been general throughout the archipelago. Famine must reign in this province in the coming years, and God grant that it may not be for a long time.

This is all I can report to your excellency.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

FLORENCIO R. CAEDO, Provincial Secretary.

That is dated the 18th day of December, 1901; and I want the vision of Senators to rest upon the picture thus presented, because it is to be the field in relation to which I am about to present some observations which I think ought to interest and concern at least humane and justice-loving men and women.

More than 300,000 people, for the reasons given, were reduced to about 200,000. One-third of the population of Batangas had thus perished from the face of the earth. Their draft animals, the means by which they carry on agriculture, have been swept away by disease. Their land has been swept by war and by pestilence. No such calamity, perhaps, ever befell a people as is disclosed in this report as having befallen the people of Batangas.

Mr. President, if we are to take this one province as an example it looks as if things most pernicious and evil followed in the trail of the occupation of that land by the American troops. When we appeared it was as if a tornado swept the land. Even the winds were venomous. The vapors became the poisoned vehicle of the wrath of the Almighty. Death lived and Life died.

Mr. President, we leave these people for the time being, on the 18th day of December, confronted with every prospect of famine. I have already read the direction of General Chaffee. I invite attention to an order issued on the 9th day of December, 1901, to all station commanders by Gen. John F. Bell, brigadier-general, commanding the province of Batangas:

Commanding officers are urged and enjoined—

Says this officer—

to use their discretion freely in adopting any or all measures of warfare authorized by this order, which will contribute in their judgment, toward enforcing the policy or accomplishing the purpose above announced.

Further on, at page 1609:

No person should be given credit for loyalty simply because he takes the oath of allegiance or secretly conveys to Americans worthless information and idle rumors which result in nothing. Those who publicly guide our troops to the camps of the enemy, who publicly identify insurgents, who accompany troops in operations against the enemy, who denounce and assist in arresting the secret enemies of the Government, who publicly obtain and bring reliable and valuable information to commanding officers—those, in fact, who publicly array themselves against the insurgents, and for Americans, should be trusted and given credit for loyalty, but no others. No person should be given credit for loyalty solely on account of his having done nothing for or against us so far as known. Neutrality should not be tolerated. Every inhabitant of this brigade should either be an active friend or be classed as an enemy.

Presidentes and chiefs of police against whom sufficient evidence can be found to convict them before a court of violating their oaths by acting as agents for insurgents, or by aiding, assisting, or protecting them in any way—should be arrested and confined, and should ordinarily be tried by military commission.

That order was to apply to a people one-third of whose inhabitants had perished from the face of the earth, and the remainder of whom were confronted by starvation and probably all by extinction.

I next read an order by General Bell to all station commanders, dated Batangas, December 23, 1901.

Mr. RAWLINS. On page 1621. Note this language:

All commanding officers in the provinces of Batangas and Laguna are warned against beginning to issue food gratuitously until want and privation absolutely necessitate it. Whenever Government stores of rice are held it is best to preserve the same until the current supply in the town has been used up at regulated prices; then the Government rice may be sold at the same regulated prices to those who are able to buy it. Many of the very poor people who have no food nevertheless have money with which they can buy it, and none should be issued gratuitously until it has been thoroughly determined by a searching investigation that the individuals applying for charity have no means with which to purchase food.

The governor's report was on the 16th. This was on the 23d, seven days afterwards. Put those two statements in juxtaposition. But that is not the worst of it, because under these orders the food which remained to these starving people in Batangas was taken and seized by the Army, and the people were to buy the food which had thus been seized, and the very poor were not to receive a morsel, unless they paid for it, until after a most rigid investigation it was ascertained that they were starving and that they could not pay for it. How long in the red tape of the Army a man would have to starve while waiting upon the investigation which decided his fate (all that he possessed had been seized by the military power, and it was but a pittance), we are not informed by any of these official reports concerning the military occupation in these islands. On the same date another——

Mr. BURROWS. If the Senator will allow me, does he not think that he ought to read a little further on page 1621, as showing the reason why food should not be liberally issued?

Mr. RAWLINS. I will read the whole of it:

Such persons, with the membership of their families, will be carefully registered and will be issued very limited supplies of food at frequent periods, preferably daily. In issuing rice each adult member of a family will be allowed one chupa per day, and the same amount to each two children. A chupa measure can be found in any retail shop. Great pains will be taken not to unduly pauperize the people, for if the people discover any unwise or excessive liberality in the free issue of food the entire population (excepting the rich and well-to-do) will certainly flock around and claim to be paupers in order to obtain free issues of food. All officers should carefully husband their supplies in anticipation of a period of real want and suffering.

Wherever there are standing crops still ungathered, it is desired that commanding officers give protection to peaceful people in order to enable them to gather their palay. It is also desired that whenever conditions become favorable for the planting of new food crops commanding officers likewise give protection and such assistance as may be practicable to those who have gathered at towns seeking our protection, in order that they may replant their land.

What he means by peaceful people we have already understood. The presumption is that every person in the islands is an enemy and is against peace until the contrary is shown, according to the methods of General Bell. What the General means when he says "all officers should carefully husband their supplies in anticipation of a period of real want and suffering" is past all comprehension, when nine days before we have a report from that island to the effect that in the past short period one-third of the population had perished by starvation and malaria, that they were then confronted with a condition of starvation, and that he did not know what was going to happen to them on account of the scarcity of food. Here we have the military commander taking control of everything and enjoining care that no excessive issues be made to these people lest it might encourage pauperism.

But, Mr. President, let me proceed to read an order issued by this same commander, dated at Batangas, December 24, to all station commanders.

Mr. BURROWS. On what page?

Mr. RAWLINS. On page 623. I read at the top of the page, from an order by this same commander, the following language:

It is not intended by this circular to deprive station commanders of discretion, but it is desired that under its provisions they assume an advanced and stringent policy and maintain it relentlessly.

Think of the significance of that and what it implies! Rules relating to civilized warfare are obsolete. Unlimited discretion is given to station commanders to carry out their own judgment and to carry it out relentlessly. With everything in the province already facing starvation, already decimated to the extent of one-third of its number, with all its draft animals perished from the face of the earth, they are now to be made to understand the beneficence of American rule.

The next day did the general relent? This was on the 23d. On the following day, December 24, from the same station he conceived something else. What is it? Omitting the premise, he says:

First. Until the reestablishment of civil government and the making of provisions thereby for the repair of roads and performance of other public work, the old Spanish law requiring either fifteen days' free labor or three pesos tax in lieu thereof may be enforced and road work be begun as soon as it is practicable or safe to do so. Station commanders will see that engineer officers in charge of road construction are furnished free labor, and the money collected pursuant to this provision will be used to purchase rice for those who labor. Wherever no engineer officer is at work and there is a piece of road needing repair, station commanders will, when practicable, detail an officer to supervise the repairs and put the people to work, and will furnish the officer so detailed with sufficient assistance of soldiers and noncommissioned officers to give protection to and require those working to labor faithfully and intelligently.

These starving people, with their emaciated forms, unable to lift up their heads, were to have their little pittance wrested from them; and they were to be dragged out, without any reason on earth, on the high roads and made to work, and to work faithfully and intelligently. They were to work until they starved. They were to make bricks without straw. They were to be the victims of an inhuman policy that would startle even an Alaric or an Attila.

But he had not conceived everything of iniquity and cruelty yet to be applied. The same day, but a little later, I suppose, he thinks of something else. Those people, already on the road to perdition, were to be sent into a condition where the tortures of the damned would be supreme and superlative happiness compared with what they would be called upon to endure. On the same date, the 24th of December, 1901, ten days after, we are informed officially of the state of starvation of these people. We find the following:

First. Presidentes and cabezas will be required to notify the nearest military commander at once whenever insurgents are discovered to be within the limits of their jurisdiction. For any failure in this regard they will be tried and punished by provost court. In addition to this punishment, any presidente or cabeza discovered to be concealing or protecting the enemy or furnishing false information or guides may be impressed as guides themselves and may be marched on foot daily at the head of columns or detachments until they have had a drastic lesson.

Second. Should the inhabitants of any town fail or refuse to furnish sacati or wood, and there being no assignable reason for said failure or refusal apparent to commanding officers, said failure or refusal may, without great danger of error, be attributed to the influence or threats of disloyal principales or officials. In such a contingency commanding officers may arrest principales and officials believed to be disloyal and, joining them with insurgent officers and prominent and influential persons held as prisoners of war, march them out under guard and require them to cut and deliver sacati until they are willing to induce the poor people to furnish it for compensation, as usual.

The presumption is against every presidente and every cabeza by these station commanders. They are all enemies and insurgents and traitors to the United States. They must be given a drastic lesson. Why are the principal men of the town, the leading officials, who have done no overt act, to be seized? Then what is to become of them? They are to be dragged out and put in front of the expeditions of the soldiers of the United States, and they are to be marched on daily at the head of the columns or detachments until they have had a drastic lesson.

The query arose in my mind, Why thus put these principal men of these barrios and towns out in front of the marching soldiers of the United States, on foot, to trudge along day after day—these starving people—to be marching every day until they had a drastic lesson or until they fell down and were relieved by death of the torture? This was not, perhaps, a vicarious punishment, for whenever an offense was committed anywhere by any man who was so unfortunate as to have become a prisoner of the American troops he was to be taken out and shot to death in Batangas; and now we find that people who had not offended, whose only offense at least was neutrality and inaction—that they did not go out to aid their compatriots and people of their own race—were to be seized and placed at the head of the expedition of the soldiers of the United States, perhaps as a shield to receive the shot and fire of their compatriots, and thus screen the American soldiers from the peril with which otherwise they might be confronted.

My God, Senators, will anyone rise and tell me when and where among the most barbaric peoples you ever read such an act of brutality as that? When was anything like that disclosed elsewhere upon the face of the earth? Just think of General Grant taking people in the South who remained neutral, in so far as they did not engage in actual hostilities against the American troops, and seizing them and placing them in front of the armies of the United States as a shield to protect them and to receive the shots of those who were seeking to defend what they conceived to be the right! But there in the Philippine Islands, great God, what right have we to practice these brutalities against those people? What crime have they ever committed against us that they should be afflicted with the tortures of the fiend incarnate?

Why, Mr. President, such wrongs to those people whom we had called to our side, with weapons furnished to them by us, and who had marched against the common enemy, whom they had learned to believe was the enemy to the human race by reason of its ancient practice of cruelty and oppression, when they had assisted us and had brought about a glorious victory to the American arms and to the American people for the sake of humanity and liberty—we turned traitor to them; we demanded their unconditional surrender; we shut the gates of their own city against them; we turned our arms against them without any pretense or excuse or justification; we mowed them down with horrible slaughter; we swept them away as with the besom of destruction; we paralyzed them and rendered them helpless. They had nothing in their possession with which longer to indulge in the luxury of protection to their homes, their lives, and their fortunes. We decimated them until one-third of them had fallen and gone into the dust, and over whom we still trample without mercy and without humanity.

Now these people are to be subjected to tortures, to cruelties unspeakable and beyond the power of human tongue to describe, and all in the name of civilization, all in the name of justice, all to uphold the glory and the prestige of American arms and to strike terror to all the helpless peoples in the world and make them believe that the American people are in reality a great and honorable nation. If there is a God in heaven, dispensing justice and right, what penalties must come to us by reason of these infractions of all rules both human and divine.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. RAWLINS. Certainly.

Mr. BURROWS. The Senator omitted, on page 1623, to read that portion of the order requiring these parties to work on the highways, which reads as follows:

The object of this provision is to give beneficial occupation to the able-bodied men concentrated in towns and to compel them to earn food for themselves and their families.

I suppose it was an inadvertence on the part of the Senator that he did not read this portion of the order, but it ought to go into the RECORD to make the story complete.

Mr. RAWLINS. I am very glad to have the Senator read that or anything else which he wishes to read in that connection.

Mr. BURROWS. With the permission of the Senator, then, I want to call his attention to an omission in another instance. I ask the Senator on what page it was that he was reading the statement in regard to the population being reduced from 300,000 to 200,000.

Mr. RAWLINS. Is that some other horrible detail which the Senator has discovered?

Mr. BURROWS. No; the same one to which the Senator alluded.

Mr. RAWLINS. That was on page 1571.

Mr. BURROWS. The Senator omitted a little thing that ought to go in on page 1571.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I ask permission of the Chair to be allowed to address the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BURROWS. Certainly.

Mr. PETTUS. I want to know if the Senator from Michigan, in what he has just read, is proposing to justify or excuse the order in question?

Mr. BURROWS. I propose only to give the reasons assigned by the officer for this order. As to the picture of the wiping out of the 100,000 people, the Senator will notice that it was all occasioned by disease and not by war. But further on in that report from the governor, I think the Senator ought to have read—of course he did not have time to read the whole of it—this statement:

The committees of the Federal party having been created in the pueblos of the province since February last, civil rule having been inaugurated and established since the May following, and the pueblos having been organized into municipalities pursuant to the existing municipal code, with the exception of Cuenta, Taysan, and Rosario, all of us who were lovers of peace and order hoped that those who were still in arms would surrender and recognize American sovereignty, in order to enjoy the benefits of that rule with us. But the revolutionary leaders, miserably deceived by the revolutionary committee of Hongkong, and all of them, down to the last private, being the rulers over the life and property of the poor farmers who live outside the immediate protection of the American forces, have wished to remain in arms, for if they surrender the greater part will become vagrants, accustomed as they are to living at the expense of others.

Nevertheless, through the efficient measures which the illustrious General Bell is beginning to take, such as the blockade of the ports of this province and the prohibition of all trade, it is to be hoped that within a short time the desired peace may be secured; all the more since all the pueblos are clamoring for it and willing to lend their valuable assistance to its securement.

I think that, perhaps, should go in with the picture which the Senator gave to us.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, that which has just been read by the Senator from Michigan, entirely agreeably to me, did not very pertinently pertain to the point which I was discussing; but as I shall have occasion to allude to it for another purpose presently, I am very much obliged to the Senator for putting it in the RECORD and relieving me from the necessity of doing so.

But I might as well allude to the purpose which I had to refer again to that matter in logical connection, which was that that governor reported that in many of the barrios among many of the people of this province of Batangas there was a disposition and a desire on their part to be subordinate to American rule and to conform in every way to the requirements of the civil government throughout the islands; and that, notwithstanding such appeared to be the condition as reported in this document which the Senator has read, as soon as the distinguished general, whom he has referred to, appeared upon the field he issued an order, under the direction of the commanding general of the islands, that every one of those people, including perhaps the very man who made this report, was to be presumed conclusively as a traitor to the United States until he had, by the methods pointed out, proved his loyalty by engaging in the destruction of his own people, by turning spy and informer against them, and cooperating with the American troops in carrying out the methods of warfare which were outlined in those orders to which I have invited the attention of the Senate.

But, Mr. President, some of the people did not conform to what this particular civil officer, in the pay of the United States, thought would be the proper policy for them to pursue. They could not see it in the light that they should go out and shoot down their brethren, their relatives, and their friends; they could not see it as a criterion of fitness to occupy any position as a civilized people if they thus tamely submitted to the requirements of these orders issued by our military commanders. I think there is not a Senator upon the other side of the Chamber who in his heart can not but feel more respect for them than he would feel for the men who would, under the drastic penalties denounced against those who acted to the contrary, submit to them and go out and fight against their own people and shoot down their own relatives and their own friends.

Mr. President, I was diverted somewhat from the line of argument I was pursuing. I was reading, I believe, from page 1625 of the hearings before the Committee on the Philippines. I will read further from the same order on page 1626, and I want the attention of Senators to this, because we all will be interested in it, and it is pertinent to the suggestion made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] in that part of the report which he read for my convenience. This is an order of General Bell, dated December 24, 1901:

Fifth. All officers will exact respect for the American flag and for officers and bodies of troops as representatives of the great nation to which they pertain. It has resulted from the lenient policy which the Government has heretofore pursued that the people of these islands look down upon the representatives of the Government to such an extent as to pass by them and their flag with sullen disdain. Hereafter all natives of this brigade, irrespective of standing, will be required to show that respect which is due from the people to the Government of occupation.

We had the testimony of Governor Taft and Major Gardener and other witnesses before the Philippine Committee, to which the Senator from Michigan alluded, as to how Macabebe scouts, under the direction of American officers, spent their nights and days seizing unoffending people, throwing them down upon their backs, prying open their mouths, filling them with water, and torturing many of them to the death. We have seen how Bell had commanded these people to be marched at the head of the expedition on foot day after day to give them a drastic lesson. We know that by reason of our occupation, and the pestilence which ensued as an incident of it, one out of three of their number had perished from the face of the earth, and that, as a necessary consequence, starvation threatened the lives of the rest. This military commander was surprised and indignant that these people should pass by with sullen silence the men who were the authors of their misfortunes and not pay to the army of occupation that respect which they in their character felt themselves entitled to. He says:

Hereafter all natives of this brigade, irrespective of standing, will be required to show that respect which is due from the people to the government of occupation.

The poor, hungry little child, trudging along, if it were able to walk, and the mother seeing her offspring perishing of pestilence and disease and starvation, and looking into the face of the cruel author of her misfortune, the father dragged away from those he loved and put in front of the expedition to march day after day till he had received the drastic lesson, and to operate as a shield for the protection of the American troops and to receive the bullets from his compatriots in arms—those people who were enslaved by the order of this commander and made to work upon the roads in order that they might earn a pittance of food, such as is specified, but that food not to be in excess—this military commander says that these people, now having drunk the bitter dregs to the utmost, are to be compelled to pay respect to the cruel authors of it all.

Mr. CARMACK. Who is that?

Mr. RAWLINS. J. F. Bell. Mr. President, I do not believe that Bell himself ever conceived this iniquity; this outline of policy. Perhaps it may have been Chaffee, who received his education in savagery and in cruelty and in barbarity over in China, where we are informed the allied forces took little children and brained them upon posts, threw them into rivers, and slaughtered and persecuted without mercy and without limit helpless women. After he had received that training, he superseded the more humane officer, General MacArthur. Then it was that this diabolical programme seems to have been adopted and carried out in all its hideousness and rigor.

I fear, Mr. President, that there has grown up in our midst a little cabal, a coterie of military upstarts and parvenues, all unconsciously to the great, broad-minded, humane people constituting the American Republic, within gunshot almost of where I now speak, who are the authors of all these things, and upon whom the responsibility of these iniquities ought justly to be made to rest. I am loath to hold up to criticism the men who take their lives in their hands and go out and fight the battles of the Republic, who are willing to take upon themselves those responsibilities which may end only in death or in honor; I am unwilling, without conclusive proof of the fact, to presume that any one of the men who have gone out and have actually done battle in the Philippine Islands ever conceived this line of policy which has recently been carried out there.

No, Mr. President, it is those who remain secluded, those who practice in insolence, who devise in iniquity, who cabal and scheme to overthrow honorable men, who would deny to Schley the rewards which properly come to a man when he goes out to fight in honesty and in heroism the battles of the Republic—the men who would drag down General Miles, humane and honorable in all his military career, and would place above him some military upstart, who would not by reason of his services ever be commended to the people who love justice and fair dealing—I fear that it must be people of this kind who, for the time being, have seized the reins of military control of our armies in the Philippine Islands, who are the real authors of these infamies which have been there perpetrated.

I commend Senators to read the testimony relating to the various kinds of torture which have been inflicted, but which the time I ought to occupy will not permit me to go into to any great extent. I have already laid before the Senate, in my judgment, sufficient to invite attention to what still remains undisclosed. This is but the premise, the prelude, as to what ought to follow in the course of this discussion. I say to Senators upon the other side that this bill can not pass so long as there is any man who, having looked into these facts, and who has anything to say and desires to say it, will make such a presentation to the American people that they may be advised as to what we are about to do.

It may be that the minds of Senators upon the other side are irrevocably made up; that they are determined to set up a despotism and monarchy, without limit or without qualification; that they propose to turn over to these nine men constituting the Philippine Commission, under the sole supervision of whoever may be the President of the United States, without any sort of qualification or restriction of the absolute power which is conferred upon them as to everything civil, military, and judicial; turning over to them the fate of all the people in that distant land, who are helpless.

It may be, Mr. President, that Senators on the other side have made up their minds to do that, with no effectual relief from any independent judiciary held up to them as a possibility, with no definition of the fate which is to ensue to them in all the years of the future.

Mr. President, notes of warning have been given to us by people who have had opportunities of observation, who have occupied responsible official positions in the islands, members of the first Philippine Commission, and I commend to the attention of the Senate, in conclusion, a few expressions of their opinion. I read from a recent article by Jacob Gould Schurman, in which he uses this language:

The future of the Philippines is an open question. The American people have never passed upon the ultimate destiny of the archipelago. By the terms of the treaty of Paris the Congress of the United States was required to determine the civil rights and political status of the inhabitants; but this obligation Congress has not yet discharged.

* * * * * * *

We are free to stay in the archipelago or to withdraw from it; to incorporate it into the United States of America or to set it up as a sister republic in Asia; to grant independence to the inhabitants or to retain them in forcible subjection.

He further says:

Now, the Filipinos, like other nations, desire good government; but there is something they desire more ardently. A good government imposed upon them by a foreign nation—especially of alien race and different color—is not at all to their taste. They desire to conduct their own government, even if the result seems to us far inferior. In short, they think they have a right to their own country, a right to govern themselves, a right to determine their own destiny. They want, in a word, liberty and independence. You could not find in all the islands a single Filipino who favors colonial dependence on the United States. If the Filipinos come to believe that our jingoes and imperialists represent the mind of the American people, they will, like the Boers, fight till they are annihilated. Our crowning victory would be their utter extinction.

Our assertion of sovereignty is supported at the present time only by the Federal party, who are numerically small, who are held together by the cohesive force of public office, and who, worst of all, are animated by the delusion (which is the foremost plank of their platform) that the Philippine Islands will be admitted, first as a Territory and then as a State, into the American Union. Apart from this exception, which rests on a misapprehension, the Filipinos are opposed to us and unanimously demand independence. Here most of those who talk about Philippine affairs have in the past assumed the colonial policy as a matter of course; but this no Filipino will endure. There some Filipinos support our sovereignty on the understanding that the Philippine Islands are to be a State of the American Union; but this no American will endure. The final resultant of these psychological forces must be Philippine independence.

Again he says:

But whatever be done with them, the civilized and Christianized democracy of Luzon and the Visayas desire independence. They are fairly entitled to it, and, united as they now are, I think they might very soon be safely intrusted with it. In their educated men, as thorough gentlemen as one meets in Europe or America, this democracy of 6,500,000 Christians has its foreordained leaders.'

Such are the intelligent and self-convincing words of the man who was selected by President McKinley to go to the Philippine Islands and deal in the first instance with those people; and in that statement he is confirmed by another member of the commission, Mr. Denby, an ex-minister to China, who uses this language:

No man who knows anything about the Philippines doubts that if Congress were to declare to-day that the Philippines shall be independent as soon as their people are fit to maintain and carry on an independent government the troubles in that distracted region would cease to-morrow. If, therefore, our real and honest purpose is to give autonomy to the islands as soon as the people develop sufficient capacity to govern themselves, the declaration of that purpose should be immediately made. There can be no object in holding it back which is conducive to the general welfare of our country. Congress has forborne to express any opinion on the subject, but many of its members, Republicans and Democrats, have openly declared that we should not hold the islands permanently.

Further on he says:

The minute that we agree that they shall at any period hereafter be independent, that instant we shall institute proceedings to let them go. All this talk about the capacity of the people for self-government is mostly without foundation. They are as capable of self-government as the Cubans are. After having been four years in contact with Americans they will be able to organize and maintain a republican government. But whether they are fully equipped for self-government or not, is no business of ours if they are to be independent.

Mr. President, I read from a man who is commended for his sagacity and his wisdom and intelligence—a Filipino—in regard to what they want. Señor Buencamino, who is the civil-service commissioner of the United States in the Philippine Islands, says:

We hope that the civil governor, Mr. Taft, after having organized the municipalities, provinces, judicial district, supreme court, and everything connected with the judicial power, the public schools, public order, and what refers to revenue and taxation, to have a starting point for the future politics of the country. We hope, we will repeat, that he will give his attention to the organization of the general control of the country, unless he confines himself to waiting for the Congress to resolve what the definitive form of government for the Philippines shall be.

Such is the general anxiety at the present time.

The people are suffering from a great paralysis of their activities—it seems that they exhaust all their strength in making war and afterwards in making peace; they desire a rest.

Now their actual occupation is to work in order to earn money wherewith to recuperate their lost strength. Therefore agriculture, industry, and commerce are recovering life and animation.

Politics seems to even horrify them, and it appears that, Musselman-like, they expect from Congress either the kindness or the rigor of destiny as regards their future fate.

You Senators who are responsible for the character of legislation which will be enacted in regard to the islands ought to pay attention to these words, that they expect from Congress either the kindness or the rigor of destiny as regards their future fate. He says:

Such is the situation of the Philippine people; a very dangerous situation, because its present inertness might be interpreted as a consent to a colonial policy, in which case new insurrections are to be feared, because the people hold in horror the colonial system. I have said this very plainly to the American authorities, in order to be irresponsible for the calamities with which such an uncertain future as that of a colony is pregnant.

In this critical situation I turn my eyes to the America of 1787, to the legitimate heirs of those who drew up the famous Declaration of Independence, the source of your present happiness, greatness, and welfare.

Ah, Mr. President, what do you propose to do? Do you propose to fly in the face of these assertions made by men who are undoubtedly patriotic and who are competent, by reason of having come in contact with that situation, to speak intelligently and wisely?

This bill inaugurates a colonial policy. It sets up a despotism. It provides for exploitations, for spoliations and plunder. It is to be the foundation of new insurrections, new deaths. It means, in all probability, if we are to follow it out in all its consequences, what is implied in the declaration of the former chairman of the Philippine Commission—the extinction of that race of people.

When you have followed to the end the road upon which you are now about to enter, after you have achieved the results which knowingly you thus set out to accomplish, what will they be? An extinct race, who will remain, like the Huron tribe of Indians, as a tradition of history; a race of people who have not wronged us; a race of people indigenous to the soil and the climate in which they live, a climate to which we can not be inured, a land which can not be made the home of our people. You want to exterminate those people—in order to supplant them? No; you never can supplant them. You never will go there for the sake of a home, for the sake of the establishment of a permanent abode. You annihilate those people for revenge, because you do not like them, because their color is different from yours, because they are an alien race, because they have a different religion, because their habits and customs are not your habits and customs.

You want to go there as if you were carrying out the edict of some inscrutable fate, to annihilate a race of men who never have injured us, while we have gone and ruthlessly assaulted them and their institutions. After you have annihilated them, after you have made Samar a howling wilderness, how many will still live in Batangas, one-third of whom had perished in December last? How many will remain in Tayabas or the rest of Luzon? God only knows. We have taken no census upon that subject, and it is not proposed to take any.

But all this is to secure some munificent end. This is in order to advance civilization. This is in order to uplift races of mankind. This is a humane policy. This drastic policy, this severe and uncivilized war is the most humane in the end. Aye, its humanity consists in the extermination of a people, and when they are dead they cease suffering. But some of our people, I think, would follow them into the realms of perdition and keep them there dancing forevermore upon the burning marl of hell. What vengeance do we want to wreak upon them? What benign end do we want to accomplish? Tell me, tell me, you upon the other side, you who say you will not speak on this subject, say who struck you dumb? Why will you not utter a word in the face of this great epoch in the history of our country? Why do you remain silent?

I ask you to speak and tell me what useful and humane purpose you have in now embarking upon this policy. Speak and tell us. Tell the American people. Tell the American people who are moved upon this question in a manner you little dream of. Tell the people who will be called upon to pass on the question whether you are acting upon some principle which is justifiable to your conscience and your God. You will not speak. Then I infer, sir, that this is the inauguration of a scheme of loot and of plunder and of exploitation—another plowing of a ruined Carthage. You have garnered the harvest of death, and now propose to rake the stubblefield of a slaughtered people. If this be not true, disclose what is true, if your motive be not sordid; and if you can justify yourselves, for God's sake do it quickly, because it seems to me we are standing in the presence of an awful tragedy, and that we will reap the whirlwind of misfortune if we do not retrace our steps.

Mr. LODGE. I had intended to move an executive session, but the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] informs me that he is obliged to leave the city on public business on Monday, and he would like, as it is still early, to take advantage of this time to complete the unobjected pension cases on the Calendar. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 24, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, a question of privilege. While I was absent yesterday, my distinguished colleague from New York [Mr. CREAMER]——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to address the House upon any subject?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. On a matter of personal explanation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks how many minutes?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Say three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks three minutes for a personal explanation. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, while I was absent for a moment yesterday, my distinguished colleague from New York [Mr. CREAMER], rising to a personal explanation, called the attention of this House to an article recently published in one of the prominent New York dailies which referred to the failure of Congress to consider the bill for a new post-office in New York City, and in substance charged the Representatives with dereliction of duty in failing to secure a favorable report from the committee on the passage of the bill. In February last the entire delegation waited upon the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and urged in every possible and conceivable way the speedy action of the bill, and the immediate necessity for increased postal facilities, and adequate quarters for our office in New York. To my knowledge the chairman as well as other members of the committee have again and again been appealed to and implored to act upon the bill, but no heed seems to have been given to their request.

The Representatives from New York have not been lacking in interest in this matter. In every way known to the rules, the usages and practice of the House, have they labored to secure the passage of the measure to give New York a post-office commensurate with the needs and demands of this great commercial city. Speaking for myself personally, let me say I attended the conference spoken of by Mr. CREAMER, waited on the chairman of the committee, and urged him to act promptly on the bill.

On March 13, as appears by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date, when in Committee of the Whole we were considering the post-office appropriation bill, I took occasion to address the committee on this subject, and pointed out at length the necessity for a new post-office in the metropolis. I insisted that the post-office there was not a local but a national institute, and read the figures and statistics supplied on my request by the Post-Office Department demonstrating the vastness of the postal business in New York. Those statistics appear in the RECORD.

I find no fault with the impatience of our constituents in New York to obtain a much-needed improvement which will inure to the benefit of the whole country; but it seems to me that after all that has been done and after all the efforts that have been made by the Representatives from New York we have neither been lax nor derelict. I cheerfully join my colleague from New York in insisting that we should not be charged with neglect to secure what so far has been, despite our labors and our protests, unjustly withheld. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

OLEOMARGARINE BILL.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9206 and the Senate amendments thereto.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on the bill H. R. 9206, the oleomargarine bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. OLMSTED in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9206. Unless there are other amendments to be offered to the amendment in the last paragraph that was read, the Clerk will resume the reading of the bill.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, there is a printing error on page 5, line 15. There is a comma inserted after the word "butter." It should be inserted after the words "butter fat."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the change suggested by the gentleman will be made. The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

That "process butter" or "renovated butter" shall be understood to mean a grade of butter produced by mixing, reworking, rechurning in milk or cream, refining, or in any way producing a uniform, purified, or improved product from different lots or parcels of melted or unmelted butter, and in which no acid, alkali, nor chemical, nor any substance whatever has been used for the purpose or intent of deodorizing or removing rancidity therefrom, and to which no substance or substances foreign to pure butter has been added with intent or effect of cheapening cost or increasing weight of same.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I move that line 6 to line 16 be stricken out, as we have already adopted a substitute to that section of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves to strike out the paragraph just read.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That special taxes are imposed as follows:
Manufacturers of process or renovated butter and of adulterated butter shall pay $600 per year, the payment of which shall cover the tax upon the manufacture of both articles. Every person who engages in the production of process or renovated butter or adulterated butter as a business shall be considered to be a manufacturer thereof.

The amendments of the committee were read, as follows:

Line 18, after the word "butter," insert "shall pay $50 per year;" and after the word "and" insert the word "manufacturers;" and strike out all after the word "year," line 20, to and including the word "articles," in line 22.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I move that the Committee recommend that the House concur.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the amendments offered by the Committee on Agriculture. If there be no objection, the amendments will be considered together. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. One moment. This is an amendment of the Committee on Agriculture to the Senate amendment, and I suppose it ought to be adopted separately, should it not?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Minnesota that this is the question as now put: Whether the amendments proposed by the Committee on Agriculture to the Senate amendment shall be adopted?

Mr. TAWNEY. I did not understand.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Now it will be in order to move to concur.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the motion to concur in the entire amendment of the Senate can be considered.

The Clerk read as follows:

Wholesale dealers in adulterated butter shall pay a tax of $480 per annum, and retail dealers in adulterated butter shall pay a tax of $48 per annum.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will read.

Insert in line 3, page 7, after the word "annum," the following:
"Every person who sells adulterated butter in less quantities than 10 pounds at one time shall be regarded as a retail dealer in adulterated butter.
"Wholesale dealers in process or renovated butter shall pay a tax of $50 per annum, and retail dealers in process or renovated butter shall pay a tax of $6 per annum. Every person who sells or offers for sale renovated or process butter in the original manufacturer's package shall be deemed a wholesale dealer in process or renovated butter. but any manufacturer of renovated or process butter who has given the required bond and paid the required tax and who sells only renovated or process butter of his own production at his place of manufacture in the original packages to which the tax-paid stamps are affixed shall not be required to pay the special tax of the wholesale dealer in renovated or process butter on account of such sale. Every person who sells renovated or process butter in less quantities than 10 pounds at one time shall be regarded as a retail dealer in process or renovated butter."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the Chair if the question is not divisible on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas? I observe that it relates to wholesale and retail dealers of adulterated butter and also to renovated and process butter.

Mr. SCOTT. If the gentleman will wait until I get through. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state that it seems to me the gentleman in charge of this bill upon consideration will agree with me that this amendment is presented to supply an omission in the Senate amendment.

There are three propositions in the amendment I have offered. The first is a definition of a retail dealer of adulterated butter. I do not see what objection there can be to inserting that definition in the bill.

The second proposition is to impose upon dealers in process and renovated butter the same tax that is imposed upon dealers in uncolored oleomargarine. I understand it to be the theory of the proponents of this measure that the sale of oleomargarine, uncolored, is not prejudicial to the public interests in any way, and therefore they do not desire to tax it further than is necessary to exercise the proper police power. It is certainly the theory of those supporting this measure that renovated and process butter stands on the same footing as uncolored oleomargarine. Now, if it is necessary, in order to properly police uncolored oleomargarine, to tax the wholesale and retail dealers in the article, it seems to me to be equally necessary that the wholesale and retail dealers in renovated and process butter should be taxed in order that their product should be properly policed.

Mr. GRAFF. Will the gentleman permit me to ask a question?

Mr. SCOTT. Why, certainly.

Mr. GRAFF. Would the gentleman be willing to submit as a separate provision the one he proposes, defining retail dealers of adulterated butter?

Mr. SCOTT. I was going to say, when I had got to the proper place in my remarks, that I regarded the amendment I have presented as clearly divisible from a parliamentary standpoint.

Mr. GRAFF. It involves two or three distinct questions about which the House might well differ. That is, they might be in favor of one portion of the amendment, particularly the first portion defining retail dealers of adulterated butter, to which, by the way, I see no objection, but my position is that to adopt the balance of the amendment would be to defeat the bill.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I stated in the beginning that this amendment contained three distinct propositions. As a parliamentary proposition I have no question that it is divisible, and have no objection to taking a separate vote on each one of the propositions. I trust that meets the objection of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GRAFF. Then, will the gentleman offer as a separate amendment the first provision in regard to dealers in adulterated butter?

Mr. SCOTT. I have stated already that I regard the amendment as divisible. I presented it in its present form because it seemed to me it could not be logically complete in any other form.

Mr. TAWNEY. Let me ask this question: The gentleman proposes to amend, in the first instance, by attempting to define the wholesale dealer and retail dealer in adulterated butter?

Mr. SCOTT. The retail dealer, because the bill defines the wholesale dealer.

Mr. TAWNEY. The remainder of the amendment is to impose a tax on the wholesale and retail dealer of renovated or process butter.

Mr. SCOTT. Exactly; and it goes further and closes by defining the retail dealer in renovated butter.

Mr. TAWNEY. The definition of a dealer in adulterated butter and the proposition defining the retail dealer have no relation whatever to the proposition to tax the wholesaler and the retailer in process or renovated butter.

Mr. SCOTT. In a parliamentary sense they have not, but they are all in the same section, and I thought this was a proper place to offer the amendment.

Now, I want to state the reasons that influenced me in presenting the proposition that imposes a tax on the wholesale and retail dealers in renovated butter. I understand it to be proposed in the bill before the House to protect the interests of legitimate dealers in pure butter and also to protect consumers of butter in order that the latter may not be imposed upon by the fraudulent sale of an impure or spurious product in place of the genuine article. Now, if that is the purpose of this bill, it certainly is as much to the interest of manufacturers of genuine butter to be protected against the fraudulent sale of imitation butter as it is to be protected against the fraudulent sale of oleomargarine. And if it is necessary to tax the wholesale dealers of uncolored oleomargarine in order to guard against the fraudulent sale of that article, it is equally necessary to tax the wholesale dealers in renovated butter in order to guard against the fraudulent sale of that article. Now, to show the extent to which the fraudulent sale of renovated and process butter interferes with the sale of the legitimate article, the genuine fresh article, I desire to offer the evidence of a gentleman who was for many years inspector of the State board of agriculture for the enforcement of the oleomargarine legislation in the State of Missouri.

This gentleman believes that the 10 cents tax on colored oleomargarine is right, and he can not therefore be discredited as the enemy of this legislation. In a private letter addressed to myself he says:

I have found during my experience last year, while inspector for the State board of agriculture for the enforcement of the oleo legislation of this State, that vast amounts of process and adulterated and renovated butters were put up in attractive packages and sold as creamery butter, which, of course, is a fraud upon the purchaser as well as a disadvantage to the producer of pure butter. The sale of this imitation creamery keeps down the price of pure creamery and milk throughout the district in which it is sold. The imitation creameries have a nice odor and last well for two or three days, when they become rancid and offensive, while the housewife, thinking that she has bought pure creamery butter, becomes dissatisfied with all creamery butter.

I emphasize this last sentence because it confirms what I said a moment ago—that the sale of imitation creamery butter inflicts an injury upon the manufacturers of all creamery butter, discrediting their product in the market and depreciating its value. The letter continues:

It is undoubtedly a fact that the fraudulent sale of this so-called creamery is a detriment to the patrons of every skimming station and creamery in this country, and so long as legislation along these lines is now being considered I think it would be perfectly proper to suggest to you that a tax of at least 4 cents per pound should be placed upon all imitation butters, whether adulterated or process.

Now, I do not go to the length this gentleman does, of asking that a tax of 4 cents a pound be put upon process or renovated butter, because personally I do not think this is a product which should be penalized to that extent. I do agree with him, however, that safeguards should be thrown around the sale of this article, so that the public may not be imposed upon—may not be led to believe that they are buying butter made from fresh milk or cream, when, as a matter of fact, they are buying a renovated and rejuvenated and resurrected product.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask that my time be extended for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to read one more paragraph from the letter which I have already quoted. This gentleman, as I have said, was State inspector for the enforcement of oleomargarine legislation in Missouri, and is now engaged in the creamery brokerage business at Kansas City, Mo. He adds:

I have been in the creamery brokerage for some time, but the sale of this fraudulent and imitation creamery has about ruined my business.

I take the liberty of sending you to-day by mail a small sample of this imitation butter bought by me to-day for 25 cents per pound on the open market, and I also inclose you herein the label, which I removed from the package, showing the fraudulent method of the sale of such goods. You can readily verify the fact that this is process goods and not pure creamery goods by asking any chemist in any of the departments there to put a piece of the goods under the microscope.

I sincerely trust that you may see your way clear to include all bogus and imitation butters in the legislation now pending, as the pure creamery people of the country are certainly deserving of some protection against the bogus butter people of the country.

Now, the package which this gentleman sent me was originally put upon the market with this wrapper about it which I hold in my hand. Upon it is printed "White House Butter." I assume that this brand was not imprinted upon this wrapper with the consent or by the authority of the present occupant of the White House, because I am sure he would not give his indorsement to so palpable and so wicked a fraud. But this wrapper is in itself evidence enough that there is no mark whatever about this imitation butter to brand it as an imitation product. And the fact that it was sold on the market at Kansas City at the price demanded and received for the best grades of pure, fresh, creamery butter is an evidence that the fraud has been committed.

It is for the purpose of preventing such frauds in the future that I have offered the pending amendment. It seems to me that no reasonable objection can be made to it, for the reason that it does not impose an onerous burden upon the dealers in this product. It imposes a tax of only $50 upon the wholesale dealer and $6 upon the retail dealer—merely a nominal tax—imposed for the purpose of continuing police control of this article.

The third proposition of my amendment simply defines a retail dealer in renovated and process butter. It is necessary if the preceding propositions of the amendment are adopted.

Now, as I said, Mr. Chairman, I recognize the fact that in a parliamentary sense this question is divisible, but I hope, in view of what I have said and the evidence I have presented here in support of my position, that the gentleman in control of this bill will think best to accept the amendment for the completion of the measure.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, we always want to be a little suspicious when the Greeks come bearing gifts, and we must remember that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT], who seeks to perfect this bill, as he said, is an opponent of the bill itself; that he is not in sympathy with it—is not in sympathy with its objects and purposes. I am informed that the Kansas City Star a short time ago published an interview with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD], in which he is reported to have said that they welcomed the amendments in the Senate for the regulation of renovated and adulterated butter, and they proposed to use those amendments for the purpose of defeating the oleomargarine bill.

Now, when this letter of this commissioner from Missouri is read regarding renovated butter, you must remember that he does not speak of renovated butter, having before him the definition of renovated butter which is drawn in this bill. The renovated butter described in the bill as we have amended it now excludes all rancid butter, excludes all butter which must necessarily have some drug or ingredient interjected into it for the purpose of making it palatable and a food product, but all that sort of butter belongs under the class of adulterated butter; so that we have what in renovated butter? We have simply a butter which needs to be refined and cleansed—clarified.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GRAFF. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Would you consider artificial coloring in process butter an adulteration?

Mr. GRAFF. No; I would not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not artificial coloring?

Mr. GRAFF. No.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am glad to know it.

Mr. GRAFF. Now, in addition to that there is a benefit to the farmers of the country, and not the creameries, in having so closely defined and hedged about the definition of renovated butter. Why? We have a market here for the farmer in the sale of butter before it becomes rancid, and the renovated-butter man, operating only under the provisions of this bill as a manufacturer, and as a dealer is handling an article which has never been rancid, never been impure in that sense, and after it comes through the process of clarification and regranulation by melting, it becomes even a cleaner product, if anything, than the creamery butter itself.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. GRAFF. Wait until I finish my argument in this direction. Now, then, if you propose to injure the farmer by hedging about the sale of this absolutely objectionless article by fixing a needless tax not only upon the manufacturer, which we have consented to, but upon the wholesale dealer and upon the retail dealer, you simply strike a blow at the farmer. The creameries, about which so much is said and which are stated to be the especial beneficiaries under this bill, have no interest in the renovated-butter men except as they become dangerous rivals and proper rivals, and so I say that there is no need for the fixing of a tax upon the retail dealer or the wholesale dealer in renovated butter, because there is already a tax upon the manufacturer. He must conduct his business distinct and separate from that of the manufacturer of adulterated butter under the regulations of the bill. There are provisions surrounding this inspection and marking in the sale of it, so that it is kept entirely separate in its manufacture and sale and handling from adulterated butter.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Notwithstanding what you just stated, you still insist that the wholesale dealer and the retail dealer in oleomargarine, which is conceded to be a wholesome and nutritious food, shall pay that tax, and for what purpose? For police purposes, and you refuse it to this.

Mr. GRAFF. But the gentleman seeks to go over the argument upon which the House has passed. Adulterated butter, renovated butter, pure butter are all sold for nothing else except butter. They are never sought to be sold for another article. The contention about the regulation necessary by taxation and inspection of oleomargarine was founded upon the argument that no other means would be adequate for the purpose of securing to the consumer the opportunity to purchase, when he knew it, the article which he desired to buy, and to save the farmer from the fraudulent competition brought about by the fraudulent sale of oleomargarine as some other article.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, with just a word more I will ask for a vote.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not close the debate until he permits me a reply.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. We have had the usual debate.

Mr. COWHERD. But the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF] made a personal allusion to me.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Oh, I beg pardon.

Mr. GRAFF. I hope the gentleman will be permitted to reply.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois may be extended for a minute in order that I may ask a question. He declined to yield when I first rose for that purpose.

Mr. GRAFF. The gentleman is unkind when he says that I declined to yield. I am not alarmed at the gentleman from Kansas.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended one minute for the purpose of asking a question. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCOTT. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether he believes it is improper and should be made illegal to sell process butter when the purchaser expects and desires to buy pure creamery butter?

Mr. GRAFF. Certainly not.

Mr. SCOTT. You think it is not a fraud, then, to sell process or renovated butter——

Mr. GRAFF. Oh, I think it is a fraud.

Mr. SCOTT. For what it is not?

Mr. GRAFF. I think that is a fraud.

Mr. SCOTT. That is the question I desired to ask. Now, if the same kind of a fraud is committed by the sale of process or renovated butter for what it is not as is committed by the sale of oleomargarine for what it is not, then what is the gentleman's objection to extending the same police regulations over both products?

Mr. GRAFF. I do not think that the frauds are of the same degree.

Mr. SCOTT. They may not be, in the gentleman's mind, but they are of the same general nature.

Mr. GRAFF. They are both immoral, but not equally dangerous.

Mr. SCOTT. And I desire to have the gentleman answer this question, which he did not in his first argument: In what way can he justify the imposition of the tax upon the wholesale and retail dealer in uncolored oleomargarine and not require the same tax to be put upon men who deal in renovated or process butter?

Mr. GRAFF. Let me answer that by asking the gentleman a question: What has aroused the gentleman's interest in the creameries of the country in proposing this amendment? Is he afraid that the creameries are going to be exposed to unjust competition with the farmers' butter which is afterwards renovated?

Mr. SCOTT. I think that it hardly lies in the mouth of the gentleman from Illinois to question the sincerity or the good faith with which this amendment is offered. If he has any doubt about it, I desire to assure him that the amendment is offered in the best of faith, and that it is offered because I believe that while, as the gentleman properly says, I was not in sympathy with the methods proposed by this bill, yet I am in sympathy with the object proposed to be accomplished by it. I desire as earnestly as the gentleman possibly can to prevent the fraudulent sale of any food product upon the markets of the United States.

Mr. GRAFF. So that the gentleman proposes to use the same methods that we have adopted, which he condemns, against another article in which he is not particularly interested.

Mr. SCOTT. I am no more interested personally in creamery butter or in renovated butter than I am in oleomargarine; but I do make this contention: that the fraudulent sale of renovated butter is just as much a wrong, and ought to be made just as much a crime, as the fraudulent sale of any other product; and I insist that when you are throwing no safeguards whatever around the retail or wholesale sale of renovated butter you are opening the gate wide to fraud.

Mr. GRAFF. We think we have thrown sufficient safeguards around it by the bill now.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF] has seen fit to call the attention of the House to an interview purported to be given by me, and which he says was published in the Kansas City Star.

Mr. GRAFF. I said I was informed that that was true.

Mr. COWHERD. Whether that interview was published or not I am unable to say, as it was not called to my attention. I am willing to state that I did have an interview with a representative of that paper immediately after the passage of the bill in the House, and what I then said referred to the action of this House in putting into the bill an amendment which was adopted by a vote, as I remember it, of two-thirds of the members voting, providing that renovated butter should be marked and sold as renovated butter.

Mr. WACHTER. And should be inspected.

Mr. COWHERD. I approved that, and the gentleman's criticism is a criticism upon the majority of this House. I said I approved it also because in my own district the only men that were favoring this bill, and the men that came threatening to beat me for this House because I did not favor it, were the men that were then engaged in renovating butter and marketing it as creamery butter and selling it as a fraud upon the market in Kansas City and the country. [Applause.] And I said that this action would drive those men out of business, or force them to do a legitimate business, and I hope that the majority of this House that stood then so strongly by that amendment will not brand themselves as hypocrites by coming up now and saying that this bill, which its supporters say is enacted to prevent the sale of oleomargarine in fraud of butter, can not be so amended as to prevent the sale of renovated butter in fraud of creamery butter. I hoped then and I hope now that the majority of this House will stand by their own action, and when they go out to prevent fraud, will prevent fraud in renovated butter just as they attempt to prevent fraud in oleomargarine. Let me say one thing further.

Mr. GRAFF. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. COWHERD. Just a moment. I personally know the man who wrote the letter that has been read by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT]. That man is engaged in the dairy business in and near Kansas City. He has been an officer of the Missouri Dairy Association. His business is the sale of milk and butter from dairies and creameries, and his protest is made because of the fact that we have in Kansas City several large firms engaged in buying up butter all over the country—dirty, rancid, unsalable butter—taking it there and renovating it and putting it on the market in opposition to the good wholesome creamery butter. I hope that the amendment of the gentleman will be adopted, and that the House will stand by its former action.

Mr. GRAFF. Does not the gentleman know that renovated butter would fall under the head of adulterated butter and would fall under the tax of 10 cents a pound?

Mr. COWHERD. Most assuredly I do not. Under the provisions of this bill it does not become adulterated unless chemicals are used, and you can put butter into a renovator and by the system they have of renovating that butter and washing it and proceeding to cool it and rechurn it with milk, they send it out with a fresh odor that lasts a few hours or a few days, and it goes out in the market as a fraud on the purchaser.

Mr. GRAFF. The gentleman is misrepresenting me when he states that I criticised him because he advocated a bill introduced in the House, but the point on which I wanted to criticise the gentleman was that it was charged that he advocated the measure for the purpose of defeating the legislation itself.

Mr. COWHERD. No; I said I welcomed it. I thought the legislation was bad, and I welcomed the amendment and thought it would tend to defeat the bill, because I believed that at least one-half of the force behind this bill are the renovators of the country, who are carrying on a business as fraudulent as is charged against oleomargarine makers.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, provided such motion is necessary to enable me to have two or three minutes in answer to the remarks of the gentleman who has just taken his seat, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD]. He states to us that he believes a great deal of the mischief this proposed amendment seeks to prevent (occasioned by the supposed adulteration and sale of renovated butter) arises in a constituency engaged in the manufacture and sale of that product. I know not how this remark may affect constituencies of other gentlemen sitting in this committee, but I want to make it plain to him that I know of no one in my district who meddles in this stuff, who sells it, or who eats it, or who manufactures it, but there are many amongst us who claim to have the right to know when they buy a product that it is what they bought it for and not something else.

Mr. COWHERD. Then, if the gentleman will permit me, he would favor an amendment that would compel renovated butter being marked as renovated butter?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I do not propose at this time, without knowing the real object intended by this proposed amendment—it being brought here without the friends of the pending bill having been forewarned, without its purpose being fully understood by this committee, without being told in advance what was sought to be saddled upon this bill—to contribute to its defeat by voting for the amendment. I will not be dragged into voting for an amendment which might compel the courts to hereafter hold the purpose and intention of this body to be that which was not intended.

The gentleman from Missouri no doubt is well acquainted with the legislative propositions of this House, because I have heard him several times on the same subject—that of preventing frauds, such as this bill is intended to prevent and will prevent. When did the vigilance of gentlemen in this House first show itself in the way it is manifesting itself now? When did you first make an attempt to prevent the perpetration of this fraud that you are so desirous of preventing now?

Mr. WADSWORTH. We attempted that line of legislation when the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ALLEN] introduced an amendment on the floor of this House and which you voted against.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. When was that?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That was a clause that was put in when the original bill was passed. [Loud applause.]

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. That is all right. I voted against it then and will vote against it now.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course you will.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Every member is entitled to his views on the pending question, and we need not lose our temper because we differ. When was it that this vigilance first manifested itself? Now, the very purpose of this amendment is first stated by the gentleman from Missouri. I will say for him that while I have sat with him in this House during the past five years I have always known him to be candid and to speak the truth. The purpose of this amendment is to defeat the bill. The gentleman from Missouri admits it. If the members here are in favor of the bill as originally reported; if this House is in favor of passing it as prepared by its promoters; then it is too late to accept as genuine the proposition that is made in this amendment. Now, if I might have the time—and I think about seven minutes is all the time I have occupied in five years—[laughter]——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has two minutes.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I have seen enough crocodile tears shed over this bill by its adversaries on account of those they term "the poor man." I have seen them flow and flow time and time again. The attempt to defeat this bill is made because its provisions are said to be inimical to the privileges of the poor man. I have a letter in my hand from the agent of the dairy and food commission in Pennsylvania, whose name I do not hesitate to give. His testimony will dissolve the argument made for effect. Does the gentleman from Missouri desire to hear what he has to say?

Mr. COWHERD. I am listening to the gentleman.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. The writer of this letter is Robert M. Simmers, who for six years has been running down and hunting out and fining and punishing every man where he could find him who had been practicing this fraud.

Mr. WACHTER. I would like to ask the gentleman, Who is this man?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I have said he is the agent of the dairy and food commission of Pennsylvania.

Mr. WACHTER. He gets paid for that business, does he not?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. The same as you do, and I say you are honest.

Mr. WACHTER. Then he does not deserve any credit, as he gets paid for it, and it is his business.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. That may be said by the gentleman, who is a stranger to the writer; but if I have time I will read the letter. The gentleman says he is unworthy.

Mr. WACHTER. I did not say that.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I leave it to the members, but I know the gentleman meant to say the writer, being employed to detect fraud, may have been overzealous.

In an experience of five years he says he has never been able to buy oleomargarine in the State of Pennsylvania for less than the butter price. Hundreds of cases he has given where he has always paid the price of butter. In this letter he states many cases where he has seen miners march into stores and buy that which they supposed to be butter, but which turned out to be oleomargarine, with only 2 per cent of butter fat found therein.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have his time extended ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks that the time of the gentleman be extended ten minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. The letter is dated January 20, 1902, and is written, as I have already said, by Robert M. Simmers, special agent for the Department of Agriculture. Before reading the letter I wish to say that I have known him twenty-five years, and even the people who think that he is too vigilant say that he always tells the truth. He is the agent who was discharged by the former food and dairy commission of Pennsylvania, but was soon afterwards restored. The letter is as follows:

SPECIAL AGENT DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Phoenixville, Pa., January 20, 1902.

Hon. THOMAS S. BUTLER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR AND FRIEND: In answer to yours of January 17, will say that in 1896 I found 10 barrels shipped by an oleo manufacturer to the Avondale Coal Company, below Wilkesbarre, Pa., which contained 2 60-pound tubs each of oleo, and billed as other goods, and was after being sold as pure butter when I found it in the store; and many times have I found it being shipped in soap, orange, and cracker boxes, and without any stamps on at all.

In 1898 I found a party at Williamsport that was shipping it in regular butter boxes in prints and 2-pound rolls to different stores in Sunbury, Shamokin, McAdoo, Yorktown, Lansford, Tamaqua, and several other towns, as and for pure butter, and I had 38 stores at one time arrested for selling this goods. The man Dorman, who was the shipper, was convicted and served two years for it, and several of the stores were fined. None of this goods had any stamps on.

I have taken hundreds of samples of the stuff, and I have never (with two exceptions) bought it for anything else but pure butter, paying from 20 to 35 cents per pound for it, and as butter. One man in Pottsville had in his store creamery prints, at 32 cents, farmers' roll, at 28 cents, and oleo prints, at 35 cents, and all in the same refrigerator. I of course took the 35-cent stuff and he paid for it in a heavy fine.

Mr. COWHERD (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I will.

Mr. COWHERD. I want to ask the gentleman whether that officer had ever made any attempt to discover whether renovated or adulterated butter was sold, and whether it be not a fact that your farmers and creamery men are as much opposed to that fraud as to the sale of oleomargarine?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. They are in favor of preventing all kinds of fraud, and I hope to represent my district in such a manner that I may aid them in preventing a fraud.

Mr. COWHERD. Then the gentleman, as I thought I gathered from his remarks, will join us in the motion of the gentleman from Kansas to put a small police tax upon these people and make them mark their product.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I understand where the gentleman's question will lead me; but I will say that if he and his people had been fair, if they had submitted this proposition to us so that we could understand it and had time to digest it, we might support it. Take this proposition off the bill, if you please, and I will vote for it, but do not mix it up with this measure to encompass its defeat.

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman means to separate the proposition from this bill?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. COWHERD. We could not get it before the House. The only way to get good legislation is to amend legislation when it is before the House.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. That is the ordinary way; but do not introduce one measure for the mere purpose of killing another. I will accept the gentleman's statement, as quoted by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF], that it is his intention to defeat the bill with this proposition.

Mr. COWHERD. Oh, no.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Would the gentleman vote for an independent proposition to prevent the artificial coloring of creamery butter?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Of course I would not. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. I would like to know if the gentleman is acquainted with Levi Wells, the dairy product commissioner of Pennsylvania in 1898?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I know of him, and I know he was discredited by some people and was displaced.

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. Discredited by whom?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. By every farmer in the State of Pennsylvania, and by every creamery man in the same State with whom I talked. He was displaced and another man named in his stead.

Mr. WACHTER. What was the reason?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Because it was said that he had not sufficient anxiety to prosecute your people. I do not know that such a charge was justifiable. I only state the report as I heard it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. My people? [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. The oleomargarine people. I say further that the man from whom this letter comes, which I have tried hard, Mr. Chairman, to read, was discharged by Levi Wells. Do you know why?

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. No; I do not know.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Because it is said he found too many men selling oleomargarine for butter. I know that the governor of Pennsylvania required Mr. Wells to surrender his portfolio. The reason I can not give, except from reports made by people I know.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Was he discharged at the instigation of John Wanamaker? [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Respectfully referred to Senator QUAY. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman from Pennsylvania understands that this bill imposes one-quarter of a cent tax on uncolored oleomargarine and also on renovated or process butter. Now, why should the bill——

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I do not know how it is, and I do not care. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, I do not want to attempt to answer this question, because I do not fully comprehend the purpose of the amendment proposed. I know the purpose of this bill is to prevent fraud, and I propose to be honest enough to state to my friend from Kansas that if colored oleo and butter can not exist together after the passage of the bill, colored oleo shall go and butter remain. That is my position.

If either shall survive, it shall be butter. But if they can honestly, let them exist together. I do not believe they can. I do not believe you can sell your oleomargarine colored and make a profit if this bill passes. But that is nothing to me. I simply want it said by this law that you shall not commit a fraud. You have stuck a stick into the body politic, thereby creating a festering sore. Now, I propose that it shall be withdrawn by operation of law.

I do not care what the result is, so that we succeed in preventing the fraud and secure the farmer and the dairyman in his rights. It is his right to sell his butter as butter, and it is also his privilege to prevent, if possible, the product of the district of my friend from Chicago [Mr. MANN] and that of other districts to come into my district and be sold for butter. It shall not be done if I can prevent it.

Mr. MANN. You want to compel our people to buy the higher priced product which they do not want, rather than the lower priced product which they do want?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. That is not the purpose of the bill. I want your people to be required to obey the law.

Mr. MANN. Having had the benefit of protection all your life, you want to protect your State against the competition of another part of the country. You are not willing to stop with the protection you have had.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. The gentleman may construe my action as he pleases. It is not a question of protection, but one of obedience, that is before us. I desire the people of Illinois who are represented by my friend, and who now violate the law, to obey it, and I shall vote to continue the struggle to this end until the end comes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. May I be allowed to finish reading this letter? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that his time be extended long enough to permit him to read the letter to which he has referred.

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I am now coming to a point which should interest my friend from Missouri. From his standpoint he made a good speech the other day; it was cleverly and well made, but we would have enjoyed it more if it had only been based on facts. Here is where the poor man obtains his benefits from oleo frauds:

> Down in Chester last year I found several places where the stores were selling as pure creamery butter, at 30 cents per pound, and told their customers that it was the very best quality, and that they, in some cases, controlled the creameries that made it; and in other cases, when they had given their customers inferior butter at 28 cents and they complained, said that they had a better goods at 32 cents, and when they bought it it turned out to be oleo in prints, with 2½ per cent of butter fat in it instead of 89 per cent.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Who was it that committed that fraud; a butter dealer or an oleomargarine manufacturer?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. He was a butter dealer, I suppose.

Mr. MANN. And a Pennsylvanian!

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Yes; of course all men in Pennsylvania are not good men.

Mr. MANN. One of the gentleman's constituents?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. We have six millions and a half of people in our State, and they can not all be irreproachable.

Now I will give some more names and facts:

> Russell Uhl, of Wilkesbarre, is now having agents over the territory up there selling tea and coffee at certain prices and giving them oleo as a premium for pure butter—

[Laughter.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is a way of advertising.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania (continuing the reading)— > and this last week I arrested four parties for selling the goods as butter at 28 and 30 cents per pound for butter and one of them is in jail, and the stuff had been shipped in boxes, covered up with heavy paper to conceal the article from the public, and it was transferred to other boxes and the empty ones thrown into the Lehigh River. All of this goods is colored just like pure butter, and put up in imitation of the same, in rolls, prints, and tubs. If the Government would not allow the coloring it would be almost impossible to sell it under a false name, and should not be allowed under any consideration. In using the argument that it is the friend of the poor man, I will state that I have stood in stores and seen the goods sold to miners and other laborers at 30 cents per pound as and for pure butter. The miner, as a rule, wants good food, and is willing to pay for it, but at the same time he wants to buy as cheap as he can, and wants butter when he asks for it and pays butter prices, and I have got the first time in my work for five years to see the stuff sold at its value and for oleo at the same time, and that is where the great fraud comes in the sale of oleo, not that it is so detrimental to health—

We have changed our views somewhat on that point.

A MEMBER. I am glad of it.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania (continuing the reading)—

> but in the deception and fraudulent way that it is disposed of when it is colored like butter, and it always will be so long as it is allowed to be made as it is at this time, for the Government is defrauded, as well as the State and the consumer; for at least three-fourths of the parties that I have found have no license to sell it from anyone and run the risk of selling it and not be detected when they can take it from the original package and put it in butter boxes and dispose of it that way. I have not time to make out a detailed number of cases, but have given you some information in a general way, but if you desire to have them will be glad to do so. Inclosed find copy of present State law.
> Very respectfully, ROBT. M. SIMMERS.

Mr. WADSWORTH rose.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I make the point of order that debate on the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that point for a moment.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Very well; I withdraw it in order to allow the gentleman from New York to go on with his remarks.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am extremely sorry that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF] should feel himself so weak in his position as to resort to the argument that "we must fear the Greeks bearing gifts." I suppose, Mr. Chairman, I am one of the Greeks.

Mr. GRAFF. Undoubtedly that is true.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I want to say in all honesty and in all sincerity that the minority of the Agricultural Committee has interposed no objection to this bill in the way of delay. We have agreed to all the Senate amendments, and we are offering amendments to the Senate amendments simply to put process butter and adulterated butter and oleomargarine on the same plane. As far as governmental supervision is concerned——

Mr. DAVIDSON. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No. Exactly as far as taxation per pound is concerned and exactly as far as license fee is concerned and for process butter, we reduce the manufacturer's license from $200 to $50. We have done that in all sincerity, and we do not want to impede this bill in any way.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut renews his point of order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, let him ask his question.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I withdraw the point of order for the present.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Didn't you propose an amendment yesterday which would permit colored butter to be mixed with oleomargarine?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I did.

Mr. DAVIDSON. For the very purpose of killing the bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I did not. That is an assumption by the gentleman that he has no right to make. It would not kill the bill. Butter is in itself an ingredient of oleomargarine, and you know that every pound of butter, or 95 per cent, at least, of the butter sold on the market is colored. Now, if the oleomargarine manufacturers go on the market to buy their butter they can not procure it uncolored.

Mr. DAVIDSON. The gentleman knows they put in the cream, and they can buy the cream without the color.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That may be so; but one of the ingredients of oleomargarine, as shown by the list of ingredients filed with the Secretary of the Treasury, is butter. Now, I claim they can not buy uncolored butter, and the gentleman from Wisconsin knows it.

Mr. MANN. And the gentleman is not willing to depart from the fraud of coloring butter.

Mr. DAVIDSON. It is not a fraud.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is.

Mr. PEARRE. Did not the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] say yesterday that his amendment to the Senate amendment No. 7 was designed to permit the coloration of oleomargarine?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I did.

Mr. PEARRE. And does not the gentleman know, and will he not admit to this House, that such permission would destroy the effect of this bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have held from the first——

Mr. PEARRE. Answer the question.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I beg your pardon, but I will answer it in my own way. I have held from the first that the oleomargarine manufacturers had the right to color their product—just as much a right as the butter manufacturers have to color theirs.

Mr. PEARRE. Then answer the question. Would not that amendment defeat the purpose of this bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; because the Senate has put in an amendment which the majority of the committee have accepted, striking out the words "ingredients or" and inserting the word "artificial" before the word "coloration."

Mr. PEARRE. And when you add to that the exception that you made in the amendment numbered 4, after the word "coloration," "excepting colored butter" or "yellow butter," would not that have——

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; it says "artificial."

Mr. PEARRE. After the word "coloration," would not that have permitted the coloring of butter?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I want to answer the question frankly and openly. I say it would enable them to color their own oleomargarine, and color it in an honest way and under the provisions of this law, because butter is an ingredient of oleomargarine——

Mr. PEARRE. Does not the gentleman know——

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut makes the point of order that the debate on this amendment is exhausted. The Chair sustains the point.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Just one word, and I will ask for a vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has himself made the point of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Then I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the request. I would make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to speak further on the amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I do not wish to object, but I take it the gentleman is not very courteous to the rest of the House in undertaking to shut off everybody else except himself. [Laughter.] I hope in the future he will not be so particular.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT], with the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], have all along been able and consistent opponents of this legislation, both in committee and in the House. The gentleman from Kansas now offers an amendment that contains a little that is meritorious, more that is objectionable, and objects to a division. Now I would ask, as a parliamentary inquiry, if the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT] is divisible?

Mr. SCOTT. I hope the gentleman will not put me in a false position. I repeatedly stated that I would not object to a division, if it was requested as a parliamentary right.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HENRY] concluded his remarks?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask for a division of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks for a division of the amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask for a separate vote on that part of the amendment defining a retail dealer in adulterated butter. I think that part of the amendment should be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that this, not being a motion to strike out and insert but a motion to amend by adding new matter, it is properly divisible provided it contains more than one substantive proposition. The Chair is of the opinion that it does contain at least two, and therefore sustains the demand of the gentleman from Minnesota, and will put the question upon the first proposition.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Let us have it read.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would like to have that proposition read.

Insert in line 3, page 7, after the word "annum," the following:
"Every person who sells adulterated butter in less quantities than 10 pounds at one time shall be regarded as a retail dealer in adulterated butter."

Mr. TAWNEY. That is the proposition for which I ask a separate vote. I think it ought to be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of that portion of the amendment which the Clerk has just read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is upon the adoption of the remainder of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCOTT], which the Clerk will report.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I trust that will be voted down.

The Clerk read as follows:

Wholesale dealers in process or renovated butter shall pay a tax of $50 per annum, and retail dealers in process or renovated butter shall pay a tax of $6 per annum. Every person who sells or offers for sale renovated or process butter in the original manufacturer's package shall be deemed a wholesale dealer in process or renovated butter; but any manufacturer of renovated or process butter who has given the required bond and paid the required tax, and who sells only renovated or process butter of his own production at his place of manufacture in the original packages to which the tax-paid stamps are affixed, shall not be required to pay the special tax of the wholesale dealer in renovated or process butter on account of such sale. Every person who sells renovated or process butter in less quantities than 10 pounds at one time shall be regarded as a retail dealer in process or renovated butter.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of this amendment.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. WACHTER and others) there were—ayes 37, noes 70.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Dealers in adulterated butter shall pay $48 per year. Every person who sells adulterated butter shall be regarded as a dealer in adulterated butter. And sections 3232, 3233, 3234, 3235, 3236, 3237, 3238, 3239, 3240, 3241, and 3243 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are, so far as applicable, made to extend to and include and apply to the special taxes imposed by this section and to the person upon whom they are imposed.

The following committee amendment was read:

In lines 4 and 5 strike out the words "dealers in adulterated butter shall pay $48 per year."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all adulterated butter shall be packed by the manufacturer thereof in firkins, tubs, or other wooden packages not before used for that purpose, each containing not less than 10 pounds, and marked, stamped, and branded as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe; and all sales made by manufacturers of adulterated butter shall be in original stamped packages.

Mr. BURLESON. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 18, page 8, after the word "butter," insert "and process or renovated butter."

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the purpose of this amendment is to make the provisions of this particular paragraph applicable to process or renovated butter. It does not increase the tax upon process or renovated butter. It does not increase the license fee for the sale of process or renovated butter. The sole purpose of the amendment is to protect the honest retail dealer and the consumer from being imposed upon by having renovated or process butter sold to him as high-grade creamery butter. Now, I will not say that the gentlemen who voted for substantially this amendment when this bill was pending in the House before will stultify themselves if they vote against it now, but I will state that if they vote against this amendment they are thoroughly inconsistent.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] on yesterday read what the dairy commissioner of Pennsylvania said about renovated butter.

Mr. TAWNEY. One moment, before the gentleman leaves that will he permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. BURLESON. Yes, certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Do you not think that section 5 of the Senate amendment covers fully the purpose you have in view by the amendment you offer?

Mr. BURLESON. On the contrary, I know that it does not, as amended by the House Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is where you and I differ.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman from New York read you on yesterday what the dairy commissioner of Pennsylvania, Mr. Wells, had to say about renovated butter. It seems that Mr. Wells has been discredited. It has been said that he has been sent to the penitentiary. In fact, my quondam Democratic colleague [Mr. SIBLEY] said that the people of Pennsylvania—the indignant people of Pennsylvania—have driven him from office. But that does not answer the question as to what the dairy commissioner of Pennsylvania stated as a matter of fact about renovated butter. Time and again the North American, the best-conducted and most ably edited newspaper published in Pennsylvania, has charged that other State officers of that great State ought to be driven from office.

In fact, it has repeatedly stated that some Federal officers, some of them in the legislative department of our Government, notably at the other end, ought never to have been elected to office, and further, that they ought to now be driven from office. But that has no particular bearing. I will not take issue with Brother Wanamaker on this point. What did Mr. Wells, their dairy commissioner, selected by the Republican party for this important position, describe renovated butter to be? Every man here knows what renovated butter is. When this bill was pending in the House before, by two-thirds majority of the members voting, this House voted that renovated butter should only be sold as renovated butter—that is, when marked renovated butter. Now, gentlemen, I submit it to you, you who voted for the Allen amendment when this bill was pending in the House before, how can you consistently vote against this amendment now offered by me?

I earnestly submit to the proponents of this measure, How can you consistently vote against it? I assert that no substantial reason can be given why this amendment should not be adopted. It simply puts renovated or process butter on the same plane as oleomargarine, and requires it to be sold for what it is—renovated butter. I defy my ingenious and oleaginous friend from Minnesota, who in the recent past so ably pleaded for the beet-sugar industry, begging that it be not destroyed, but who is willing now to destroy one industry, to club it to death, and thereby line the pockets of the owners of creameries in his section of the country, to state one good reason why this amendment should not be adopted. Now, gentlemen, what does the amendment propose to do?

My friend from Illinois, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the other day said when this bill was thoroughly understood by the people—by the farmers in whose interest it is being claimed it is being enacted—that somebody was going to be trampled on. I say to the members who voted for the Allen amendment when this bill was before the House, you will trample upon yourselves if you now vote against the amendment I offer. What does it propose to do? It proposes that renovated butter shall be marked as renovated butter, and when sold shall be sold for what it is. That is all it does. What is renovated butter?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut asks that the time of the gentleman from Texas may be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURLESON. I thank the gentleman from Connecticut. Now, what is renovated butter? How is it made? The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] seemed to labor under the impression that all butter which was subsequently made renovated butter was butter sold by the farmer to the country storekeeper; but I tell you that a great deal of the butter that finally reaches the manufacturer of renovated butter is made in creameries; not the first-class creameries, but in such creameries as the one I now describe.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BURLESON. With great pleasure.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman please name some of the creameries in which this renovated butter is made?

Mr. BURLESON. I will read now to the gentleman from a reported interview with the assistant State food commissioner of Illinois, describing certain creameries where low-grade creamery butter is made, and this low-grade butter in a very short time becomes rancid, and then must be renovated; must go to the factory of the manufacturer of renovated or process butter. High-grade creameries do not make such butter. Now, let me read:

"Filthy and absolutely unfit for the purposes used and a menace to the public health," is the indictment returned by Assistant State Food Commissioner R. M. Patterson against many dairies and creameries supplying Chicago with milk and butter.

"A majority of them are in bad sanitary condition and without proper drainage facilities," continued Mr. Patterson. "They should either be rebuilt and thoroughly cleansed, or closed to prevent a further spread of disease."

Commissioner Patterson made these startling statements yesterday on his return from a three days' inspection tour among the creameries and dairies near Galena, Freeport, and Rockford.

"I inspected fourteen dairies and creameries, and of this number I found but one which came anywhere near the standard provided by law," continued the commissioner. "I was utterly amazed at the conditions found. The owners pleaded ignorance of the law, and said the conditions were no worse than they have been for years. I did not want to be too hard, so I warned them to rebuild their plants immediately and keep their premises scrupulously clean in the future. If they fail to obey this warning we will prosecute them to the full extent of the law."

I stand here to tell you that the butter manufactured in creameries of this kind is certain to go to the factory engaged in manufacturing renovated or process butter within a very short time.

SAMPLE OF A REPORT.

Here is a sample of the conditions met with on our tour of inspection. It is a report on a large creamery near Freeport, and reads as follows:

"Output of plant last year, 74,880 pounds of butter, all of which was shipped to Chicago. The creamery handled 1,872,000 pounds of milk. It is located in a two-story frame structure, on the first floor, and the owner and his family live upstairs. The interior is walled and ceiled with common matched flooring, which is soaked with grease and is in a state of decay. It was whitewashed many years ago, but has not been cleaned since. The boards in the floor are loose, and dirty water spurts between the cracks every time a person walks across the room.

"'Escaping steam fills the room, and this, together with the smell of stale milk, makes the atmosphere almost unbearable. The weigh-can cover was covered with a black grease, due to the accumulation of months. Directly over the receiving vat was a window covered with dust and soot and cobwebs. We found the outside of the separator covered with a black grease, half an inch thick.

"'The woodwork of the cream vat was moldy and foul smelling. The churn was filthy and the valve through which the cream flowed was partially clogged with a black grease. The escaping steam in the place kept the ceiling wet all the time and dirty water dripped into the vats. The skimmed milk and buttermilk tanks are located directly over a coal pile, and every time fuel is removed the dust rises and settles in the tanks. In an adjoining room we saw them working and packing butter amid filthy surroundings.'

"This is a fair sample of the average creameries we inspected. These are the places where a large part of the butter used in Chicago is made. The State food commission will devote its attention to these places immediately, and either improve the sanitary conditions or close the establishments."

HEALTH OFFICER SURPRISED.

Secretary Pritchard, of the health department, when informed of the statements made by Commissioner Patterson, said:

"If the conditions are as bad as reported, there is need of vigorous action without delay. In the past these people have practically been running without supervision from either the local or State authorities. We have no control of them. We knew they were not kept as clean as they should be, but had no idea that the conditions were anything like those pictured by the State food commission."

Yet the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Minnesota want this butter, which will soon be sent to the factory of the renovator, after same has been renovated, to be sold as pure creamery butter. That could be done under the terms of this bill as reported by the House Committee on Agriculture, because they strike out the Senate amendment requiring process butter or renovated butter to be marked "Process butter."

How is renovated butter made? I read from the annual report of the Department of Agriculture a description of the method. Its publication in this report is a guaranty of its accuracy.

It is first dumped into large tanks surrounded with jackets containing hot water, and melted at a temperature ranging from 100° to 110° F. After being thoroughly melted, the heavier solids sink to the bottom and the lighter particles rise to the top, which, when skimmed off, leaves the clear butter fat with the heavier sediment at the bottom.

This butter fat is then removed to other tanks, jacketed and surrounded with hot water like the first. The odor of the fat at this stage is anything but agreeable, and the main object of the next manipulation is to remove this stench from it. This is supposed to be accomplished by aeration, the fat passing out of a pipe at the bottom of the tank and with a rotary pump again elevated in a pipe over the top of the tank and discharged through a strainer into the same, thus to remove the disagreeable odors, keeping up a continuous circuit and agitation of this liquid butter fat.

It is claimed by some that chemicals are also used for this purpose, but assurance has been given by those engaged in the business that this is not true. When the fat is sufficiently aerated the machinery is changed by removing the funnel-shaped strainer, and large quantities of skim milk are added; in just what proportion is not known, but can approximately be stated. An analysis of the finished product showed only 75 per cent of butter fat, and as it contained nothing but the fat and milk and a small amount of salt, there must have been about 25 per cent of milk added. A perfect emulsion of the milk and butter fat is obtained by the same machinery that did the aerating excepting the strainer, and it is accomplished in a very short time. When the milk has all disappeared the melted mass looks much as it did before the milk was added.

It is next run off in pipes to a vat of ice and water, where it is quickly chilled, taking the granular form and looking like ordinary butter when in the granular form before being worked. It is then worked, salted if necessary, and printed or packed in tubs for shipment, often as fresh creamery butter.

How can the proponents of this measure contend in one breath that oleomargarine should be branded and marked so that the purchaser may be not deceived and then be consistent and contend that renovated or process butter be not marked and branded? If you are right in your first contention, then by the irrefutable force of logic you are wrong in your second position.

Now, gentlemen, why not adopt this amendment? It is not a case of the Greeks bearing gifts now, because a majority of the members of this House voting voted for this amendment during the consideration of this bill before it was sent to the Senate. I appeal to gentlemen who voted for this amendment before, be just to yourselves, be honest intellectually with yourselves, be consistent and vote yea—especially to the proponents of this measure do I appeal—vote now to protect the retail merchant, protect the consumer, by preventing this horrible stuff that is termed "renovated butter" from being sold as pure creamery butter. [Applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] has represented to the committee that this amendment is one that two-thirds of the members voting voted for when the bill was under consideration originally in this House.

Mr. BURLESON. Two-thirds of those present and voting.

Mr. TAWNEY. Two-thirds of those voting is the exact language. I have reread the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ALLEN] and I will defy the gentleman from Texas to show me a word in the amendment to which he has referred that relates at all to the proposition which he now presents to this committee. He has talked and other gentlemen have talked about renovated butter——

Mr. BURLESON. Let me answer the gentleman's assertion.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will read the amendment.

Mr. BURLESON. I will read it.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman must read it in his own time; he can not read it in mine. They have referred frequently to the renovated-butter amendment which was put in by the House, which the gentleman must now know, if he did not know it before, would have been an absolute nullity had it ever become a law. The gentleman knows, as well as other men in this House, that the Federal Government has no power to go into a State and supervise or inspect the manufacture of an article intended for sale within that State. But that is what you proposed in your renovated-butter amendment. It would, therefore, have been absolutely worthless. It would have absolutely failed in the accomplishment of the purpose for which you said it was intended.

Now, you are applauding yourselves because you have voted for something that would not accomplish what you intended to, and are criticising us because we have gone on and perfected the proposed plan of regulating the manufacture and sale not only of renovated butter, but of adulterated butter. Mr. Chairman, before I speak to the amendment I want to read the renovated-butter amendment which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] has commended so highly. It is as follows:

That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and required to cause a rigid sanitary inspection to be made from time to time, and at such times as he may deem necessary, of all factories and storehouses where butter is renovated; and all butter renovated at such places shall be carefully inspected in the same manner and to the same extent and purpose that meat products are now inspected. The quantity and quality of butter renovated shall be reported monthly. All renovated butter shall be designated as such by marks, brands, and labels, and the words "Renovated Butter" shall be printed on all packages thereof, in such manner as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, and shall be sold only as renovated butter. Any person violating the provisions of this section shall, on conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be fined not less than $50 nor more than $500, and imprisoned not less than one month nor more than six months.

Now, the gentleman's amendment does not relate at all to the marking or branding of the butter, but it relates to the packing. There is nothing in the renovated amendment adopted by this House that requires the manufacturer of renovated butter to pack that butter——

Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky. The gentleman does not mean that.

Mr. TAWNEY (continuing). The proposed amendment is that process or renovated butter shall be packed by the manufacturer thereof in firkins or tubs or other wooden packages not before used for that purpose.

Mr. BURLESON. Go on, go on.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will keep quiet I will go on, but I will go on in my own way. Or other wooden packages not before used for that purpose. I say there is nothing in the renovated-butter amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky and adopted by the House in regard to the character of the packages in which the renovated butter was to be packed. "Each containing not less than 10 pounds." There was nothing of that kind in the renovated-butter amendment which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ALLEN] offered when this bill was originally before this House. "And marked and stamped and branded as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, and all sales made by the manufacturers of adulterated butter shall be in original stamped packages." In the Senate amendment to this bill I find this provision on page 12:

All process or renovated butter and packages containing the same shall be marked with the words "Process butter," by mark, label, or brand, in such manner as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, and no process or renovated butter shall be shipped or transported from its place of manufacture into any other State or Territory or the District of Columbia or to any foreign country until it has been marked as provided in this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would like five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COWHERD. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. COWHERD. Is it not a fact, however, that the committee has recommended the striking out of the words "process butter?"

Mr. TAWNEY. The Committee on Agriculture does propose an amendment striking out the words "process butter," but I do not agree with the committee, and I shall propose a substitute for that amendment, and will do it with the consent of the gentleman in charge of the bill, and restore the words "process butter" and otherwise amend it so that the provision as it will read, if the amendment is adopted, will be as follows:

And all process or renovated butter and the packages containing the same shall be marked with the words "process butter" and by such other marks, labels, or brands as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

That would be the proposition as it would read if the amendment which I shall propose is adopted. With that amendment adopted, with the language in the bill as it is now, it is infinitely better than it would be with the much-exalted process-butter amendment which originated in the camp of the enemies of this bill.

Mr. BURLESON. If the gentleman will secure the assent of the Chairman of this committee or the gentleman having this bill in charge to the amendment he proposes, I will withdraw mine.

Mr. TAWNEY. I have that consent.

Mr. BURLESON. Then I withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the amendment of the gentleman from Texas will be considered as withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of lines 18 to 25, inclusive, on page 8, and all of lines 1 to 15, inclusive, on page 9, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That all adulterated butter, process butter, or renovated butter shall be put up by the manufacturer for sale in packages of one and two pounds, respectively, and in no other or larger or smaller package; and upon every print, brick, roll, or lump of adulterated butter, process butter, or renovated butter, before being so put up for sale or removal from the factory, there shall be impressed by the manufacturer the words 'adulterated butter,' 'process butter,' or 'renovated butter' in sunken letters, the size of which shall be prescribed by regulations made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; that every such print, brick, roll, or lump of adulterated butter, process butter, or renovated butter shall first be wrapped with paper wrapper with the words 'adulterated butter,' 'process butter,' or 'renovated butter' printed on the outside thereof in distinct letters, and said wrapper shall also bear the name of the manufacturer, and shall then be put up singly by the manufacturer thereof in such wooden or paper packages or in such wrappers, and marked, stamped, and branded with the words 'adulterated butter,' 'process butter,' or 'renovated butter' printed thereon in distinct letters, and in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe, and the internal-revenue stamp shall be affixed so as to surround the outer wrapper of each one and two pound package: Provided, That any number of such original stamped packages may be put up by the manufacturer in crates or boxes, on the outside of which shall be marked the words 'adulterated butter,' 'process butter,' or 'renovated butter,' with such other marks and brands as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall, by regulations approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, prescribe.

"Retail dealers in adulterated butter, process butter, or renovated butter shall sell only the original package to which the tax-paid stamp is affixed, and shall sell only from the original crates or boxes in which they receive the pound or two pound prints, bricks, rolls, or lumps; which said crates or boxes shall be, at all times, so placed as to expose to the customer the mark or brand affixed thereon by the requirements of this act.

"Every person who knowingly sells or offers for sale, or delivers or offers to deliver, any adulterated butter, process butter, or renovated butter otherwise than as provided by this act, or contrary to the regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue made in pursuance hereof, or who packs in any package any adulterated butter, process butter, or renovated butter in any manner contrary to law, or who shall sell or offer for sale, as creamery butter, any adulterated butter, process butter, or renovated butter, or who falsely brands any package or affixes a stamp on any package denoting a less amount of tax than that required by law, shall be fined for the first offense not less than $100 nor more than $500 and be imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than six months, and for the second and every subsequent offense shall be fined not less than two hundred nor more than one thousand dollars and be imprisoned not less than sixty days nor more than two years."

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. One moment.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I anticipate, I think, the point which the Chair is going to make. I understand that, strictly speaking, this amendment is out of order until the first fifteen lines of the next page have been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that that portion of the gentleman's amendment which proposes to strike out a part of page 9 is not yet in order, but the gentleman may consider his amendment as so modified that it shall merely strike out a part of page 8, inserting in lieu thereof the matter which has been read; and the gentleman will be considered as giving notice that when page 9 has been read he will move to strike out the first fifteen lines.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this proposed legislation, as we have been asked to understand it, is to prevent the perpetration of a fraud upon the public. The Senate amendment, as it appears in this bill, is copied almost verbatim from the present oleomargarine law which was passed in 1886.

When we considered this bill in the House before it went to the Senate, it was contended by the friends of the bill that the provisions of the present law did not sufficiently protect the public against fraud in the sale of oleomargarine. Complaint was made that the people were being constantly defrauded by dishonest retail dealers who fraudulently sold oleomargarine under the guise of butter, and that more drastic legislation was needed in order to stop the evil.

Now, if the provision of the present law does not protect the public against the fraudulent sale of oleomargarine under the guise of butter, let me ask the gentlemen who favor this bill, and who exhibit such intense concern for the public, and such feverish desire that the people be protected against fraud, how that same provision, which has been incorporated in this bill as a Senate amendment, is going to protect the public against the fraudulent and dishonest sale of adulterated butter, process butter, or renovated butter, under the guise of pure creamery butter? At least, try to be consistent when legislating to protect the public against fraud in the matter of adulterated, process, or renovated butter; do not foist upon them for their protection the same provision which you yourselves have rejected as insufficient to protect them in the matter of oleomargarine. The same condition obtains. The same question is involved.

The amendment which I offer will accomplish the desired end of preventing fraud in the sale of adulterated, process, or renovated butter, and in offering it I am entirely consistent, because it is practically section 6 of the substitute bill, offered by the minority of the Committee on Agriculture before this bill went to the Senate, and which had for its object the preventing of fraud in the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine, the only difference being that the words "adulterated butter," "process butter," or "renovated butter" are substituted for the word "oleomargarine."

You will notice the amendment that I have offered provides that all adulterated butter, process butter, or renovated butter shall be put up in packages not larger than 1 and 2 pounds, respectively, and to each package shall be affixed the tax-paid revenue stamp, and the wrapper shall have printed thereon the words "adulterated butter, "process butter," or "renovated butter," as the case may be, and that those words shall be impressed in sunken letters on each and every print, roll, or brick of adulterated butter, process butter, or renovated butter.

As I have said, Mr. Chairman, the object is to prevent the commission of fraud, and my amendment will absolutely prevent its commission. We are told that under the present law, under present conditions, when a consumer presents himself and asks for 1 pound or 2 pounds of creamery butter, it is very easy for a dishonest dealer to put up 1 pound or 2 pounds of oleomargarine and hand it out to the customer as creamery butter. The same conditions will obtain in relation to adulterated, process, or renovated butter, if the Senate amendment is adopted. The dishonest dealer can still give out renovated butter, adulterated butter, or process butter in the guise of pure creamery butter. On the other hand, this will be impossible if my amendment is adopted, because under it a retail dealer can sell only in original packages.

Now, if gentlemen in this House who claim that their object is to prevent fraud are sincere in their contention, they can have no serious objection to the amendment which I have offered. I sincerely hope that all gentlemen will vote for this amendment, and I especially commend it to the consideration of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], who has expressed such an intense desire to prevent fraud.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to prevent fraud, but, at the same time, to prevent fraud in a way that I may understand how the prevention is to be brought about. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], who offers this amendment, brings it in at the eleventh hour, when it is too long to remember and almost too long to read. I do not propose that either he or the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] shall single out the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] and myself as the two original sinful men of this House.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Well, you are under suspicion. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. You might easily lead the procession.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I can not stop to blow feathers with these gentlemen. We can not play all the time; we will play after a while.

I do not propose that we shall be understood here as standing in the way of legislation which has for its object the prevention of fraud. I want you to understand, now, that as soon as you come here with a proposition that will prevent in itself the adulteration, the renovation, the making over of butter that is to be sold upon the market as original butter (that is the term I use), I will cheerfully vote for your proposition. Bring it in, as this bill has been brought in here to prevent the sale of oleomargarine, as butter, making your proposition a single one. It is true, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] says, that this may be the way to legislate, but it is not the way to legislate understandingly. If you desire to accomplish the object that you evidently assume to seek, give us a bill and we will all vote for it, I have no doubt.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Did not the Agricultural Committee bring in this proposition of the Senate amendment to regulate process and renovated butter?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Has not that committee brought it before the House in the regular way?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Yes; but the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] says he hopes to defeat the bill by the use of the amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The majority brought it in.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. That is all right. I will take his word, because, as I said this morning, he is known on this side of the House for his perfect candor. It is not a scheme on the part of the dairymen alone, those who put their products through what is known as creameries, to pass this bill. I do not know what may be the character of the business of the people living in the district represented by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON], but I am proud to remind him that I live in a county which stands third in the United States for agricultural and dairy products, according to the statistics in the Agricultural Department. There the farmers own their own creameries, and they demand the passage of this bill.

Let me remind those who argue the fact that because butter has gone up in price and milk has not, and therefore there is a conspiracy against the farmer by the creamery men, that in Pennsylvania, where creameries abound and where nearly every farmer has a direct interest in the creamery, at the end of each month there is made out an account of the sales of butter, and the moneys are divided accordingly among the farmers who produce and send the milk to the creameries. At most creameries the price of milk depends upon that of butter. Therefore, you can not properly state, or perhaps I ought to say you can not accurately state at this time, that because butter has gone up in price and milk has not advanced that there is a conspiracy against the producer of milk. At the end of the month he will discover whether or not he gets his profit. Let us wait for the fact.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that debate is exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the amendment, if that is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it is an old saying, I believe, that it depends upon whose ox is gored, but that saying is now reversed; it depends upon whose cow is gored.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. That is right.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, my esteemed friend who represents a district filled with creameries—so full of creameries that on the byways it is almost impossible to lay out new roads or obtain pasture for the cattle—wishes to take care of the creameries; but the gentleman from Illinois, my distinguished colleague [Mr. GRAFF], who represents a district where farmers live who make their own butter and produce it, wants to take care of the renovated and process butter. He is willing to stifle the industry of oleomargarine, but he is not willing to apply the same test to renovated or process butter.

Mr. GRAFF. Will the gentleman permit a question at this time?

Mr. MANN. I am always delighted to hear the voice of my friend.

Mr. GRAFF. Who is it that the gentleman from Illinois wishes to take care of—the manufacturers of oleomargarine?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman, my distinguished colleague, refers to me, I will state that I wish to take care of the people who eat butter and who eat oleomargarine. [Applause.] And to see that whoever they are, they have the same right of eating one that they have of the other. The gentleman, my colleague, wishes to see to it that the man can not buy oleomargarine unless he pays a tax of 10 cents a pound, but he can buy process or renovated butter, which is not nearly so good, without paying any tax at all. If the gentleman, as he claims, is interested only in preventing fraud, then prevent fraud on all sides and do not merely prevent fraud committed by one party. He is willing to prevent fraud committed by the right hand and to sustain fraud committed by the left hand.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will my friend answer a question?

Mr. MANN. Why, if I am able to.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. If this amendment should go into the bill, will you vote for it?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I shall not vote for any of the amendments to tax renovated or process butter. I shall not vote for the bill to tax oleomargarine. My record is clear. You want to vote for an amendment to tax oleomargarine, and you are afraid to vote for an amendment to tax the renovated or process butter. You can not accuse me of inconsistency, nor can you claim consistency on your own part.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, how does the gentleman from Pennsylvania feel?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Oh, I feel terribly bad. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have no word to say against the people who make renovated or process butter or the people who eat renovated or process butter. It is made by a system which, it is said, absolutely leaves no taste, flavor, or odor of butter in it within a week from the time it is manufactured. When process butter is made all of the butyric acid and the butyric ether which give to butter the flavor and the odor are taken from it, and the only way they are put back is by rechurning the melted butter in milk, which puts in a small quantity of butyric ether and butyric acid, which leave the butter within a week's time, as testified by the experts; so that when the renovated or process butter is submitted to the consumer of butter it is submitted and sold only on its color. It is colored grease, pure and simple; nothing more.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And artificially colored.

Mr. MANN. And artificially colored, as my friend from New York suggests. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to take my chances. If I can not tell, when I buy process or renovated butter and put it upon the bread before me, whether I like it or not, I think it makes but little difference. I am willing to take my chances on knowing, when I eat a product of that kind, whether it tastes good or not. But I say that the gentleman who wishes to strike down one industry because it does not live in his district, and who wishes to sustain another industry which lives in somebody else's district, violates every principle of respectable or representative government. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I ask for a vote on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Illinois will be considered as withdrawn. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by his colleague, the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

That upon adulterated butter, when manufactured or sold or removed for consumption or use, there shall be assessed and collected a tax of 10 cents per pound, to be paid by the manufacturer thereof, and any fractional part of a pound shall be taxed as a pound, and that upon process or renovated butter, when manufactured or sold or removed for consumption or use, there shall be assessed and collected a tax of one-fourth of 1 cent per pound, to be paid by the manufacturer thereof, and any fractional part of a pound shall be taxed as a pound. The tax to be levied by this section shall be represented by coupon stamps, and the provisions of existing laws governing engraving, issuing, sale, accountability, effacement, and destruction of stamps relating to tobacco and snuff, as far as applicable, are hereby made to apply to the stamps provided by this section.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 16, page 10, afer the words "tax of," the following: "10 cents per pound to be paid by the manufacturers thereof; Provided, That when process or renovated butter is free from artificial coloration said tax shall be."

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I suppose it is utterly useless to offer any kind of an amendment to this bill; and, after the remarks of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF], that this bill should be allowed to be amended only by its friends—and I may say that expression sounds strangely familiar—I suppose it is exceptionally useless for any amendment to be offered by one who has at any time opposed the bill. But it seems to me that the good judgment of this House should control, and not simply the question as to whether an amendment is offered by any particular person. If I can offer to the House any good reason for supporting the amendment I propose, I submit to the gentlemen on the floor that that reason should not be set aside because of the source from which it comes.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman a question? Does the gentleman think he can appeal to the reason, or any reason, on the part of gentlemen who have been supporting this bill?

Mr. COWHERD. Well, I am very much afraid——

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. COWHERD. Just let me answer that question first. I am very much afraid I can not. I have noticed during the discussion of this bill that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HENRY], who is the Roderick Dhu of this occasion, arises at the end of each discussion and sounds a blast upon his bugle horn and the note is promptly reiterated by the chorus sitting at his right; and though the blast may not be "worth a thousand men," it is good for a majority of the Chamber, so I have but little hope of the passage of this amendment.

We have seen the same purpose manifested before, but never, I think, was it so frankly admitted as by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], my genial friend who spoke a few moments ago, who said that he "did not know what was in the bill and he did not care what was in the bill," but promptly announced that he was going to support it anyhow and was opposed to any amendment. Of course, if that is the temper of the House, if that is the disposition and the intention, to rush and ride this legislation through regardless of what may be in the bill, and to oppose all amendments, of course it is utterly unnecessary and wholly useless to appeal to the reason of the House.

Now let me state what my amendment is. I propose to put identically the words of the bill as applied to oleomargarine in the bill as applied to process or renovated butter—nothing more and nothing less. That this process or renovated butter shall come to the market in such a condition that the people may know what it is, that it shall be only taxed one-fourth of 1 cent a pound, just as oleomargarine is, and then, when it comes in imitation of pure farmers' butter or creamery butter, that it shall pay a tax of 10 cents a pound, just as colored oleomargarine does.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COWHERD. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. How would you administer a law of that kind? Could you ascertain whether coloring matter had been injected into the butter for the purpose of giving it an even more yellow color than it had?

Mr. COWHERD. There will be no trouble about that, Mr. Chairman. Every man knows that for practically ten months of the year coloring matter has to be put into pure butter. Every gentleman knows that.

Mr. MANN. And all of this has to be made under Federal supervision.

Mr. COWHERD. All of this has to be made under Federal supervision, and not only that, but this renovated butter is washed, and all the color has been taken out.

Mr. TAWNEY. Can you take color from butter by washing it?

Mr. COWHERD. You can wash out the artificial color in butter. The gentleman knows that the butter that goes into the market is artificially colored. Now, the gentleman says he thinks it can not be enforced. If it can not be enforced, then it will not hurt anybody. If it can be enforced, then the gentleman has aided us to stop another fraud. This entire bill attempts to draw a distinction between adulterated and renovated butter, and the idea that I gathered from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] as to the renovated butter is that it is the butter of the farmer. I deny it. I distinctly state that this renovated butter is gathered up from the scrap heaps of the country store and is not as it came from the farmers' kitchen. I understand that it is gathered also from the wholesale dealer, and from the retail dealer, and from the hotels and restaurants where it has grown rancid.

One of the objections that is made against oleomargarine is that when it is colored and sold that you can make a great profit out of it. What does the farmer get for his butter that has got old or rancid, so that it can not be sold until renovated? It sells at from 4 to 5, 6, and 7 cents a pound, and never practically more than 10 cents; and then when the renovator gets it it is marked and branded as pure creamery butter, and it goes into the market in competition with good butter from the farmer's kitchen and from the creamery at 30 and 35 cents a pound. If you are in favor of stopping frauds, if you are earnest in your arguments, join me in this proposed tax on renovated butter when artificially colored.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, we all of us have unpleasant duties to perform, and it is exceedingly unpleasant, after listening to the eloquent remarks of the gentleman from Missouri to ask that his amendment be rejected. I call for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. COWHERD. I would like to have a division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 61, noes 63.

Mr. COWHERD. I ask for tellers, it is so close.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from Connecticut will kindly take their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 80, noes 101.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the provisions of sections 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, and 21 of "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886, shall apply to manufacturers of "adulterated butter" to an extent necessary to enforce the marking, branding, identification, and regulation of the exportation and importation of adulterated butter.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I think that in section 4 the amendment that has been adopted to the section ought to be concurred in before we proceed to section 5.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. They are both one amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. The amendments to section 4 by the committee, I think, ought to be concurred in, and I make that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest that this is all one Senate amendment, numbered 9, and that the vote upon the entire amendment will be in order when the amendment is read.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the amendment, as follows:

All parts of an act providing for an inspection of meat for exportation, approved August 30, 1890, and of an act to provide for the inspection of live cattle, hogs, and the carcasses and products thereof which are the subjects of interstate commerce, approved March 3, 1891, and of amendment thereto approved March 2, 1895, which are applicable to the subjects and purposes described in this section shall apply to process or renovated butter. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and required to cause a rigid sanitary inspection to be made, at such times as he may deem proper or necessary, of all factories and storehouses where process or renovated butter is manufactured, packed, or prepared for market, and of the products thereof and materials going into the manufacture of the same for exportation or transmission from one State to another.

All process butter and the packages containing the same shall be marked with the words "Process butter" by marks, label, or brands, in such manner as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, and no process or renovated butter shall be shipped or transported from its place of manufacture into any other State or Territory or the District of Columbia, or to any foreign country, until it has been marked as provided in this section. The Secretary of Agriculture shall make all needful regulations for carrying this section into effect, and shall cause to be ascertained and reported from time to time the quantity and quality of process or renovated butter manufactured, and the character and the condition of the material from which it is made. And he shall also have power to ascertain whether or not materials used in the manufacture of said process or renovated butter are deleterious to health and unwholesome in the finished product, and in case such deleterious or unwholesome materials are found to be used in product intended for exportation or shipment into other States he shall have power to confiscate the same. Any person, firm, or corporation violating any of the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $500 or by imprisonment not less than one month nor more than six months, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

The committee amendments to the Senate amendment were read, as follows:

Same page, line 10, strike out the word "meat" and insert the word "meats."

Same page, line 24, after the word "same," strike out "for exportation or transmission from one State to another."

On page 12, line 1, after the word "process," insert the words "or renovated."

Same page, line 3, strike out the words "the words 'Process butter' by" and insert the word "such."

Same page and in the same line, after the word "marks," strike out the word "label" and insert the word "labels."

Same page, in lines 20 and 21, insert after the word "States," the words "or in course of exportation or shipment."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment I wish to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest that the question is on the amendments offered by the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to offer a substitute for one of the amendments to restore in line 3, page 12, the words, "Process butter," and I want to offer it in this way, so that it will read at the beginning of line 3:

Renovated and process butter, and by such other marks, labels, and brands and in such manner as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

It substitutes after the words "process butter" the words "renovated or," and after the word butter the word "and," and after the word "such" the word "other," and after the word "brands," in line 4, the word "and."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3, after the word "words," insert the words "renovated or." After the word "butter" insert the word "and."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest that it would be more in order to first vote down the committee amendment and then vote upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. TAWNEY. I offer this as a substitute for the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's amendment is hardly in parliamentary condition, for he first moves to strike out and then insert.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, I will ask the gentleman from Connecticut to withdraw the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will put the question first on the adoption of the committee amendment to strike out "the words process butter by."

Mr. COWHERD. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COWHERD. Do I understand the Chair is going to put first the motion to strike out "the words process butter by?"

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on striking out "the words process butter by." That is the amendment recommended by the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. COWHERD. Will the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota then be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Committee on Agriculture.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, the gentleman from Minnesota moves to insert, after "the words," in line 3, the words "renovated or;" and after the word "butter" the word "and."

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota if he does not think a better amendment would be to put in the words renovated butter or process butter. I do not think he wants the words renovated or process butter on each particular package, he wants one or the other.

Mr. TAWNEY. I agree with the gentleman, although I did not think it would be so construed.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota modify his amendment?

Mr. TAWNEY. So as to insert "renovated butter or;" so it will read "renovated butter or process butter."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert before the word "process," in line 3, the words "renovated butter or," and after the word "butter" the word "and."

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection the two amendments will be considered together.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the amendment read from the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3, before the word "process," insert the words "renovated butter or," and insert after the word "butter" the word "and," so it will read "renovated butter or process butter and by."

Mr. TAWNEY. I also wish to add the word "other" after the word "such."

The CHAIRMAN. That would be an amendment to a committee amendment which has not been voted upon. The first question is on the first amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, the question is on the committee amendment to insert the word "such" in line 3, and the gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment to that amendment to insert the word "other" after the word "such." The question is on the adoption of the amendment to the amendment.

The question was considered, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the adoption of the committee amendment as amended.

The question was considered and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment, to insert after the word "brands," in line 4, the word "and."

The CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the committee amendment to strike out the word "label" and insert "labels."

The question was considered, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAWNEY. I now offer the amendment to the Senate amendment by inserting the word "and" after the word "brands," in line 4.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee recommend concurrence of the House to the amendments in this section.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask these gentlemen a question or two that goes to the very heart of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there is nothing before the committee.

Mr. CLARK. I move to strike out the last two words. Is there anything in this process-butter legislation that you are getting up here that permits farmers to renovate or recast or rework over their own butter?

Mr. TAWNEY. There is nothing to prevent them from doing it.

Mr. CLARK. Is there anything to permit them?

Mr. TAWNEY. There is nothing to prevent. Of course they are permitted to do it.

Mr. CLARK. Where is the part of the bill that permits them to do it?

Mr. TAWNEY. There is no provision of the bill whatever in regard to that point, so far as the farmer is concerned.

Mr. CLARK. Is there any provision in this bill which confines to wholesale dealers or manufacturers these prohibitive clauses or sections, or does the bill take all creation into its sweep?

Mr. TAWNEY. The bill relates exclusively to retailers, wholesalers, and manufacturers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does not the tax of a quarter of a cent a pound apply to the farmer who makes this product in his own cellar?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; it does not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I thought it did. I thought it applied to all process butter.

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, no. There is no provision that can be construed as imposing a tax upon butter that has been worked over by the farmer on his own premises.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then, within the meaning of the bill, the farmer who works the butter over in his own cellar is not a manufacturer of process butter?

Mr. TAWNEY. In answer to the gentleman I will read the language of the bill:

Every person who engages in the production of process or renovated butter or adulterated butter as a business shall be considered to be a manufacturer thereof.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Would not the man be doing it "as a business" if he worked the butter over in his own cellar?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; certainly not.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Suppose he buys butter from his neighbors and works it over?

Mr. TAWNEY. If he goes out among his neighbor farmers and buys up their rancid butter and works it over and sells it he is making a business of it, and is a manufacturer.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Have you provided in this bill any precautions against that thing being done?

Mr. TAWNEY. The provisions of the bill in regard to manufacturers would apply to such a man.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Who is to look after him under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. The Agricultural Department.

Mr. WADSWORTH. He does not pay any license fee, does he?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly he does.

Mr. CLARK. Does this tax of one-fourth of a cent a pound apply to the farmer?

Mr. TAWNEY. It does not.

Mr. CLARK. But the very minute he commences selling this stuff he becomes a retailer, does he not?

Mr. TAWNEY. The farmers are not making renovated butter.

Mr. CLARK. Suppose the farmer does do this?

Mr. TAWNEY. As a business?

Mr. CLARK. It may be part of his business to take the butter he has on hand and put it through some kind of a process—to renovate it or refresh it—I do not care a straw what you call it. Now, the very minute he undertakes to sell a pound of that butter, does he not become a retail dealer under the language of this bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not think he does. The farmer, when he has manufactured his butter, generally wants to get it to market as soon as possible. He does not want to hold it.

Mr. CLARK. I understand that perfectly well; but if this bill interferes with the farmer working over his own butter and selling it, the man who votes for it will never get back to this House.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, we are just as anxious about that as the gentleman from Missouri. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. That is what they are bringing in this bill for; that is the only object.

Mr. CLARK. If they put in anything of that kind, they are missing their cue.

Mr. BURLESON. I have an amendment which should have been offered on page 7, and which perhaps I may not be permitted to offer after the next section has been read. Therefore I will offer it now:

Insert after "court," line 4, page 13, the following: "Every person who sells or offers for sale adulterated butter in the original manufacturer's packages shall be deemed a wholesale dealer in adulterated butter. But any manufacturer of adulterated butter who has given the required bond and paid the required special tax and who sells only adulterated butter of his own production at the place of manufacture in the original packages to which the tax-paid stamps are affixed shall not be required to pay the special tax of a wholesale dealer in adulterated butter on account of such sales."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will suspend for a moment. The Chair will state that the consideration of that amendment will be in order immediately after the consideration of the remaining committee amendments which have not yet been passed upon. If there be no objection, the remaining committee amendments will be considered together.

Mr. MANN. As to this section, or all through?

The CHAIRMAN. As to the paragraph which has just been read, section 5. The Chair hearing no objection, will put the question on all the remaining amendments as to the paragraph last read.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to state to the gentleman that the only purpose of this amendment is to deal justly and fairly with the manufacturer of adulterated butter. There is not a manufacturer of adulterated butter in my district, or in the State of Texas, for that matter, but under the provisions of this bill—and it will not be denied—the manufacturer of adulterated butter who manufactures for the purpose of exportation will be required to pay a $600 tax as a manufacturer, and after he has complied with the requirements of this law by executing a bond and the additional requirements he will then be called upon to pay an additional tax of $480 as a wholesale dealer for disposing of his own product.

The sole purpose of this amendment is to provide that when the manufacturer of adulterated butter has complied with the requirements of this law, by executing a bond, etc., and disposes alone of the product of his own factory, he shall not be required to pay the tax of a wholesale dealer. That is the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. WANGER. How is the manufacturer of oleomargarine treated in that respect?

Mr. BURLESON. Just exactly as I propose to treat the manufacturer of adulterated butter by the terms of this amendment. It puts him upon all fours with the manufacturer of oleomargarine.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will ask, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment be reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the amendment will be again read.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, that is simply an additional definition of a wholesale dealer in adulterated butter, and provides that the manufacturer of adulterated butter, whose product is sold on his own premises, or at his own place of manufacture, on which the special-stamp taxes have been paid, shall be exempt from the payment of the license taxes. To my mind that amendment would very likely lead to fraud in the manufacture and sale of adulterated butter.

Mr. BURLESON. Why, it is impossible.

Mr. TAWNEY. There would be no license. He would take out no license. The Government would have no record at all of the location of his place of business. The Government would not know whether or not he was paying the tax upon his product, because it would have no notice, and the only way the Government officials could ascertain would be by ferreting out or constantly looking out for men engaged in the manufacture of process butter without having first paid the license tax.

Now, in the application of that to oleomargarine, it is entirely different. The manufacturer of oleomargarine does not manufacture for sale in his immediate community. He manufactures for sale elsewhere. Hence he is obliged to take out the special license tax whether he wants to or not. But this would enable any number of men to engage in the business of manufacturing adulterated butter for sale ostensibly right at their own place of manufacture and pay, if they wanted to, the taxes or stamp tax. But how would the Government know, how would the internal-revenue officials be able to protect the Government against fraud in the event that they manufactured adulterated butter and did not pay the tax, except that they might accidentally run across the fact that they were manufacturing adulterated butter in violation of law. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment ought to be adopted, and so far as it defines retail or wholesale dealers it is unnecessary, as that is sufficiently covered now in the Senate amendment.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota is wholly mistaken. This amendment of mine does not attempt to define a wholesale dealer in adulterated butter. It does not attempt to define a retail dealer. It does not destroy a single provision or stipulation in this measure regulating the manufacture or sale of adulterated butter. The sole purpose of the amendment is to relieve the manufacturer of adulterated butter from paying the $480 tax as a wholesale dealer where he disposes of the product of his own factory and none other. It does not affect a single stipulation or provision or safeguard in this bill that is thrown around the manufacture or sale of adulterated butter.

As a matter of fact—and we all know it—after the passage of this bill every adulterated-butter factory, every factory engaged in the manufacture of adultered butter, will immediately become a factory for the manufacture of process or renovated butter, and we will have no adulterated-butter factory in this country; but we should throw this protection around the manufacturer of adulterated butter if one should continue in the business. It is just; it is fair. It simply places him upon all fours with others similarly engaged, and I challenge a denial of the proposition. It simply places him upon all fours with the manufacturer of oleomargarine.

Talk about no governmental supervision! Why, every package that he manufactures is required to be put up in a certain character of box, tub, or bucket and stamped before it can be removed from his factory. The only effect of this amendment is to save him from paying double taxes; that is, taxes as a manufacturer and taxes as a wholesale dealer. This amendment is a fair one—it is founded upon justice and fairness; but of course it will be rejected unless the gentleman from Minnesota, who seems to have taken charge of this bill, can be made to understand it and agree to accept it. The word has gone forth—no amendments unless they come from friends of the measure.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BURLESON) there were—ayes 40, noes 54.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee recommend concurrence in the Senate amendment as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut now moves that the committee recommend concurrence in Senate amendment No. 9, with the amendments which have been made thereto.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5, after the word "oleomargarine," insert "process, renovated, or adulterated butter"

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I move concurrence.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut moves to concur in Senate amendment No. 10.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I just want to submit one observation to the committee in the final moments of the passage of this bill, so far as this House is concerned, and that is that the gentlemen who have prepared this bill have overreached themselves. I do not think I would say this if I thought they would pay any attention whatever to any suggestion made by one outside of their own coterie and acting under the orders of their own captain. This bill is unconstitutional so far as it applies to oleomargarine. I am rather inclined to think it will be held constitutional in so far as it applies to process or renovated butter, but it will be held by the court that it is beyond the province of Congress to say that in the use of the taxing power we can tax oleomargarine which contains beef fat a higher rate than we tax oleomargarine which contains cotton-seed oil or hog fat.

They will say that it is beyond the power of Congress to levy a higher tax upon oleomargarine that is green than oleomargarine which is yellow, and that it is beyond the province of Congess to levy a higher tax upon oleomargarine which contains an additional harmless element, giving it color. It is within the constitutional power of Congress to levy a tax of one-half cent or 10 cents or 50 cents per pound on oleomargarine. I do not question that the Supreme Court will hold that it is within the province of Congress to apply the taxing power upon any of the products of manufacture; but I say that the Supreme Court will hold that Congress can not make a distinction between two products identically the same, because one contains an additional coloring ingredient, harmless, so far as health is concerned; and the gentlemen who are priding themselves upon the passage of this bill will find in the end that it will be a slap at the men who make butter at the farmside and in the creamery, and who afterwards want it churned into renovated or process butter, but that it will not injuriously affect the manufacture of oleomargarine.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word in regard to this bill in the closing hours of the debate. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] representing the hog, and representing the beef interests——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the gentleman represents, but there are no hogs in my district, not even two-legged ones.

Mr. RAY of New York. Well, then, I am mistaken as to the residence of a great many. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. The wonder is not that the gentleman is mistaken. That is no wonder.

Mr. RAY of New York. Well, the gentleman's interruption and the speech that he made before I took the floor are in perfect accord with the opposition that he has made to the enactment of this bill. He predicts, and even asserts, that if it becomes a law it will be pronounced unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States. He speaks for the court, and we would naturally think that there was combined in him all knowledge as to the law.

Now, I venture a prediction, and that is that when this law is put upon the statute book that it will be, if contested in the courts, pronounced constitutional in every respect. It would have stood the test better had it not been interfered with and mangled in some of its good features by those who pretend to be favorable to the farmer, to be representing him and his interests. While claiming to be in the interest of the farmer, they have really been attempting to make this bill unpopular, to create feeling against it, to inject unconstitutional provisions into it.

Now, I come, Mr. Chairman, from a dairy district. I represent thousands of farmers. The farmers and business men of the State of New York are interested in and favor this bill. I live also near the borders of the great State of Pennsylvania, which is interested in and favors this bill. The farmers in those dairy States and in all the dairy States of this great nation understand this legislation. They understand what is and what is not in their interest. They know what they want and almost to a man the farmers of this great country interested in honest dealing have been clamoring for the enactment of this bill through the months and even the years. They are not fearful of its operations; they will reap the just rewards of their labor when in operation.

This has been a fight between the dairymen of the United States—the friends of the cow, if you desire to so put it—and those who want to force upon those laboring men and poor people who do not know the difference between good butter and poor butter a compound composed of refuse lard or hog fat, refuse beef fat, and cotton-seed oil mixed with a little cream and butter, thus forming an offensive substance really, an indigestible substance really, something that is not fit for food, something that not one man on the other side of the House or on this side of the House, who has been standing as the representative of oleomargarine, would eat if he had it placed before him, and knew it.

Mr. BURLESON. Do you say the laboring man does not know the difference between bad and good butter?

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, the laboring man by looking at it does not know it; chemists in some cases by looking at it are mistaken in identifying it. But when they take it into their stomachs, when they undertake to use it as food, then they do know it. This bill is to protect the people, the farmers, and the consumers of these two articles of food, and it will prove a boon and a blessing to the farmer; it will prove a boon and a blessing to the laboring man, to all poor people, for it will prevent their being imposed upon, and throughout the length and breadth of this land the farmers will rejoice when this bill becomes a law. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. TAWNEY. I make the point of order that debate upon this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out the last word of the amendment. That is a point of order that was unnecessary for the gentleman to make.

The distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] took occasion in his remarks to make a fling at me for the suggestion which I made in reference to the law, that it might be unconstitutional. Of course if I had had the distinguished gentleman's opinion upon the constitutionality of this law before I spoke I would have remained silent; because everybody in the country—aye, in the world—knows that when the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House passes his opinion upon a question of law or the Constitution, the courts stand aside and wait in awe. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, just a moment. I want to say this. The courts do not stand aside in awe, but view what I assert with respect. I have never yet expressed an opinion on the constitutionality of a question, in a brief or otherwise, and had it overruled by any court.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That is what the gentleman said.

Mr. MANN. That confirms my statement.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I renew my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Illinois will be considered as withdrawn. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Connecticut, that the committee do recommend concurrence in the tenth Senate amendment.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman——

The question was taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The ayes appear to have it; the ayes have it, and it is concurred in.

Mr. McRAE. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the committee has agreed to a motion to concur.

Mr. McRAE. But I was on my feet and was trying to get the attention of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear the gentleman, and the Chair had at least put one side of the question.

Mr. McRAE. That is not my fault.

The CHAIRMAN. It will require unanimous consent. But the Chair will be very glad to submit that to the committee.

A MEMBER. I object.

Mr. McRAE. I suggest that it is not a matter that requires unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The question having been put, and concurrence having been agreed to, unanimous consent is required to vacate the vote by which the committee concurred.

Mr. McRAE. But I submit that the Chair can not afford to say that, being on my feet and doing all that I could to attract the attention of the Chair, that he can not entertain my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not know that the gentleman proposed to make a motion, and did not see him on his feet until after the question had been put—at least one side of it.

Mr. WANGER. I ask unanimous consent that the vote be vacated, in order that the gentleman may make his motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the committee vacate the action of concurrence.

Mr. SHATTUC. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that no one has addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. No gentleman rose and objected, and no objection being heard, the gentleman from Arkansas will be recognized.

Mr. McRAE. I offer this, Mr. Chairman, as an independent section at the end of the Senate amendments to the bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. If it is not offered as an amendment to the Senate amendment, I make the point of order that it is not in order.

Mr. McRAE. It is a proposition to lay a tax of 10 per cent upon any persons or corporations who make a butter trust.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to inquire where it is proposed to insert this amendment.

Mr. McRAE. At the end of the bill as an independent section.

Mr. TAWNEY. I insist on my point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will sustain the point of order.

Mr. McRAE. I would like to have the amendment read.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let us have the amendment read, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That every agreement, contract, or combination between persons or corporations which has for its object and purpose, in whole or in part, the creation of a monopoly in butter or which tends to create a monopoly by preventing full and free competition in the importation, manufacture, or transportation of butter, or which shall have for its object and purpose the advancing of the cost of butter to the consumers, is hereby declared to be a trust; and there shall be levied and collected annually, upon the capital and assets and also upon the products of every such butter trust as defined by this section, a tax of 10 per cent, and no drawback for such taxes when they have been paid shall be allowed for exports. All the provisions of law in reference to internal-revenue taxes, so far as the same are applicable, shall apply to this tax and to the persons, partnerships, corporations, trusts, and combinations upon which it is imposed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota will state his point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. The point of order is that it is not an amendment to any Senate amendment. The preceding section has been concurred in. And I make the further point of order that it is not germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas desire to be heard?

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I propose this as a new section, to be added to and to follow after what is amended as section 7. Originally it was section 5, but the Senate has proposed to change the numbers so as to make it 7.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this bill has once been decided to be a revenue bill. It does lay a tax upon certain persons who are engaged in the business of selling imitation butter. Now, in order to protect the people of this country against a monopoly in this food product that is sought to be aided by the passage of this bill, I propose, by this amendment, to tax the products of all concerns that engage in a combination for the purpose of enhancing the price or monopolizing the market of butter the same per cent that is laid on oleomargarine and colored butter. It seems to me that if the bill itself is a revenue bill and its provisions are to be enforced by the Internal Revenue Commissioner, then it is in order to lay a tax on a trust if the article protected by this bill becomes the subject of that trust. It is germane, and that is the only question, I think.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon a motion made yesterday to amend a portion of the text of the bill, the Chair ruled, following a decision made by Speaker Carlisle, that it was not within the power of the House, and consequently not within its power while in Committee of the Whole House, to amend any portion of the bill which had been agreed upon by both the House and Senate. This amendment proposes to amend the text of the bill which has so been agreed upon by both Houses by adding entirely new matter thereto. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. McRAE. I would like to make a statement in that connection. It is this: That there is not a single section of this bill which has been agreed to by both Houses; the whole thing is carried into conference.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that in addition to the decision of Speaker Carlisle the attention of the Chair has been called to a ruling by Speaker Randall on June 9, 1880, to the same effect, that no new matter can be put into the text of the bill which has been agreed upon by both Houses. All that is before the House is the consideration of the Senate amendments, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman. Has the Chair's attention been called to the ruling by the gentleman from Minnesota that the House can put anything in the bill it pleased without regard to the germaneness of it? [Laughter.]

Mr. TAWNEY. It is not a question of germaneness.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not had its attention called by the gentleman from Minnesota to any such ruling. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to make oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia into which they are transported, and to change the tax on oleomargarine, and to impose a tax, provide for the inspection, and regulate the manufacture and sale of certain dairy products, and to amend an act entitled 'An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine,' approved August 2, 1886."

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee recommend concurrence in this amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that completes the consideration of the Senate amendments, and I now move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. OLMSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration Senate amendments to House bill 9206, and had instructed him to report that the committee recommends concurrence with Senate amendments 1 to 8, inclusive, and that it recommends concurrence with Senate amendment 9 with an amendment, and that it recommends concurrence in Senate amendments 10 and 11.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reports that that committee has had under consideration Senate amendments to House bill 9206, and instructs him to report the same back to the House recommending concurrence in all amendments from 1 to 8, inclusive, and concurrence in amendment No. 9 with an amendment, and concurrence in amendments 10 and 11. Is a separate vote demanded upon any one?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur with the recommendation of the committee, and upon that I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut moves that the House agree with the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole House and demands the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The first question will be on concurring in amendments 1 to 8, inclusive, and amendments 10 and 11.

The question was taken, and the amendments were concurred in.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on concurring in Senate amendment No. 9, with the sundry amendments recommended by the committee.

The question was taken, and the recommendation was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HENRY of Connecticut, a motion to reconsider the several votes was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 10847. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD my remarks made the other day on the "omnibus bill" by inserting some extracts from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13895) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903. Pending this motion, I would like to arrive at an agreement in regard to time to be occupied in general debate.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I suggest three hours on a side.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I trust we shall not require that much time. I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to four hours—two hours on each side.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I shall be compelled to object to that proposition. I have consulted as well as I could members on this side of the House, including my colleagues on the committee, and I am satisfied that three hours will be required on this side. If we fix six hours as the aggregate time, we shall have till five o'clock to-day, and can probably finish to-morrow the general debate and dispose of the bill before the House adjourns.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not wish to curtail unnecessarily the general debate, but I do not think that six hours will be consumed.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If the gentleman thinks that three hours will not be required on his side, then I suggest that we proceed without any agreement. If, after this side has occupied three hours, an equal amount of time is not desired on the other side, of course it need not be used.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Very well; I will accept the gentleman's proposition, with the understanding that, if six hours' debate should not be required, we can, whenever the general debate appears to be exhausted, go on with the debate under the five-minute rule.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then, as I understand, the request is that six hours of general debate be permitted, three hours on each side, the time on one side to be controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and on the other side by myself, and that if so much time should not be required for the general debate, we may proceed at once to the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will restate the request. It is that general debate be limited to six hours—three hours on a side; the time on one side to be controlled by the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, and on the other side by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]; and if it be found that six hours are not required, the remainder of the time be occupied under the five-minute rule. Is there objection to this request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The motion of Mr. WADSWORTH, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill, was then agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. POWERS of Maine in the chair) and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13895) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I will detain the House for only a few minutes in stating the main appropriations carried by this bill. The total amount appropriated by the bill for the Department of Agriculture is $5,115,570. The amount carried by the bill for the fiscal year 1901–2 was $4,577,420, there thus being a net increase of $576,150 for the coming fiscal year. This is a very liberal increase, particularly when considered in connection with the increases allowed in recent years, according to the following statement:

For 1897-98 the appropriation was $3,182,902.
For 1898-99 it was $3,509,202, an increase of $326,300.
For 1899-1900 it was $3,726,022, an increase of $216,820.
For 1900-1901 it was $4,023,500, an increase of $297,478.
For 1901-2 it was $4,582,420, an increase of $558,920.

It will thus be seen that the increase for the last fiscal year, together with that proposed by the bill for the ensuing fiscal year, is, in round numbers, $1,135,000.

The following is a comparative exhibit of the appropriations for the different bureaus and divisions of the Agricultural Department for the current fiscal year and for the coming fiscal year:

	Current fiscal year.	1902-3.	Increase.
Office of Secretary	$71,670	$73,690	$2,020
Weather Bureau	1,148,320	1,251,760	103,440
Animal Industry	1,154,030	1,247,180	93,150
Plant Industry	496,680	601,780	105,100
Forestry	185,440	282,860	97,428
Chemistry	35,800	73,200	37,400
Soils	109,140	168,960	59,820
Entomology	36,200	57,200	21,000
Biology	32,800	45,600	12,800
Accounts	18,900	24,100	5,200
Publications	198,020	228,820	30,800
Experiment stations	789,000	792,000	3,000
Silk investigations	Nothing.	10,000	10,000
Total increase			581,150
But deducting $5,000 carried in last year's bill for preparing plans of new building for Department of Agriculture			5,000
Leaves a total net increase for administration purposes of			576,150

It will be observed that there is in the present bill a new item of appropriation—$10,000 for silk investigation.

We have also recommended, Mr. Chairman, an increase in the salaries of certain scientists at the head of certain bureaus in the Department, as follows: Chiefs of the Bureaus of Animal Industry, Plant Industry, Forestry, Chemistry, and Soils, $500; $250 to the zoologist of the Bureau of Animal Industry, and $200 to one engineer of the Weather Bureau, who has charge of the engine room and also the electrical plant; a total actual increase in salaries of $2,950.

The apparent increase in the salary rolls, Mr. Chairman, of the several bureaus and divisions is not an actual increase either of salary or clerical force, but is accounted for by the transfer to the statutory rolls of clerks who have heretofore been paid from the lump-sum rolls and who were then, as now, part of the permanent force of the Department. These transfers were made on the recommendations of the Agricultural Committees of both the Senate and the House. The increase in the salaries recommended of the scientists at the head of the several bureaus has been granted, because the committee is convinced that the salaries now paid to them are much below those paid by the higher class educational institutions of this and foreign countries for the same class of service.

After a careful consideration and numerous extended hearings and investigations, the judgment of the committee is that the amount recommended by the committee will be ample to keep all branches of the Department of Agriculture well in advance of the needs of the country for the coming fiscal year, where it is the wish and intention of the committee to keep it. Now, with that brief statement and outline of the bill, I will say no more at present, but will be glad, under the five-minute rule, when we take up the bill by paragraphs, to answer all questions.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask a question in reference to this increased appropriation. Last year or this current fiscal year, as the gentleman will remember, there was quite a shortage in the appropriation for the Bureau of Animal Industry.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There was a shortage of $40,000, which was made good in the urgent deficiency bill. That was caused by the increased export demand for beef and pork and therefore the increased demand for the inspection of those articles by the department. This year we have allowed an increase of $93,000, which I believe, in the face of the increased price of beef and pork, will be ample, because with the increased price of beef and pork the exports must fall off. I will say to the gentleman that should this amount not be sufficient we will make it good in the urgent deficiency bill at the beginning of the next session.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit me, he can not make it good in the deficiency bill. This year the Department of Agriculture notified the packers that the appropriation would be exhausted and that inspection would cease, and it caused a considerable flurry in the trade, which the gentleman will agree ought not to occur if it could be prevented.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the Department made a mistake in giving that notice to exporters before consulting with Congress, because Congress has never denied to that Bureau ample appropriations. It is one of the most important in the Department. It deals with one of the most important branches of our export trade.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. In the dim past somewhere the agricultural bill of this kind presented by the gentleman had some provision with reference to object-lesson roads, with large expenditures. Is there anything like that in this bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The same appropriation carried last year will be carried this year. The gentleman will find it on page 47 of the bill. I will read it:

Public road inquiries: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make inquiries in regard to the system of road management throughout the United States; to make investigations in regard to the best methods of road making, and the best kind of road-making materials in the several States; the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in conducting experiments in the city of Washington and elsewhere; and in collating, digesting, reporting, and illustrating the results of such experiments; to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the chemical and physical character of road materials, for the pay of experts, chemists, and laborers, for necessary apparatus and materials; traveling, and other necessary expenses, and for preparing and publishing bulletins and reports on this subject for distribution, and to enable him to assist the agricultural colleges and experiment stations in disseminating information on this subject, $20,000.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. What is the amount of the appropriation?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Twenty thousand dollars; the same as last year.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That does not embrace this large expenditure of a year or two ago on the subject of object-lesson roads?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Bureau has never carried a larger appropriation than that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I understood the appropriation bill one or two years ago provided something like $50,000 for the purpose of constructing roads of a mile in length in different States. There is nothing of that kind in the bill, I understand the gentleman.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think there was an effort on the floor to amend it in that particular, but the amendment did not carry.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Is there anything in this bill with reference to a retirement fund or pension list?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Nothing at all.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I would like to ask with reference to the scientific work provided for in this bill, in the Department of Agriculture, has it been increased or diminished?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It has been very largely increased, as the gentleman will see by the report I have just read.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I desire to ask especially with reference to the Division of Pomology and Plant Industry.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That comes under the Bureau of Plant Industry. That appropriation has been increased $105,000. The Plant Industry consists of five or six scientific divisions—the Division of Botany, the Division of Pomology, the Division of Vegetable Physiology and Pathology, and the Division of Agrostology and Experimental Gardens and Grounds, tea culture investigation, purchase and distribution of valuable seeds, etc.—and the appropriations for these several divisions have been made interchangeably.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. How do the appropriations in this bill correspond with the recommendations of the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are not equal to the recommendations of the Secretary of Agriculture, and yet all along the line we have made very liberal increases over last year, the increase in some cases amounting to from 10 to 50 per cent.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I understand that in perfecting this bill you have in the main disregarded the recommendations of the Secretary of Agriculture as to the amounts needed for experimental work.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I will not admit that. We have not followed his estimates in all cases, but we have increased liberally the amounts over those appropriated for the current year.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. As I understand, you have taken the estimates of the Secretary of Agriculture as to the pomological and scientific investigations.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. How about the horticultural work?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Do you mean the pathological work?

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In the pathological work he asked for $118,000 and we granted him $100,000, an increase over last year of $40,000.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Is it the opinion of the gentleman from New York in charge of this bill that the scientific work being pursued by the Secretary of Agriculture is of value to the country?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is of immense value.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. And that it ought to be kept up?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. To the maximum demand for it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; not to the maximum demand, but to meet the honest needs of the country.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Now, I understand that in the State of Michigan alone the investigations of what is known as the disease of "little peach" has saved the farmers of Michigan more than $250,000 in one year.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That subject, I will say to the gentleman, has been investigated for several years.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. The saving is very great——

Mr. WADSWORTH. No doubt about it.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. According to the estimate of one of the leading authorities in our State.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I want to say to the gentleman from Michigan that the work of the Agricultural Department has been magnificent. I use the word advisedly.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. In the provision for sugar-beet culture I understand that the estimate of $5,000 has been allowed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Just what was recommended.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. And the prevention of fruit-tree diseases——

Mr. WADSWORTH. That comes under the head of pathology. I want to say to the gentleman that he must remember that these scientific investigations have been going on for years.

Mr. SCOTT. And they are going to continue.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are not going to stop with this year. The committee have simply used their judgment as to the amounts which can be judiciously expended in the coming fiscal year. We do not stop the work with the exhaustion of the present appropriation.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Then it is a mere question of the judgment of the committee as to the amount of work that can be done.

Mr. WADSWORTH. As to the amount of money that can be judiciously expended during the coming fiscal year.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. That is the fact with reference to every appropriation bill from every committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The increase in this small bill during the last fiscal year and the present year will amount to $1,300,000. The bill has grown since 1897, when it was $3,183,000, to $5,158,570, an increase of $2,000,000 in four or five years.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. The gentleman from Massachusetts suggests that that is the usual custom in perfecting appropriation bills.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. No; not the increase. I mean that the cutting down of the estimates is almost invariably followed by every member of the Committee on Appropriations. The result is that the estimates are always made a little larger than they expect to get.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. If that has grown to be the custom, I think it rather a bad custom.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. So do I.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. In other words, the Secretary of Agriculture is supposed to be specially posted on that subject, and the Secretary of the Navy has given his branch of the Government special care and investigation, and we ought to take them at their word; and I am not in favor of crippling this branch of the Agricultural Department in the great work which it is doing.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Neither am I, and neither are the committee.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Our constituents would feel that we were recreant to our trust if we did not pursue these investigations as rapidly and as far as the Secretary of Agriculture thinks it prudent and necessary to go.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is simply a question as to how much can be profitably done during the coming fiscal year. You can only do about so much scientific work in a year and do it properly. A great many of these investigations are in the nature of gropings in the dark. You start in one direction and you find you have come to nothing, and you have got to come back and begin again. You have used up without profit a certain amount of money. You can not use it judiciously beyond a certain limit. The committee have always borne that in mind and have always been liberal in their appropriations.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman if he is through with his colloquy on the other side of the House?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Tennessee for a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to ask what this bill carries for what is known as the "Bureau of Soils," and also what are the results of the labors of that Bureau?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The bill carries for the Bureau of Soils $168,960. Last year it carried $109,140, being an increase of $59,820.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman be so kind as to tell the committee what this Bureau has done?

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the gentleman will turn to page 50 of the report of the Secretary of Agriculture he will see very briefly stated the result of the work of that Bureau.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman state in substance what that report says in reference to that subject?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It will take me a long time to do so, and I am sure I could not explain it in a shorter way than it has been put in print by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman tell us where this Bureau has had its officers at work—in what part of the country?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It has had its force in different parts of the country—Connecticut, Pennsylvania, and other States of the Union.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the report state where they have been operating?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman be so kind as to state——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, Kentucky, Pennsylvania, Connecticut; and they have applications for New York, Ohio, Wisconsin, Texas, and Florida.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the report state in what portion of Tennessee they operated?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; it does not.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does it state at what work they were engaged in Tennessee?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Soil analysis and tobacco investigation.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, that is what I was trying to ascertain. I very cordially supported the measure when it was pending here for the purpose of investigating the tobacco soil of the State of Tennessee and the other tobacco States. Tennessee furnishes so large an amount of tobacco for home consumption as well as foreign trade, and the tobacco people were very anxious to have the Bureau take charge and analyze their soil.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session,

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, Mr. Chairman, I propose to yield to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. TONGUE].

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Before you do that, I do not see the provision for seeds.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The provision for seeds is there.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. No provision for the distribution of shovels.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; nor pickaxes. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Only the free distribution of seeds.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Provision is made for the free distribution of seeds. Now I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. TONGUE].

Mr. CANDLER. Will the gentleman from New York permit me just a question before he does that?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. CANDLER. I see the appropriation for seed distribution is $180,000. I want to ask the gentleman if that is the same as last year?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Exactly the same as last year.

Mr. CANDLER. And $107,000 for farmers' bulletins. Is that the same as last year?

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is an increase of $30,000 for the Bureau of Publication. Last year there was a deficiency of $14,000. That was caused by ourselves, in ordering a lot of labor, and we did not make provision to pay for it; so we provided $14,000 on the urgent deficiency bill, and we have that $14,000 and $16,000, which makes an increase of $30,000.

Mr. CANDLER. And it is the same for seeds?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is the same for seeds.

Mr. BARNEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. BARNEY. Does this bill carry any appropriation for the publication of the horse book?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That comes under the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BARNEY. Has not this bill sometimes carried an appropriation of that kind?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It carried it some six or seven years ago, and it was very questionable whether it ought to be on this bill.

Mr. BARNEY. The gentleman knows that there is a greater demand for that book than for any other.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me say to the gentleman that Dr. Salmon, the head of the Bureau, advises that that book be reedited before another issue be printed, because there are many new things that they want embodied in it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What has been done as to "road building?" That is something very material for the improvement of the farmers of the country generally. What has been done in the Bureau? "Road building."

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is set out very clearly in the report, and the gentleman can read it for himself.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Oregon fifteen minutes.

Mr. TONGUE. Mr. Chairman, I ask the indulgence of the committee for the purpose of giving notice that at the proper time I shall endeavor to secure the adoption of the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "twenty," in line 11, page 48, after the word "subject," and insert the word "forty" in lieu thereof.

The amendment, if adopted, will increase the appropriation for "public road inquiries" from twenty to forty thousand dollars, the amount recommended and requested by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. Chairman, the present bill contains many items where the appropriation exceeds the amount carried in any previous bill. The total of these several increases aggregate $576,150.

The following table shows the appropriations made for the current fiscal year, and also those made by this bill for the coming fiscal year, for the different bureaus, divisions, and sections of the Department of Agriculture, and indicates specifically the increases contemplated by this bill:

	Current fiscal year.	1902-3.	Increase.
Office of Secretary	$71,670	$73,690	$2,020
Weather Bureau	1,148,320	1,251,760	103,440
Animal Industry	1,154,030	1,247,180	93,150
Plant Industry	496,680	601,780	105,100
Forestry	185,440	282,860	97,428
Chemistry	35,800	73,200	37,400
Soils	109,140	168,960	59,820
Entomology	36,200	57,200	21,000
Biology	32,800	45,600	12,800
Accounts	18,900	24,100	5,200
Publications	198,020	228,820	30,800
Experiment stations	789,000	792,000	3,000
Silk investigations	Nothing.	10,000	10,000
Total increase			581,150
But deducting $5,000 carried in last year's bill for preparing plans of new building for Department of Agriculture			5,000
Leaves a total net increase for administration purposes of			576,150

I have no intention of criticising a single increase. So far as a brief examination discloses, they are all worthy of careful and favorable consideration. There are no expenditures being made by the General Government from which the benefits are so valuable or universal as those made under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture. Certainly none are made where there is a more conscientious effort to secure the greatest amount of public good, and the public good alone, for every dollar of expenditure. But, Mr. Chairman, there is no object which this bill attempts to secure which is more important, or from which the benefits would be so great or so universal or would reach so many people—and people so much needing them—as the improvement of our common roads, the common property of all the people.

There is no greater subject with which we are called upon to deal than improving the means, extending the facilities, and reducing the cost of transportation. There is no branch of transportation where improvement has been so retarded, or is so imperatively needed, and is yet so universally neglected as transportation on our common roads. In the agricultural appropriation bill passed last year, and carrying $4,577,420, no appropriation proportionally to this amount produced so much good as the $20,000 for "public-road inquiries."

The movement for good roads is important in many ways. It concerns not only the pockets, but the health, the tastes, and even the morals of the people. Problems of transportation have always been, are now, and will continue to be of pressing and exceptional importance. They have engaged the attention of governments, ancient and modern—European, Asiatic, African, and American. They are attracting the attention of private enterprises, and the greatest combinations of capital in the world are endeavoring to control and monopolize the avenues and means of transportation.

Our own Government, in its efforts to furnish increased facilities for water transportation, has expended for the improvement of its rivers and harbors alone the sum of $396,600,720.50, and yet it has only fairly begun this important work. In 1862 the total cash appropriated for the improvement of rivers and harbors was $20,000. In 1899 this had increased to the sum of $40,307,779.48. The House of Representatives a short time ago passed a bill which in the cash appropriated and the amount which the Secretary of War is authorized to expend under contracts exceeds $60,000,000. As attesting the interest of the nation in the class of transportation that this expenditure is intended to improve is the fact that the bill passed the House with scarcely a dissenting vote. Last week the Senate added to this $10,000,000, and then in two hours passed it without a single dissenting vote. In aid of railroad transportation and to assist in the building of Pacific railroads the Federal Government has paid, principal and interest, upon guaranteed debts, $138,102,919.88.

In addition to this, it has granted, as an inducement for the construction of these railroads, an enormous amount of land, aggregating 196,569,372 acres. It is true the money advanced has been largely repaid, but the lands granted as a gift to induce railroad construction equals a vast empire. It equals in area all of the States of New England, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, both of the Virginias, and the State of Ohio. While the Government has dealt so liberally, expending hundreds of millions of dollars, and granting a wealth of land beyond computation for the improvement of water and railroad transportation, it has been painfully parsimonious in its appropriation for the improvement of common highways. Over these highways a large proportion of this vast commerce that goes to form the great railroad and steamboat tonnage must first pass.

In addition to this, millions upon millions of tons of local traffic constantly pass over these roads, and to which no other transportation is available. It is believed that the tonnage of freight and the number of persons carried over common highways equals, if it does not exceed, the tonnage and passengers carried by every railroad train and steamboat in the land. Yet during the last forty years the Federal Government has expended for the improvement of these roads the small sum of $100,000. What has been the result? Just such as might have been expected.

Encouraged by the liberal aid extended by the Federal Government private corporations have expended for the construction, the improvement, and equipment of American railroads the sum of $11,491,054,960. They have constructed, equipped, and are operating within the United States 192,940.67 miles of railroad, or enough to encircle the earth eight times at the equator. Millions of money have been expended in building and equipping the finest vessels in the world, engaged in the lake, river, and coastwise transportation, and which in quality, speed, and beauty are unsurpassed by those of any other nation. In railroad and water transportation we have bounded forward with a speed and rapidity beyond the wildest hopes, while in wagon transportation we have remained stationary or are moving backward. In railroad and water transportation we excel all competitors. In the condition of our common roads we are behind the least civilized nations of the Old World.

In 1870 it cost to ship wheat from Chicago to New York by an all-rail route 33.3 cents per bushel. Now, over the same route, it costs 9.96 cents per bushel, less than one-third of what it cost then. In 1870 it cost to ship a bushel of wheat between the same points on the lake and canal route 17.11 cents. For the same freight over the same route now it costs 4.42 cents, practically one-fourth of the former cost. A short time ago the secretary of the Boston Chamber of Commerce wrote me that fifteen or twenty years ago it cost to ship a ton of provisions from Boston to Liverpool $10. It costs now $1.75; to ship a ton of flour then $7.50, now $1.25. To ship a bushel of grain then 16 cents, against 2 cents now. To ship a bale of cotton then 2½ cents per pound; it costs 50 cents per bale now; $30 per head for cattle then, $6.25 now.

Thirty years ago it cost the Western farmer to ship a bushel of wheat from Chicago to Liverpool by an all-water route 33.11 cents. It costs to ship a bushel of wheat over the same route now 6.42 cents. The struggle with foreign competitors, in order to preserve our markets, maintain our trade and commerce, has forced us to rapid and unusual improvements in this class of transportation. During the same period there has been no improvement or reduction of cost, but rather, with increase of wages, an increased cost in wagon transportation. It costs the Western farmer as much to transport a ton of wheat from his granary to the railroad station or steamboat, 5 miles distant, as it does to ship the same freight from Boston, New York, or any great Atlantic port to the city of Liverpool. It costs the farmer along the line of the Northern Pacific or Great Northern Railroad, in the Northwest States and Territories, as much to transport the wheat from his farm to the railroad station, 20 or 25 miles distant, as it does to ship it from Duluth to Queenstown.

Rates of transportation concern every human being in the land. If a purchaser, they affect the value of his product; if a consumer, the price of his purchase. They determine the rise or fall, the prosperity or decay, the wealth or poverty of communities, great centers of trade and commerce, and even of nations themselves. Magnificent cities spring up in a night, the growth of long years sinks to speedy decay, with a change in the lines and rates of transportation. The conquest of markets, foreign and domestic, the balances of trade, frequently depend upon rates of transportation.

The most important problems that now concern the great West from which I come, and which produces in such abundance the healthful, nourishing, and luscious foods needed to feed the workmen in your factories and the crowded inhabitants of your cities, are problems of transportation. This explains why fruits of unsurpassed flavor and healthfulness, so needed in the East, rot under the trees of Western orchards. It explains why timber of unexcelled quality, which could be made into homes for the homeless in the East, on the Pacific coast is cut down and destroyed as something that encumbers the ground.

A few years ago our fields and farms and orchards and flocks were neglected, while in the East men, women, and children cried for bread upon which they were unable to pay the transportation charges. You are now paying 30 cents per pound for beef bought from the Western farmer for 6 to 7 cents per pound. It is because of these things that so many of us are praying with all the fervor of our souls that the Senate of the United States will deliberate less and act more and will cease talking long enough to do business and pass the bill for the construction of an isthmian canal. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, the American people paid for railroad transportation $1,579,570,830. We are said to pay to foreign ships alone for carrying our commerce to and from the United States $200,000,000 annually. The amount paid for ocean transportation upon American vessels, for water transportation upon the rivers, lakes, and in the coastwise trade is beyond computation.

It is safe to say that every dollar of money in the United States—gold and silver and paper, large denominations and subsidiary—is paid out every year of our existence for railroad and water transportation alone, and yet by far the greater part of the runs and rivulets that feed and swell these great streams of commerce run along our public roads, the common highways and common property of all the people. This probably is true, in a smaller degree, regarding the products of mines, but it is almost wholly true as regards the products of agriculture. In order to realize the full benefits of the sums we have expended and the improvements we have achieved by rail and steamboat, there should be a corresponding improvement in our common roads.

The common road leads to the railroad station and to the wharf upon the bank of lake or river. The stream can not rise higher than the fountain. Without the common highway and the farm wagon iron rails would rust upon the track and steamboats rot at the wharf. While great combinations of capital are seeking to monopolize and control the water and railroad routes, for the improvement of which the Government has expended so much, the common highways belong to all of the people of the United States. No combination of capital can monopolize or control them. Their benefits, like the dews of heaven, descend alike upon the just and the unjust, the millionaire and the pauper, the child of the poor as well as the child of the rich.

The people's money expended for their improvement will bless all the people. There will be no percentage deducted to increase the full coffers of those already rich. The cost of transportation constitutes the largest item of the expenditures of the American people. An annual saving of 5 per cent of this would represent an amount exceeding the output of every gold mine in the land. A saving for transportation of persons and property over the common roads would be more widely diffused, would inure to the benefit of more people, and to more people who need it, than a decrease on any other expenditure.

I need not dwell upon the importance of good roads as they affect the transportation of persons. They give us increased time and increase of pleasure. We accomplish more, see more of life, live more and longer in one year than our ancestors in ten. Time is becoming of supreme importance. Quickness of change from place to place, speed with which the powers of man can be transferred from one point to another, was never so much desired as now. Speed in transportation is economy of time, and the adage that "time is money" was never truer than now. But I shall not stop to dwell upon this phase of the subject.

Good roads do not only concern our pockets. They may become the instrumentalities for improved health, increased happiness, and pleasure, for refining tastes, strengthening, broadening, and elevating the character. The toiler in the great city must have rest and recreation. Old and young, and especially the young, with character unformed, must and will sweeten the daily labor with some pleasure. It is not the hours of industry, but the hours devoted to pleasure that furnish the devil his opportunity. It is not while we are at work, but while we are at play, that temptations steal over the senses, put conscience to sleep, despoil manhood, and destroy character.

Healthful and innocent recreations and pleasures are national needs and national blessings. They are among the most important instrumentalities of moral reform. They are as essential to purity of mind and soul as to healthfulness of body. Out beyond the confines of the city, with its dust and dirt and filth, morally and physically, these are to be found, and good roads help to find them. What peace and inspiration with flowers and music, brooks and waterfalls! How the mountains, pointing heavenward, yesterday battling with storms, to-day bathed with sunshine, bid you to stand firm, walk erect, look upward, cherish hope, and for light and guidance to call upon the Creator of all light and of all wisdom.

How such scenes as those kindle the imagination of the poet, quicken and enlarge the conception of the artist, fire the soul of the orator, purify and elevate us all. But if love of action rather than contemplation and reflection tempts you, how the blood thrills and the spirits rise as one springs lightly into the saddle, caresses the slender neck of an equine beauty, grasps firmly the reins, bids farewell to the impurities of the city, and dashes into the hills and the valleys and the mountains to commune with nature and nature's God.

Or what joy more exquisite than when with pleasant companionship you dash along the smooth highway, while that king of the animal creation, next to woman, man's most cherished friend, an American trotter, with swelling muscles, arched neck, flashing eye, and nostrils aflame, answers every touch of the line, every tone of the voice, with a fresh burst of speed, carrying you along green fields, by murmuring brooks, blushing flowers, while the winds whisper through the leaves and the birds cheer you with their song. Beauty, fragrance, and music all around you; the blue dome of heaven above you, and the mountains the witnesses of your ecstatic pleasure. What poor city scene can so inspire poetic feeling, can so increase the love of the beautiful, can so elevate and broaden and strengthen the character, and so inspire us with reverence for the great Father of us all? But for the full enjoyment of such pleasures good roads are indispensable.

Another blessing to come with good roads will be the stimulus and encouragements to rural life, country life, if you will, farm life. The present tendency of population to rush into the great cities makes neither for the health, the character, the intelligence, nor the morals of the nation. It has been said that no living man can trace his ancestry on both sides to four generations of city residents. The brain and the brawn and the morals of the city are constantly replenished from the farm homes. The best home life is upon the farm, and the most sacred thing in America is the American home.

It lies at the foundation of our institutions, of our health, of our character, our prosperity, our happiness, here and hereafter. The snares and pitfalls set for our feet are not near the home. The pathways upon which stones are hardest and thorns sharpest are not those that lead to the sacred spot hallowed by a father's love and a mother's prayer. The bravest and best men, the purest and holiest women are those who best love, cherish, and protect the home. God guard well the American home, and this done, come all the powers of darkness and they shall not prevail against us.

Fatherhood and motherhood are nowhere more sacred, more holy, or better beloved than upon the farm. The ties of brotherhood and sisterhood are nowhere more sweet or tender. The fair flower of patriotism there reaches its greatest perfection. Every battlefield that marks the world's progress, or the victory of liberty over tyranny, right over wrong, has been deluged with the blood of farmers. In the hour of its greatest needs our country never called for help upon its stalwart yeomen when the cry was unheeded. The American farmer hides neither from the recruiting officer nor the taxgatherer.

The sons and daughters of American farmers are filling the seminaries and colleges and universities of the land. From the American home have gone in the past, as they are going now, leaders in literature, the arts and sciences, presidents of great universities, the heads of great industrial enterprises, governors of States, members of Congress in House and Senate. They have filled the benches of the Supreme Court, the chairs of the Cabinet, and the greatest executive office in the civilized world. Our greatest jurist was a Virginia farmer; our greatest soldier, our greatest orators, the godlike Webster and the "Mill Boy of the Slashes," our three greatest Presidents—Washington, Lincoln, and McKinley, whose fame is immortal—drew life and inspiration from rural homes.

The typical American to-day is the American farmer. The city life, with its bustle and stir, its hurry and rush, its feverish anxiety for wealth, position, and rank in society, its fretting over ceremonies and precedents, is breaking down the health and intellect and the morals of its inhabitants. These must be replenished from the rural home. Whatever shall tend to create a love for country life, to decrease the rush for the city, instill a desire to dwell in the society of nature, will make for the health, the happiness, the refinement, the moral and intellectual improvement of the people. Nothing will contribute more to this than the improvement of our common roads to facilitate the means of communication between one section of the country and the other, and between all and the city.

I commend the work now being carried on by the Department of Agriculture under the superintendency and control and management of Director Dodge. In proportion to the expenditure of public money no work is now being carried on by the General Government that will bring so much good to so many people, and particularly to so many of those whom we call the common people, and whom Lincoln said God must love because he created so many of them. This work merits the most considerate and liberal treatment from American statesmen. The work should be carried on in every State of the Union. I would like to have the appropriation large enough to enable Director Dodge and his able assistants to come and bring their machinery to the great West.

It has been our good fortune to receive a visit from his great chieftain, who inherits the patriotism of a Wallace, the courage of a Bruce, and the chivalry of a Douglas—that member of the Cabinet who, more than all others, has the warmest place in the hearts of the Western farmer. We will give them a genuine Western welcome, than which none is more sincere or comes more direct from the heart. We promise them such a country and such scenery as their eyes have never beheld, a climate of unsurpassed healthfulness, a land more beautiful than the garden of Eden, richer than the valleys of the Nile, and grander than the Alps of Switzerland.

At noonday they can recline beneath the shades of forest giants, towering 260 feet above them, through whose branches sigh the spirit of ages, and upon which linger longest the last rays of the setting sun, as it leaves the Western continent on its journey around the world. They can refresh themselves with fruits fit for the gods, and gladden their eyes with flowers that never fade. They may look out upon rich prairies bearing upon their bosoms magnificent crops, orchards burdened with fruits rich with imprisoned sunshine, and pastures upon which graze the choicest of flocks and herds.

Under the July sun they may gaze upon the whitened summits of our snow-capped mountains, the majestic Hood, the beautiful St. Helens, Mount Adams, the Three Sisters, Mount Rainier, Mount Shasta, and Mount Jefferson. They can witness a combination of beauty and grandeur not equaled in any other land, and when their day's work is done they may sink to rest to the murmur of the ocean, the music of the waterfall, and the sound of the many waters, no longer lost "in the continuous woods where rolls the Oregon," but surrounded by a happy and prosperous people, while the mountains, like armed sentinels, keep watch and guard over their peaceful slumbers.

Mr. FOX. Mr. Chairman, I want to avail myself of the time accorded me to discuss the question of suffrage and the right of Congressional representation in the State of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, this discussion is not of my seeking, and I regret for some reasons that it has been precipitated in this House, but there is on this question so much of ignorance, so much of prejudice, and, I am sorry to say, in some quarters so much of bitterness, that I hope a calm and dispassionate consideration of the question may contribute somewhat to a better understanding of the situation in Mississippi.

Mr. Chairman, let me say at the outset that the Mississippi constitution is the product of great lawyers and of a wise, sincere Christian statesmanship, and that, as a Mississippian, I am not here to apologize for it. I am not here to appeal to the generosity of this Congress. I am here to say that if the status quo to-day in Mississippi is right, if it is constitutional, if it is just, if it contributes to the promotion of the civilization of our people, then it ought to have the approbation and not the condemnation of all good citizens. If that constitution has incurred in any way the displeasure of the petty, two-by-four, politicians, it ought to have the support of every patriotic citizen in this country who wants to promote a Christian civilization.

Mr. Chairman, as I have said, we do not ask you to be generous; we only ask you to be just, and if, in order to protect our civilization, in order to secure the rule of virtue, of intelligence, we have justly incurred the penalty of the reduction of our representation in Congress, then we will take our medicine rather than surrender our civilization.

I contend, Mr. Chairman, that there is no feature of the suffrage provision of the constitution of Mississippi that denies to any citizen the right to vote or abridges that right, within the meaning of the fourteenth amendment, in such a way as to incur the penalty of a reduction of our representation in Congress, which is based upon the entire population of the States, without regard to illiteracy, pauperism, nationality, or citizenship.

In order that we may fully understand this question and determine whether or not Mississippi has denied the right to vote to any of its citizens so as to incur the penalty of a reduction of representation, it is proper to determine in the first place who has the right to vote in Mississippi or in any other State.

Whence does the right to vote arise? What is the right to vote which you can not deny to a citizen without incurring this penalty? There are two opinions about the right of suffrage, Mr. Chairman. One is the opinion expressed by the politician, and the other is the opinion maintained by the courts of the country and the great lawyers of the country. The last State platform of the Republican party in the State of Ohio declares that "the right of franchise is vouchsafed to every American citizen under the Federal Constitution." Mr. Chairman, if that is true, then there is not a State in this Union that is entitled to the representation in Congress that it now has.

In this country every woman is a citizen of the United States; every child born of American citizens is a citizen of the United States. There was a time when some lawyers had the same opinion which the gentleman who drew this platform entertained with respect to woman suffrage. They believed that the right to vote was an attribute of citizenship and was guaranteed to every citizen of the United States by the Federal Constitution. Believing this they began a proceeding in the courts of the State of Kentucky on behalf of Mrs. Virginia Minor to establish the right to vote. In that proceeding they made the same contention that was declared by the Republican party in the State of Ohio. They contended that because Mrs. Minor was an American citizen, and because the right of suffrage was an attribute of citizenship and guaranteed to every citizen by the Federal Constitution, therefore she had the right to vote.

That case went to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the opinion of that court is to be found in 21 Wallace, page 162. After an exhaustive review of the whole question the court concluded their opinion by saying that the Constitution of the United States does not confer the right of suffrage upon anyone. So that then the principle was forever established that the right to vote was not a right of citizenship; that no one in these United States—no citizen—receives his right to vote, if he has it, from the Constitution of the United States.

There is no word written in the statutes or in the organic law of these United States that confers the right to vote upon anybody. In the case of the United States against Reese, reported in 102 U. S., page 514, the defendants were indicted for refusing to receive and count the vote of a negro on the theory that as the fourteenth amendment made citizens of negroes, therefore it conferred upon that race the right to vote.

The Supreme Court of the United States in that case said:

> Before the adoption of the fifteenth amendment it was as much within the power of the State to exclude citizens of the United States from voting on account of race as it was on account of age, property, or education; that the fifteenth amendment does not confer the right of suffrage upon anyone, but simply prevents discrimination on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

It further declared that if citizens of one race having certain qualifications are permitted to vote, then those of another having the same qualifications must also be permitted to vote. That is the only right conferred by the fifteenth amendment. It is the right not to be discriminated against on account of race, color, or previous condition.

Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the House and the country to that statement of the court in this case, which clearly holds that it is at any time now within the power of any State to exclude citizens of the United States from voting on account of age, property, or education. There is nothing now in the organic law, or in any law, that prevents wholesale disfranchisement by any State of its citizens who do not possess the requisite educational qualification or such property qualification as the makers of the law may think they should have. It is now perfectly competent for a legislature to prescribe property and educational qualifications for the voters of the State, unless its own constitution prohibits it; and it is perfectly competent for a State to exclude from the right of voting any number of its citizens, provided that it is not done on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

I say there is no reason for which a State may not disfranchise any citizen of the United States except the one reason—race, color, or previous condition of servitude. You can not disfranchise on that ground, because the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution says that you shall not discriminate in that way. But it does not say that you may not disfranchise any number of both races who belong to the same class—for instance, who are criminals, or who are paupers, or who fail to pay a capitation tax, or who do not possess the required educational qualification.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. FOX. Certainly.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Under what clause of this agricultural bill is the gentleman discussing this proposition of colored suffrage? Perhaps it is under the provision with regard to "raising cane." [Laughter.]

Mr. FOX. We are trying to prevent you from "raising hell" among the agricultural population of Mississippi. [Laughter.] We are doing our best there to promote the industrial development of the State, to promote its moral elevation, and to promote education among its citizens.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Does not the gentleman think that the state or condition which he mentions—that of raising cane or of "raising hell"—is now in existence down in his locality?

Mr. FOX. I did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. The gentleman is familiar, I suppose, with the language he used about "raising hell"——

Mr. FOX. What is the question?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I say the condition which the gentleman mentions exists down in his State, does it not?

Mr. FOX. What condition?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. The condition the gentleman spoke of—"raising hell."

Mr. FOX. Yes, sir. You created it very many years ago. We are trying to get out of it.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Under the Constitution?

Mr. FOX. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped to appeal to the reason and patriotism of gentlemen like my friend from Michigan. Is it possible that we are not to be heard in making a fair presentation of the legal phases of this great question without its being sneered at by gentlemen who come here as Representatives of great districts of this Union and who ought to be in sympathy with us when we are trying to promote the elevation and the civilization of our people?

And it is purely the legal phase of this question that I am presenting now. I am not asking any favors from the gentleman from Michigan or from anybody else. I appeal to your sense of justice and your sense of right and your feeling of patriotism and your love of Christian civilization. And I would say another thing to the gentleman. I would commend to him the statement of the President of the United States after he had returned the other day from his little trip to Charleston—that before he went down there he was a good American citizen, but that he was a better one after having gone down there and learned something about our people and the situation there. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Will the gentleman permit another suggestion?

Mr. FOX. Yes; if you are sincere in it.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Certainly; I am always sincere, though perhaps I do not look sincere. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOX. I agree with you in the latter statement.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Well, I am glad we are in harmony on that proposition. But I was going to suggest that you also include in your remarks in regard to the President the estimate that you and other gentlemen have put upon him because he had the courage to invite the whitest black man of this nation, against the protest of the blackest white men of this nation, to eat at his table.

Mr. FOX. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is fair for the gentleman to divert me from a legal argument and try to induce me to discuss the social phases of this question. I want to say now that I have never had any quarrel with the President or with anybody else who saw proper to invite a black man to his table. Nobody ever heard me say anything about it or make any criticism of it. I say that it is a man's perfect right to fix, so far as he can, his own social status. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is none of my business what the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY C. SMITH] may see proper to do as to his table. He can extend the privilege of his home and he can extend the privilege of his family circle to anyone that he pleases to extend them to. It is nothing to me; it is none of my business.

He is the best judge of that, but I have only to say this, Mr. Chairman, that, so far as the colored people in the State of Mississippi are concerned, they are not seeking social equality, and the great leader of that race, to whom the gentleman alludes, is preaching a better doctrine to his race than is the gentleman from Michigan. He is trying to teach the people of his race to have respect enough for their own race and to have respect enough for themselves to be satisfied with the association of their own race and not seek to add to their importance by endeavoring to associate with others, and that doctrine has so thoroughly impregnated the minds of the race in Mississippi that they not only do not seek social equality with the whites but they have little respect for the white man who would put himself on a perfect social equality with them. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

When this question was discussed here in the House the other day I was annoyed that some of our friends on this side from the South expressed so much annoyance that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] would preach the doctrine of social equality between the two races, and I said that there is nothing in that that ought to annoy you or me, that every man has a right to select his associates in society so far as he can, but not to force it on us. You must allow us the same privilege you claim for yourselves. But, Mr. Chairman, I am sorry to have been diverted from a legal argument. I am here to discuss the legal phases of the question of suffrage. and what I do object to most seriously is an endeavor to force Mississippi to submit to a rule that is not equally applicable to Massachusetts and Connecticut and Vermont.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. In that connection, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FOX. Now, if you are going to ask me anything about the legal phase of this question I will yield, but not otherwise.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. It is right along your line.

Mr. FOX. Does the gentleman want to ask me a question about the law of this case? If so, I would be glad to enlighten him.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. That is my idea of it. Now, there has been a resolution introduced into this Congress by myself, providing that Congress shall fix the qualification of voters who vote for electors and members of Congress, an amendment to the Constitution to that effect, and that that qualification shall be uniform throughout the States of the Union.

Mr. FOX. Very well, we will discuss that question when it comes up, but that is not the question presented now. You admit yourself——

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Does not that meet the proposition that you now make?

Mr. FOX. No, sir. You admit yourself the correctness of my proposition by coming here and introducing an amendment to the Constitution authorizing Congress to fix the qualification of voters, which the Constitution does not now authorize and which this Congress does not now have the power to do; so we are agreed about that. It is the thing that I am contending, Mr. Chairman, that the right of suffrage comes not from Congress, comes not from any provision of the Constitution of the United States, but at present must come from the States which alone have the right to fix the qualifications of their voters.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Just another question. Are you not willing that the same qualification to vote shall exist in your State that exists in the other States of the Union?

Mr. FOX. You bet I am, and that is just exactly what we have done. We have fixed the qualifications of voters in Mississippi, following the example of the State of Massachusetts, except that they are not as restricted. I would not be willing to vote for the gentleman's bill, so far as that is concerned, if that is what he means, because I believe in the wisdom of our fathers; I believe that there was nothing wiser that characterized the work of the framers of the Constitution than to leave to the States the power to fix the qualifications of their own voters, because each State knows better the conditions within its borders and knows better what is best to promote civilization in that particular State than any other State or body does. I am not willing to have you fix the qualification of voters in Mississippi

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. In other words, by the wisdom of the fathers the gentleman means the wisdom of State rights.

Mr. FOX. Well, yes, if you say they were States-right men who made the Constitution. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And let me say to the gentleman that when that Constitution was framed every one of the 13 colonies except two or three already had State constitutions fixing the qualifications of their own voters, each one to suit itself, and there was no disposition upon the part of the framers of the Constitution to interfere with the status of each State.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will my friend yield for a question on a proposition of law?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Just now you stated the proposition very clearly that the right of suffrage comes from the State.

Mr. FOX. I was proceeding with that when I was interrupted by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to state to the gentleman from Michigan that the Supreme Court of the United States decided that in a case coming from his own State of Michigan, where the question of the electors of that State was raised in the case of McPherson v. Blacker.

Mr. FOX. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have said that it was the doctrine of the Republicans of Ohio—or whether so or not, it is declared in their last State platform—that the right of franchise is vouchsafed to every American citizen by the Federal Constitution. As against that the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of The United States v. Cruikshanks (92 U. S., 542), declared that the United States have no voters of their own in the States; that the right of suffrage is not an attribute of national citizenship; that the right to vote comes from the States.

Now, those are the two leading cases in the Supreme Court of the United States, and they have been followed up to this date by a number of decisions. Included among them is the case referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] that came up from the State of Michigan the case of McPherson v. Blacker (reported in 146 U. S. Reports, p. 1). They declare in that case that the right to vote comes from the State, but that the right of exemption from the prohibitive discrimination comes from the United States. That is the right that is protected by the fifteenth amendment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in the Michigan case the Supreme Court asked the question that I have asked, "What is the right to vote which the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution says you can not deny to any citizen without incurring the penalty of a reduction in representation in Congress?" And they answer that question and say that "the right to vote intended to be protected by the fourteenth amendment refers to the right to vote as established by the laws and constitutions of the States."

Now, Mr. Chairman, that is the thing to fix clearly in our minds at the very threshold of this discussion. What is the right to vote, and whence does it arise? The right to vote is not a natural right, as said by Mr. Cooley and other writers on constitutional law. It is not a right of citizenship, as said by the Supreme Court of the United States, and every lawyer and every judge in the United States that has ever delivered an opinion on the question that was not a purely political opinion. It is not a natural right. We are not born with it. We do not get it by reason of our citizenship. It does not come to us by reason of any provision in the Constitution of the United States.

It does not come to us by virtue of any statutes of the United States, as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY C. SMITH] is forced to acknowledge, by introducing his resolution to amend the Constitution of the United States. It comes from the State that confers it, and from the State alone. No citizen of a State has a right to go to the legislature of the State and say, "I have a right to vote which you can not deny or abridge." The man who can not read has no right to say to the legislature of his State, "I have a right to vote notwithstanding my illiteracy, and you can not disfranchise me."

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. FOX. Certainly.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Who conferred the right to vote upon the men who made the original thirteen States?

Mr. FOX. I have answered that question; that before the adoption of the Constitution of the United States each State had its own constitution. If the gentleman will read the history of the formation of the Constitution——

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I have read that.

Mr. FOX. Well, that is a complete answer.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. But the question I asked is, Who conferred the right to vote upon the men who made the State? Who conferred the right to vote upon the men who elected the first legislature? Before the States were made, who conferred the right upon anybody to vote?

Mr. FOX. I do not understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. You say that the right to vote was conferred by the thirteen States——

Mr. FOX. The gentleman must know that in the formation of every State there must be a beginning, if you want to discuss the abstract question, that the citizens of a new State get together and originate a constitution.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Do not overlook the question.

Mr. FOX. I can not run a kindergarten school here, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Before the thirteen original States were created, was not that a right of the citizen?

Mr. FOX. The thirteen original States had constitutions before the adoption of the Constitution of the United States. What I am now arguing is that we do not get the right to vote from the Constitution of the United States—that it existed before that time, and the gentleman must know that.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I am asking you who gave it to them.

Mr. FOX. I have answered you in perfect good faith, and I can not consume all of my time in a discussion of this simple proposition.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I am seeking in perfect good faith to get you to state who voted when the constitutions were made in the original thirteen States?

Mr. FOX. The people.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. And where did they get the right to vote?

Mr. FOX. They did something then as they do in the House occasionally, by unanimous consent. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Their rights were conferred by the Crown. Such as they first had in England they first got by the right of the sword itself, the inherent right to govern.

Mr. FOX. The gentleman must know, so far as that is concerned, that certain rights were granted by Magna Charta.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Then how is the right to vote conferred on you and me?

Mr. FOX. I must be permitted to answer the gentleman myself. I will read for your enlightenment. I am satisfied that you have not studied the legal phases of this question. Read what the great constitutional lawyers like Mr. Cooley and others, who have given a lifetime to the study of all the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, have said. They certainly knew something about it. Listen to what one of these great constitutional lawyers says. I suppose it will be admitted that there is no greater authority on the Constitution than Mr. Cooley, who has written three separate works on the Constitution, and he says that—

> Suffrage can not be the right of an individual, and why? For the simple reason that it does not exist for the benefit of the individual but for the benefit of the State itself. Suffrage must go to the individual, not as a right, but as a regulation which the State establishes as a means to perpetuate its own existence and of assuring to the people the blessings it was intended to secure.

So, Mr. Chairman, that is the whole philosophy of the right of suffrage. I must be permitted to give my own views.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. How can you make that consistent with the declaration of the gentleman from Mississippi, that it was won by the sword?

Mr. FOX. I can not enlighten a man like my friend, who will not listen.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I admit that the gentleman has been making a very fair statement——

Mr. FOX. You interrupt me before I get through with one statement.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I admit that the gentleman has been making a fair statement of the legal situation of the question and a very able one.

Mr. FOX. I decline to be interrupted further.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. If you really would like to enlighten me, I would like to go back to the original question. Have you any light on that subject?

Mr. FOX. If you will just sit still, I will give it to you. I may not be entirely competent to do so, but I am competent to tell you what the great lawyers of the country have said about it, and that ought to settle the case.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. From what are you reading?

Mr. FOX. From Cooley. From an article in the Washington Post, in this city. It is a paper that I prepared at the request of the press, and was published several weeks ago in the Washington Post. As a matter of convenience, instead of having the law books piled up around me, I am reading from it.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I did not recognize it as an official document.

Mr. FOX. Well, it is official, though it may not have the blue ribbons about it. It is all right.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is perfectly clear that a State can deny to any citizen the right which it alone confers. There is no doubt about that, and the only limitation in the world on the right is that fixed by the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which says that you shall not deny the right to vote to any man because he is white, because he is black, or because he is colored.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. In other words, if it is not planted upon either one of these grounds, the State has the right.

Mr. FOX. I do say that. I do say, further, that if it does deny the right to vote to any of its citizens in the sense contemplated by the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution, and it does abridge that right, then the citizen of the State can not complain, but that we do incur the penalty in the reduction of our representation. Why, there is no quarrel between us. We have got the right in Mississippi to say who of our citizens shall vote and who shall not vote, save only we can not say "you can not vote because you have been a slave, or because you are black, or because you are white."

We have the right to disfranchise any number of our citizens on any ground that the wisdom of the lawmakers think is proper if we are willing to incur the penalty of the reduction of representation in Congress. No lawyers ought to differ about the legal question, and it is purely a legal question. There is no use for any resolutions of investigation of the conditions to ascertain what the truth is as to any particular State. It is a legal question that any lawyer can determine for himself if he is willing to do it.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow me to ask this buestion?

Mr. FOX. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. What objection is there to a committee compiling the statutes and regulations with reference to the voters of the various States of the Union, including Massachusetts and Mississippi, and furnishing them in accessible form to this House, to the end that members of this House may pass upon the legal questions which the gentleman refers to?

Mr. FOX. I have made no objection to that.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. But the gentleman said there was no necessity for any investigation, and the Crumpacker resolution simply provides for an investigation for the presentation of the various statutes of the States, the various laws of the States, and the various regulations of the States, with information of a like character which will enable the membership of this House to determine whether or not any State has forfeited its right to any part of its representation under the fourteenth amendment.

Mr. FOX. I am not discussing the Crumpacker resolution.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. But I want to say, if the gentleman will permit——

Mr. FOX. I do not want the Crumpacker resolution injected into this speech, for I am making a legal argument. But if the gentleman from Iowa insists upon it, I want to say that the Crumpacker resolution does propose to investigate not only the law of the case, but the methods of the election in Mississippi.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The legal methods?

Mr. FOX. No, not the legal methods alone, but all the methods. I want to say——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If it was to investigate only the law, we could investigate that right here, because we have the law books here.

Mr. FOX. I want to say to my friend from Iowa—and he is my friend—that the reason we object to the investigation of the methods—the reason we do not assent to that—is that it is an imputation on our State as to our methods of conducting the elections in Mississippi, an imputation that it is not honest, and the Crumpacker resolution was gotten up purely and solely for political purposes, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I do not know that.

Mr. FOX. It has been charged in the press, in a great paper in Philadelphia conducted by a gentleman who has been a member of the Cabinet under this and a former Administration, that there have been tens of thousands of fraudulent votes cast in the city of Philadelphia, and there has been no movement on the part of this House to investigate that.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Does not the Crumpacker resolution provide for investigating Pennsylvania and Massachusetts as much as any other State?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. But the gentleman must admit that the purpose, spirit, and intention of the resolution is to look into three or four of the Southern States.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I do not think that is true. It is to investigate these other States as much as it is to investigate Mississippi.

Mr. FOX. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that the constitution of Mississippi was framed by great lawyers and by wise and patriotic statesmen, who were anxious to relieve the State of the horrible state of affairs existing during the period of reconstruction, and which it is not necessary for me here to recite. They are matters of history. The gentleman knows that, and it became necessary in order to save her civilization to disfranchise ignorance and crime and vice, and to secure the rule of virtue and intelligence. In undertaking to do that we looked to a part of the country that I am willing to say here has, perhaps in many respects the highest and best, civilization of any section in the United States; we went to New England, which is older in its history and has had the benefit of more experience than other sections of the country.

In Massachusetts they were confronted with the same condition of things when they framed their constitution. They were flooded with a great influx of ignorant foreigners, and they knew that they could not turn over the government to them, and so they disfranchised all illiterate voters. They have a grandfather clause in their constitution, as you will see, if you gentlemen will read it. They excepted from that provision everybody 60 years of age, and if a man is 60 years of age and isn't a grandfather, he ought to be. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. We all agree to that.

Mr. FOX. They went further than we did. They disfranchised all paupers, and we have no pauper qualification. We followed the illustrious example of Massachusetts, and the politicians in Congress have never complained of the State of Massachusetts, or of Connecticut, or of Vermont, in which State I had the delightful pleasure of spending three months last summer, and I want to say here that the wisdom of the constitution of that State is illustrated by the high character and reverence for law and order that exists among the people of Vermont. They provided in their constitution that a man must be of good behavior and of good moral character.

I insert here the franchise clauses of the constitutions of several States, including those of Mississippi:

MISSISSIPPI.

SEC. 240. All elections by the people shall be by ballot.

SEC. 241. Every male inhabitant of this State, except idiots, insane persons, and Indians not taxed, who is a citizen of the United States, 21 years old and upward, who has resided in this State two years and one year in the election district, or in the incorporated city or town in which he offers to vote, and who is duly registered as provided in this article, and who has never been convicted of bribery, burglary, theft, arson, obtaining money or goods under false pretenses, perjury, forgery, embezzlement, or bigamy, and who has paid, on or before the 1st of February of the year in which he shall offer to vote, all taxes which may have been legally required of him, and which he has had an opportunity of paying according to law, for the two preceding years, and who shall produce to the officers holding the election satisfactory evidence that he has paid said taxes, is declared to be a qualified elector; but any minister of the gospel in charge of an organized church shall be entitled to vote after six months' residence in the election district, if otherwise qualified.

SEC. 244. On and after the 1st day of January, A. D. 1892, every elector shall, in addition to the foregoing qualifications, be able to read any section of the constitution of this State; or he shall be able to understand the same when read to him, or give a reasonable interpretation thereof. A new registration shall be made before the next ensuing election after January the 1st, A. D. 1892.

MASSACHUSETTS.

ART. III. Every male citizen of 21 years of age and upwards (except paupers and persons under guardianship), who shall have resided within the Commonwealth one year, and within the town or district in which he may claim a right to vote, six calendar months next preceding any election of governor, lieutenant-governor, Senators or Representatives, and who shall have paid by himself or his parent, master, or guardian, any State or county tax which shall, within two years next preceding such election, have been assessed upon him in any town or district of this Commonwealth, and also every citizen who shall be by law exempted from taxation, and who shall be in all other respects qualified as above mentioned, shall have the right to vote in such election of governor, lieutenant-governor, Senators, and Representatives, and no other person shall be entitled to vote in such elections. Ratified by the people April 9, 1822, and still in force.

In 1857 the following amendment was added to the above provision of the constitution of Massachusetts:

"ART. XX. No person shall have the right to vote, or be eligible to office under the constitution of this Commonwealth, who shall not be able to read the constitution in the English language, and write his name: Provided, however, That the provisions of this amendment shall not apply to any person prevented by a physical disability from complying with its requisitions, nor to any person who now has the right to vote, nor to any person who shall be 60 years of age or upward at the time this amendment shall take effect."

In 1881 another amendment was added:

"ART. XXVIII. No person having served in the Army or Navy of the United States in time of war, and having been honorably discharged from such service, if otherwise qualified to vote, shall be disqualified therefor on account of being a pauper; or if a pauper, because of the nonpayment of a poll tax."

VERMONT.

"ART. 8. That all elections ought to be free and without corruption, and that all freemen having a sufficient, evident, common interest with and attachment to the community have a right to elect officers and to be elected into office, agreeably to the regulations made in this constitution."

By the plan or frame of government contained in the second chapter it is ordained that—

"SEC. 21. Every man of the full age of 21 years, having resided in this State for the space of one whole year next before the election of Representatives, and is of a quiet and peaceable behavior, and will take the following oath or affirmation, shall be entitled to all the privileges of a freeman of this State."

CONNECTICUT.

In Connecticut the constitution of 1818, as amended in 1845 and 1876, fixed the qualifications of electors thus:

"SEC. 2. Every (white) male citizen of the United States who shall have attained the age of 21 years, who shall have resided in this State for a term of one year next preceding and in the town in which he may offer himself to be admitted to the privileges of an elector at least six months next preceding the time he may so offer himself, and shall sustain a good moral character, shall, on his taking such oath as may be prescribed by law, be an elector."

By the eleventh amendment, adopted in October, 1855:

"Every person shall be able to read any article of the constitution or any section of the statutes of this State before being admitted an elector."

Now, such has been the organic law of these other States for years and years. You never heard any complaint made here in Congress about their action. But as soon as Mississippi sees proper to follow the example of those States in order to protect her civilization you come in here and because it is imagined that the persons disfranchised will vote the Republican ticket you undertake to raise a howl about it. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I would not support any measure with reference to Mississippi which I would not support with reference to Massachusetts. I want that distinctly understood.

Mr. FOX. I know you would not. When I said "you," I did not mean it personally. If the gentleman thinks I did, I take it back.

Mr. BREAZEALE. I would like to ask the gentleman this question, whether one of the chief objections to the Crumpacker resolution is not predicated upon the fact that the investigation proposed and the testimony to be adduced must necessarily be ex parte and partisan, and therefore unsafe as the basis of any conclusion? Is not that one of the chief objections?

Mr. FOX. Certainly; that is what I have stated. The investigation is for partisan purposes.

I do not wish to discuss that resolution in itself especially, but it will be remembered that when it was introduced here during the last Congress in the form of a bill by the gentleman from Indiana, it was made applicable to only four States which the gentleman named. And everybody knows that the pending resolution was intended to apply to a few Southern States. In fact a distinguished lawyer in that caucus in which the Crumpacker resolution was considered urged that this is not an indestructible Union of indestructible States, but that Mississippi having gone out of the Union and having been readmitted by an act of Congress stipulating that the right of suffrage should not be restricted in that State, therefore Mississippi does not have the same rights that Massachusetts has to fix the qualifications of its own voters.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Well, we are not bound by that.

Mr. FOX. I am discussing now the general sentiment about this matter. The unfortunate condition of things is that he is not bound by your proposition either. I wish he were.

In reference to this, Mr. Cooley says:

> When a State comes into the Union it is received on an equal footing with the original States and with all their rights and privileges. It must, therefore, have the same power to amend its constitution which is possessed by the other States, and a condition which should undertake to limit its power in this regard must, in a legal sense, be wholly inoperative.

Mr. Cooley cites in support of his position 3 Howard, 212; 10 Howard, 82; 18 Wall., 57; 125 United States, 1. This writer also cites the case of Williams v. Mississippi (170 United States, 213), in which the court, ignoring the act of Congress above referred to, holds that there is no provision in the present constitution of Mississippi which is in violation of any Federal law.

We may add that in the case of Texas v. White, the United States Supreme Court held that Mississippi and the other reconstructed States were never out of the Union, but that this was an indestructible Union of indestructible States.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Any man who would undertake to say that Mississippi is not loyal to the Union would be written down as a jackass, full fledged. [Applause.]

Mr. FOX. I thank the gentleman for that statement. I gladly yield for the applause. [Renewed applause.]

I will say sincerely that my heart goes out to the gentleman for that statement; and I am glad that the time has come when a citizen of the South or a member representing a Southern Congressional district does not have to get up on this floor and assert the loyalty of his people and undertake to prove it.

I have always had too much respect for my people, in view of the proof they have given of their loyalty to the Union, to get up here and assert that they are loyal, and that the war is over. You have never heard me do it. And for that very reason I say that the time has come when a Southern representative in Congress ought to be able to get up here and state his honest views on a question of governmental policy without looking around the corner and without apologizing.

This is purely a legal question that presents itself to us as lawyers; and in addition to that, it is a question that presents itself to us as Christians, if not as statesmen—as citizens anxious to promote the welfare and peace, the law and order, and the increased prosperity of every section of the Union, whether Democratic or Republican in political sentiment. And if, as I assert, there is no race question in Mississippi; if this constitution of Mississippi which we now have is satisfactory to both races; if it has had a tendency to elevate both; if it has had a tendency to promote law and order in the State and to promote harmony between the two races; to promote, I will say, the mutual love of both races as it exists there now, then nobody except a petty politician who cares nothing for the welfare of this country will seek to destroy the fabric which we have built up.

But I was proceeding to say that there is nothing in the constitution of Mississippi that denies the right to vote to anybody except for crime. Do you say that we have an educational qualification, and this denies the right to vote to anybody? It does not; it can not. Education is a qualification that any man can attain. It is not impossible; it is easy of attainment; and it is for the good of the citizen that he be required to attain it.

It takes no longer for a man to learn to read and write than the term of residence required by the constitution of every State in the Union to make a man a citizen. For instance, the State of Mississippi requires one year's residence before a man can vote. Every State of the Union prescribes some term of residence as a prerequisite for citizenship; and it is no greater hardship to require a man to learn to read before he can be allowed to vote than it is to require him to reside within the State for a certain length of time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended twelve minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. One moment. Mr. Chairman, I yield twelve minutes more to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. FOX. That is the view that Mr. Cooley takes of this question. Let me read:

> To require the payment of a capitation tax is no denial of suffrage; it is demanding only a performance of a public duty. Nor can it be said that ability to read is any denial of suffrage. To refuse to receive one's vote because of his color or because of natural equality or peculiarities, which it would be impossible for him to overcome, is plainly a denial of suffrage, but ability to read is something within the power of any man. It is not difficult to obtain it, and it is no hardship to require it. On the contrary, the requirement by indirection compels one to appropriate a personal benefit that he might otherwise neglect. It denies to no man the suffrage but the privileges tendered to all, subjected only to a condition that is beneficial in its performance, light in its burdens.

An educational qualification is not a denial, but only a regulation, of the right of suffrage, just as a law prohibiting the carrying of concealed weapons is not a denial of the constitutional right to bear arms, but only a regulation restricting that right to those who carry them unconcealed.

Now, I want to call the attention of the House to another provision in the franchise clause of our constitution, which requires the payment of a capitation tax. The payment of that tax is voluntary in Mississippi, but the payment of the tax for two years preceding the election is a requisite qualification of all voters.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I would suggest to the gentleman that it is the payment of all taxes as well as the poll tax; so that the rich must pay all the taxes.

Mr. FOX. Yes; but I am discussing now the poll tax. It will not be contended that any man who voluntarily disfranchises himself by the nonpayment of a capitation tax is denied the right of suffrage.

Mr. BREAZEALE. Has the right of the poll-tax requirement been recognized by Congress?

Mr. FOX. I would say to my friend that so far as that is concerned the franchise clause of the Mississippi constitution in toto has been recognized by the Supreme Court of the United States and passed upon in the case of the State of Mississippi v. Williams, in which there was no other question raised than the single question as to whether the suffrage clauses of the constitution of Mississippi were in violation of any provision of the Constitution of the United States. There was no other question in the case, and it was decided that there was no citizen of Mississippi disfranchised on account of race or color.

Now then, as to the payment of a poll tax as a qualification. The law of Mississippi requires that all poll-tax delinquents in each county shall be published in some newspaper, and I have here several county papers from Mississippi to which I wish to call attention. There are 3,000 in one county—nearly 3,000; I counted them; and I will submit it to the inspection of any gentleman—who voluntarily disfranchised themselves; that is, those of them who possess the other requisite qualification. Here is another paper.

I will call the attention of my friend from Michigan to the list in this paper, which shows which are colored and which are white who disfranchised themselves voluntarily by the nonpayment of the poll tax, and there are more white men in that list than colored men. There is no race question in it. Those marked with a "C" are colored; those not so marked are white. Some of them do it by carelessness and some of them do it designedly, because they would rather keep the $2 than to vote.

Now, I want to say to the House that so far as the effect of this constitution is concerned on the colored race, the wisdom of Mr. Isham T. Montgomery, a leading negro, who was a member of the constitutional convention which framed that constitution, and who voted for the franchise clause, has been fully vindicated. He voted for the franchise clause and argued that it would be for the elevation of his own race.

That man to-day is an appointee of President Roosevelt, holding a prominent Federal office, and living at the capital of Mississippi. He is a man of high character, a former servant of Jefferson Davis, and a stalwart Republican; and if any man in this House will take the pains to consult him he will learn something about the conditions there and learn that the result of the adoption of this constitution is not only satisfactory to the colored people in Mississippi, but it is also highly advantageous to them.

Mr. Chairman, the last census shows that out of about 200,000 negro men in Mississippi of voting age, 97,000 of those can read and write. Think of it—50 per cent of the negroes of the State have qualified themselves to vote, so far as the educational clause of the constitution of Mississippi is concerned, and they have done it by the generosity of their former masters. They pay no taxes.

Even the capitation tax which goes to the support of the school system of the State is voluntary, and I will say—and if I make a mistake about it, I hope some of my colleagues will correct me—that at least 95 per cent of the taxes paid for the support of the public schools, of which the negro race has all the advantages of the white, are paid by the white people of the State. And I want to say another thing, that Mississippi, without exception, pays more per capita to the support of public education, according to her wealth, than any State of the Union, Massachusetts not excepted.

Do not take my word for it. I telegraphed the superintendent of public education in the State of Mississippi the other day to send me the appropriations made for public education in the State of Mississippi, shared alike by white and black, and he sent me these figures:

Appropriations by the State of Mississippi for educational purposes, 1902 and 1903.

Summer normals	$10,000.00
Interest on Chickasaw school fund	111,146.10
Common schools	2,500,000.00
University of Mississippi	93,700.00
University of Mississippi, on land fund, 1900 and 1901	12,961.35
University of Mississippi, interest on land fund and seminary fund, both 1902 and 1903	81,446.19
Agricultural and Mechanical College	181,374.82
Agricultural and Mechanical College, interest account	37,132.50
Agricultural and Mechanical College, deficit on textile school	26,320.14
Alcorn Agricultural and Mechanical College	43,250.00
Alcorn Agricultural and Mechanical College, interest account	25,184.54
I. I. and C.	114,020.00
State Normal, Holly Springs	4,500.00
Total	3,241,035.63

And I will say that many more negro children attend the common schools than white. The census report will show that very many more negro children attend the public schools than white children.

Now, under our system each town of over 1,000 inhabitants has what we call a separate school district, in which we raise our own funds, levy our own taxes, and retain the money for the support of the school in that town. I wired the superintendent for information as to the amount expended in the separate school districts which are not included in this statement here, and he wires me that the total receipts are $412,449 and the disbursements $383,000 for last year. So it aggregates nearly $4,000,000, equally shared by both races.

Another thing. Much has been said about the "understanding clause" of the constitution of Mississippi. I hold here a contribution to the Mississippi Historical Society by a great lawyer who was a member of the convention that framed the constitution, and who voted against what is called the understanding clause; that is, the clause providing that if anyone is not able to read and write, but shows that he understands the constitution of Mississippi, he may register and vote, notwithstanding his illiteracy.

That has been attacked as a subterfuge. Here is a paper which I shall be glad to submit to any gentleman who would like to read it, entitled "Suffrage in Mississippi," in which he says that although he voted against that provision of the constitution, its wisdom has been vindicated by experience, and that there were more negroes in the State of Mississippi who had qualified under the understanding clause and who had registered and were now voting than whites.

I live in a county containing a large majority of negroes. I telegraphed the circuit clerk of that county, who is ex officio the registrar of voters in the county, for information as to how many whites and how many blacks had qualified under the understanding clause, and he wired me that since the adoption of the constitution in 1892, there had been in this county 5 white and 14 colored men registered under the understanding clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague may have the privilege of extending in the RECORD and of inserting certain documents and papers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that his colleague may extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I yield five minutes more to my colleague.

Mr. FOX. It should be remembered that under the Constitution representation in Congress is based on the entire population, without regard to age, sex, nativity, color, crime, pauperism, or citizenship. If it is important that those who vote should be entitled to representation in Congress, it is still more important that those who do not vote should have such representation, because in no other way do they have any voice in the Government.

In the State of Massachusetts, according to the last census, there are 843,465 males over 21 years of age. Of these only 367,283 voted in the last Congressional election. There are 347,000 foreign-born males over 21 years of age in that State. Of these only 146,000 are naturalized; so that there are over 200,000 men of voting age in that State who are not citizens and can not vote. Yet they are all included in the estimate of population made in order to determine the number of Representatives to which Massachusetts is entitled.

According to the last census there are 53,000 males over 21 years of age in that State that are illiterate and therefore disfranchised. There is no way of determining the number of paupers or of foreigners who can read and write their own language and can not read and write the English language, and who therefore can not vote under the Massachusetts constitution. From these figures it is evident that Massachusetts would suffer a loss of several Congressmen if her representation should be reduced in proportion to the number of her population who are disfranchised.

The committee have listened very patiently to me, and I do not care to occupy much further time. The other day in this House, after great discussion and deliberation, without a single dissenting vote, in order to protect the civilization of the Pacific slope, we passed a bill excluding from our shores and our ships the Chinese, a people who in many respects possess the highest and the oldest civilization on earth.

The representative of that country at this capital to-day is the peer of the representative of any nation on earth, so far as intelligence and high character are concerned, and he is a prime favorite with everybody in Washington, so far as I know. I do not exaggerate when I say that there are 10,000 Chinese and more who are in every respect the peers of Minister Wu. I voted for that bill because I thought the gentlemen of the Pacific slope understood conditions there better than I, and I was willing that they should solve their own local problems.

Now, what I want to ask in all fairness is, that if it is right to exclude not only from citizenship, but even from temporary residence in this country, these Chinese, in order to protect the civilization of California and Oregon, how much more justifiable is it to exclude from the right to vote, from the mighty and I might almost say the almighty power of the ballot, the governing power, those who have no qualifications for it, the ignorant and the criminal, in order to protect the civilization of Massachusetts and Mississippi? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

On motion of Mr. WADSWORTH, the committee rose; and Mr. DALZELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. POWERS of Maine, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13895) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and had come to no resolution thereon.

FOOD ADULTERATION, ETC.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I desire for a few moments to consider a bill which I believe is one of very great importance to the American people, hoping to make some remarks upon it that will show to the Senate the importance of the measure and with a hope that I may bring it up and get the matter under consideration during the present session of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3342) for preventing the adulteration, misbranding, and imitations of foods, beverages, candies, drugs, and condiments in the District of Columbia and the Territories, and for regulating interstate traffic therein, and for other purposes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, for the last quarter of a century nearly all the States of the Union have been struggling by their laws to purify the commercial atmosphere in food products in the several States. On account of the dual form of government, on account of the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution, it has been impossible to make these laws wholly effective throughout the States. It has been determined that failure on the part of Congress to act under that interstate clause is an expression of its will that all goods of any character shall have free access from one State to the other, and it has been further determined that the commerce clause affects the goods not only while in actual conveyance from one State to the other, but that in addition thereto it takes and carries with it the right to sell in the original packages in the State into which they are imported.

The effect of these decisions, Mr. President, has been to make every State the dumping ground of the offal of misbranded and deleterious and adulterated goods of every other State in the Union; and for the last ten years every one of these States has been appealing to Congress asking for supplemental legislation on the part of this body whereby it may be enabled to close up this great gap against which it has been exercising its utmost endeavors in the past few years to prevent the importation of adulterous foods into its territory.

Not only this, but we have been flooded for the last ten years with petitions from the food commissioners of these States and agricultural societies all over the agricultural States asking for legislation on this subject.

In addition to that, Mr. President, the Secretary of Agriculture has been unfailing in his endeavors to secure proper consideration of this great subject for the benefit of the agricultural class.

I desire, therefore, believing that it affects the agriculturist more than any other class of people, and representing that class in particular, to consider this subject from the agriculturist standpoint rather than from the standpoint of the manufacturer.

We have recommended from the Committee on Manufactures a substitute for the Hepburn bill introduced in the House and the Hansbrough bill introduced in the Senate, a substitute which we believe will meet all the requirements of these States, will assist them in making their laws effective, and which will produce no hardship against any dealer whatever. This legislation which we have recommended is not as drastic as that in those bills, and we believe that no legitimate objection whatever can be made to it.

The object of the State legislation in the last few years has been directed not so much toward the prohibition of the sale of adulterated or misbranded articles in its borders as to the matter of compelling those articles to unmask and to sell in their markets exactly for what they are. Therefore the bill which we have recommended is one, first, which deals only with interstate commerce and nothing else. It does not touch an article of food until it becomes a matter of interstate commerce. It lets go of that article of food the moment that it ceases to become interstate and is mingled in the general mass of property of any State. Not only this, but it does not prevent the transportation of deleterious, or misbranded, or adulterated articles of food, but simply compels them to be transported from one State to the other under their true name and under a proper label and nothing more, so that they are compelled to compete with other articles under their own banner.

Mr. President, there is another feature, and an important feature, in the matter of this pure-food legislation.

Most evil in its potency is this growing tendency of the public to look upon commercial fraud as a legitimate means to business success. And as this bill, if enacted into a law, will be the first great step the Government has ever taken to establish and insure a standard of national honor, and integrity, and truthfulness in the commercial relations of its people, I may be excused a brief reference to that feature of this subject which affects the character of every State in the Union.

Mr. President, rigid adherence to the rules of social, moral, and business integrity has always been the forerunner and marked the beginning of the rise of any country toward greatness. On the other hand, laxity in these lofty qualities has always been prophetic of and pointed to a country's decadence.

Dishonesty is an unnatural product of the human mind, and deceit is developed only as the offspring of necessity, which was itself necessitated by falsehood.

Destroy the first cause and you eliminate the effect—the necessity—for the second cause. The introduction of a drug or intoxicant into the physical body as a stimulant has produced the crises of danger and dissolution, when the system has adapted itself and changed to a certain extent every natural function of its organs to meet the unnatural invasion.

So, too, Mr. President, a most dire and critical period of danger to our body politic—of national danger—is reached when the public becomes inured to and looks with unconcern upon the wholesale fraud and falsehood in every character of business and commerce; and its natural inherent high standard of right is distorted or destroyed to adapt itself to this vice, to put its conscience to sleep and its sense of repugnance to death. Such sowing must by the inevitable law of unerring and unrelenting nature reap a harvest of blight and leave a scar upon our national character.

Mr. President, this is not a question which affects alone the health and purse of the people. It is a thousandfold greater than this. It affects the manhood of the American people—their honesty, their truthfulness, their sincerity, their ideals. It affects all that makes or tends to make a nation great and powerful, and which blesses it with longevity if not perpetuity.

The question is now raised whether this Government shall determine that its people shall be schooled in honesty or trickery, in candor or sophistry; and having determined that, whether it will force its determination on that question with a strong and unerring hand.

I know it is said you can not make people moral and honest by law; but no man will deny that you can make them immoral and dishonest by laxity of law—by surrounding them, schooling them, familiarizing them, or allowing them to be surrounded and familiarized, with every character of deceit. No thoughtful man will deny that.

I confess, Mr. President, that this feature of the proposed legislation has a deep and strong influence upon me—possibly more than that which deals with the health and pocketbook.

Dishonesty and decadence are inseparable companions. Integrity and progress are never strictly divorced. The traveler on any European tour is cautioned, while traveling through certain countries and making purchases, to always look after his change. No such caution is deemed necessary in other countries. One can not but be impressed with the truth that this caution is always directed against the dead and dying nations. In our science and philosophy we take cognizance of the fact that man is a product of his environment; that evolution is toward the betterment of an individual, is slow and tedious, but that dissolution is rapid and easy; that history shows us that the character of every nation is of slow, persistent, and steady growth, and the development of that character requires hundreds upon hundreds of years. On the other hand, history also shows us that the decadence of the character of any nationality requires but a few years for its completion.

The influence, Mr. President, of fraud is a continuing influence that permeates and colors the mind as certain as the sun does the skin. Long continued, it develops into a hereditary trait. When one sees unchecked deceit and dishonesty all around him, it tends to breed the same quality in him.

But I will confine myself to the immediate condition, which, I believe, calls, and calls loudly, for legislative action.

The extent of adulterations and misbranding of food products is appalling. Because these frauds for the most part have been against the purse and not the stomach, because for the most part the adulterated articles have not shown immediate deleterious results, the average citizen has been too much engrossed in securing sustenance for to-morrow to stop to avenge himself on account of a spurious food of to-day. This and the fact that the real aggressor, the manufacturer, is generally hundreds of miles away in another jurisdiction are two of the reasons why this growing wrong has not been met many years ago.

Mr. President, the man who would advocate the repeal of the laws of the country against counterfeiting money would be called insane. Why? Because we have been educated that the article which is to measure the value of all other articles of trade should be as near perfection as possible, and yet it is in itself but a production subject to increased or decreased volume, and has a greater or lesser purchasing power according to the demand. It is, however, more than a measure of value. It is a commodity of trade and exchange. It is personal property used enormously for barter or trade in other personal property.

Is, therefore, the proposition to withdraw all prohibitory laws and allow free counterfeiting of money much less sane than that counter proposition to make no law and to allow free counterfeiting of that which is to be traded for money? Is it less a crime to stamp dust or mud "flour" than to stamp lead as a silver dollar?

You punish a person because he purchases supposedly $25 worth of goods and pays for it in lead dollars. We consider that an enormous crime simply because he has given that which is valueless. And yet we make no attempt whatever to correct it, and we allow it to go without even a comment, when the other person has traded to him 20 cents worth of glucose for $25 worth of money.

But some objectors say if food is not deleterious no harm can be done. And we answer, Mr. President, that for all practical purposes copper is as good as gold, and if 90 per cent of copper were alloyed with gold it would be just as handy or convenient as a medium of exchange.

Another class of opposition go a step further and say it is unreasoning public prejudice that compels them to brand an article falsely; that glucose is more healthy than many fruit jellies; and because the public is so prejudiced that it will not see and acknowledge this truth, and that such prejudice ought not to destroy the manufacture of a perfectly wholesome article, prohibiting the manufacturer from selling it for an article against which there is no such unreasoning prejudice. But again, Mr. President, that same prejudice is what makes gold worth more than other metals. That same prejudice is what makes diamonds worth more than rhinestones.

Around this proposition of prejudice—unreasoning prejudice—crystallizes nearly all the objections to this legislation. The proposition of those who appeared before the committee, when boiled down, was a cold-blooded one. It was simply this: If the public does not know enough to appreciate a good, wholesome article, manufactured for its benefit in pure philanthropy and 90 per cent profit, the maker is justified in deceiving the public into purchasing it for another article which has not fallen under the ban of public prejudice.

Mr. President, nearly every human taste is an acquired one, and most business consists in catering to that taste; and any business which does not take that into consideration must suffer the consequences. Every year brings some new fad which enriches the lucky promoter. The honest wholesale milliner, however, who has half of a last year's antiquated stock on hand does not ask the privilege of selling it this year as the latest thing out.

The objectors to this legislation, who base their objection upon the ground that the sale of a good article should not be prohibited from sailing commercially under any banner, could as reasonably declare that the hat of four years ago is just as good and comfortable as one just made, and therefore the wholesale dealer has a right to send a shipment to a retail merchant advertised as "the latest Parisian style," and the retailer at some little country town or village should perpetuate that lie; that it is a mere matter of overcoming a fantastic and unreasoning feminine prejudice. This is a double crime against one class of our citizens, for whom I intend to speak.

Mr. President, the population of this country is divided into two nearly equal parts. The farmer and farm laborer on the one hand and the manufacturer and factory laborer on the other.

The whole attention of the Government for the past forty years has been absorbed in devising means to better and to increase our manufactures and our commerce, and for forty years the whole farming half of the country has peen paying tribute to this policy. That it has been a paying investment to them the greatness and universal prosperity of the country to-day will testify. But for forty years the farmer—the food producer—has voted in favor of giving the manufacturing population the benefit of his market, free from equal competition. He is the most patriotic and the least selfish person on the face of the earth. He has watched labor strike again and again. He has seen the manufacturers raise the scale of wages again and again to meet labor's demand, and then charge the difference to him—the farmer—in an advanced price on the manufactured article which he must purchase. And he has beheld this with perfect equanimity, because he wants to uplift the laborer and make for the American workman a happy home, forgetting in his philanthropy that for the number of hours work done the agricultural laborer—the farm laborer—is the poorest paid laborer in the United States.

Now, this farmer asks but very little in the line of reciprocity. For forty years, by his vote, he has given the market of the agricultural population to the American manufacturer. To-day he is asking of the manufacturing population just an open market for his productions, protected against fraud and falsehood, against spurious imitators and frauds, nothing more. The farmer asks this of the coal miner and the iron and woolen and cotton manufacturer. He asks only fair treatment. North Dakota asks this of Pennsylvania. South Dakota asks it of West Virginia. Minnesota asks it of Massachusetts, Nebraska of New York, and Omaha appeals to Pittsburg. And in this he asks for nothing that in the end will not be a blessing to every one of these States.

There are many Senators who can still remember the days of "wild-cat" money—of State bank issues. They know to what extent trade was demoralized and commerce crippled by the uncertainty in the value, or comparative values, of different moneys; they know the frauds that were perpetrated in the exchanges; they know that in the country towns this condition brought people to the old elementary methods of barter—so many dozen eggs for so many yards of cloth. They know the revival consequent upon the adoption of an exclusive national currency in all lines of business.

And as the evidence of the stability of our currency is a condition precedent for commercial success and commercial prosperity, so to a certain extent is confidence in the integrity of the goods which are purchased with that money a forerunner of commercial prosperity between our States.

Mr. President, great as is our trade to-day, still many a goodly industry has been driven to earth by spurious imitators. Surround these industries with an atmosphere of commercial honesty, give them the sunlight of truth, and a thousand buds will bloom afresh, and by their homely fragrance awaken a natural, healthful condition. All they need is a fair opportunity. A good, wholesome, pure article, known to be just what it is, has never yet gone begging for a market in the United States.

The greatest demoralizing influence on trade is to have the country flooded with counterfeit money to purchase good goods. The second greatest is to have the country flooded with counterfeit goods to trade for good money. The farmer no longer makes or sells his own pickles, although he can make better and healthier ones than any copperas-colored product in the world.

In the little cities and towns scattered like gems all over the agricultural States—cities of from two to ten thousand population in every county, the time is not far gone when the farmer could at least find a market for his garden, orchard, or dairy products. He could trade a gallon of good pickles, say, for a couple of pounds of good honey. He could trade everything he raised—butter, eggs, poultry, fruit, and jellies, for groceries. To-day he can take his gallon of pickles, worth 40 cents, and if he is able to sell it at all he may then purchase his two pounds of glucose honey, worth 6 cents.

The housewife takes her butter to town, worth every penny of 20 cents per pound. She is entitled to that. She is then only receiving a meager profit for her labor and her skill. She brings that to the merchant and the latter shows her a tub of butter which he has just purchased in the market for 12 cents per pound—fine-looking butter, butter yellow as gold, and which makes her own look inferior, and pale, and sickly—butter with a beautiful four-leaf clover stamp on it, each pound inclosed in a wrapper on which is a fairy landscape, a green verdant pasture, and a mild-eyed Jersey, one of those kind that appeals to the poetic fancy of certain Senators who are well acquainted with the poetic but never with the practical end of the cow.

The good wife is dazed. She does not understand how it can be done. At that price she could not make enough butter all summer to pay for the feed the cow consumed while she was dry in the winter, counting nothing for her labor. She does not know that this fine butter is made of lard from the entrails of a pig, the manner of whose death is a mystery; a little beef suet, a little milk, a little oil, some deodorizing agent, a little flavoring, all emulsified to produce this grand article, and which cost not to exceed 8 cents and worth not to exceed 3 cents per pound. She does not know that while her cow was dry four or five months of the year and very meager in her allowance half of the balance of the time this oleomargarine beast never goes dry, but her flow is constant and unfailing and will continue so to be so long as slaughter-houses exist. She can not compete against this conglomerate brute, and so she must sell her honest, wholesome product for a less price than this colored imitator.

In the spring of the year the farmer of North Dakota, who, perhaps, came from the eastern or middle section of the country, experiences a craving for some old-fashioned maple sirup. He wishes to give his family a treat, and he saves up some butter, worth in the markets 15 cents per pound, and he takes 10 pounds of that butter and buys a gallon of pure Vermont or Ohio maple sirup. It comes in a sealed can, and he knows it is pure maple sirup, not only because it says so on the can, but the wrapper has on it a colored picture of a sugar camp which would challenge the attention of the greatest art connoisseur in the country—a picture which depicts to him just the scenery around, with its woodland dells, and the manner in which this sirup is manufactured, and it is marked "Pure Vermont maple sirup." And he takes that home, as I myself have done many times, hoping against hope that I might just once find the true article; and you can imagine his disappointment when he pours out some dark, glutinous substance, colored with burnt sugar and flavored to taste—well, almost like anything in the world; there is no taste on earth that it does not resemble—only there is not one drop of maple or any other decent sirup in it.

"But," say some dealers who see in this a bill aimed at their business, "it is perhaps just as healthy, or better, than real maple sirup."

Mr. President, it does not injure a man's health to steal from him; but most men would rather take the chance of deleterious foods, of a little copperas in their peas, rather than have a 15-cent cheap concoction passed off on them for a $1.50 genuine article.

If I must give an honest dollar instead of a counterfeit, what right has the man who deals with me to give me bogus goods? Not only that. If the Government binds me by a law to use genuine money, what right has it to allow a condition which admits of a fraud like that on me by the use of a counterfeit article which is traded for that money?

And yet, Mr. President, by our silence we are educating people into the belief that this fraud and dishonesty is all right in business—asking them to look with placid unconcern on most rank deceit and robbery under the name of commerce and under the sanction of law. It is time to act, Mr. President.

This is not alone a crime against the purchaser. It is an equal crime against the honest merchant. He can not compete with this pictured fraud. He must lie or go out of many lines of business. It is unfair competition. That man—that merchant—is also entitled to protection.

In many of the Southern States they used to make what was called "open-kettle molasses." Every farmer made it. It found a good market. It was made from the very best ribbon cane. It gave quite an income at one time to the makers. The agricultural chemists declare that this is the very finest sirup known. To-day it is practically driven out of the market. It can not compete with colored and flavored glucose.

Take the case of sorghum. There is not a State in this Union that does not make sorghum molasses. Every farmer can raise it. Every farmer can make his own sorghum molasses. He is interested in this bill. He is interested, Mr. President, in this matter of legislation. It would mean to him millions of dollars a year. His business, however, in this line has been ruined because glucose is sold as molasses. It would mean millions of dollars a year to the farmers of the Northwest if they could get a good honest market for their product in sorghum.

Now, Mr. President, we can not always raise cereals on our Western farms. The example of the East to-day will be the example of the West in twenty or thirty years, if not in less time than that. If we look over the advertisements in our papers to-day we will find in Maine, in Vermont, in New Hampshire, and in Connecticut, abandoned farms advertised for summer homes. Why? Simply because they can not compete with the cereal raising of the Northwest, and they can not compete with the other articles of farm produce simply because of the adulterants which have come in conflict with their production, and thus the farms are compelled to be abandoned. That condition will sooner or later reach our Western States unless some character of relief is found.

All the sorghum now that is made is just enough for their own personal use. Then, also, take the case of jellies—pure fruit jellies. In nearly all the eastern or middle States every farmer has a good orchard. Time was when he could make and sell jellies from the fruits of that orchard at a reasonable profit. In Minnesota and Wisconsin there are thousands of acres of all character of wild fruit—plums, grapes, cranberries. These were made into jellies by the thrifty housewife. They found a ready market. They, too, have had to succumb to the onslaught of glucose.

A market for pure cider vinegar assisted the owner of every orchard in disposing of his apples of low grade which would not find ready purchasers in the market. It is perhaps true that not one-twentieth of the vinegar sold as "pure cider vinegar" has ever seen an apple.

Mr. President, a brief epitomized statement of some of the most common adulterants and misbranding might be in place here.

It is stated that it is almost impossible to get New Orleans molasses unless it is purchased direct at the plantation. After the New Orleans molasses reaches Chicago, New York, Philadelphia, or Baltimore you seldom get it pure. It is adulterated with glucose.

Apropos of maple sirup, Mr. Magruder, who is a merchant here in this city, said:

> Over ten years ago a man came up to me with a small vial and asked me what it was. "Why," I said, after tasting it, "that is maple sirup, but it is not as good as I have tasted." "Well," he said, "that is just what I came to see you about. There is not a bit of maple sirup or maple sugar in it. I am getting out a patent on it."

So, Mr. President, even codfish comes in for its share. Hake or any other cheap fish is cured like codfish, put up in small packages, and sold for that fish.

The market is full of vanilla beans from which the vanilla has first been extracted.

The oil from the nutmegs is extracted by a process known to the profession, the punctures filled with lime solution, and the nutmegs then go upon the market again. Apple peelings, cores, rotten and wormy apples are thrown in a vat together, and from the jelly product every kind of fruit jelly known to the trade is manufactured. Turnips go into our horse-radish and pumpkins into our apple butter.

Every character of liquor is made by using the cheapest wine bases and coloring and flavoring to imitate the genuine article. A quarter of a hundred different kinds of liquors, with that many different prices, come from the same vat. The preparation is given in the following recipe. Take brandy, for instance:

> To 40 gallons colored French spirits add 2 ounces of brandy oil, mix well, and add 1 quart of white sirup or glycerin. To imitate any particular brand, add a small quantity of the kind to be imitated. About 3 gallons to 40 will answer the purpose.

The country is flooded with this kind of brandy. That may be all right for the person who is addicted to its use; it may kill him a little quicker, but where it is prescribed by the doctor who knows the effect of pure brandy upon the system, and he gives a prescription for pure brandy and an adulterated article is furnished, he may be amazed and wonder at the opposite effect produced from a prescription which he supposed to be one adapted to the case.

Let us take stomach bitters. Here is a prescription:

> STOMACH BITTERS.
> Add 1 pound of stomach-bitter essence to half a gallon of alcohol or spirits, 188°; mix with 30 gallons proof spirits, and then add 10 gallons of water and 1 gallon of white sirup. Color with whisky coloring or German cherry juice. This will make a good, strong bitters that may be further reduced with water if a cheaper article is required.

I may say that most of the stomach bitters are a conglomerate mess of this kind.

Let us take the Rhine wine that is used here in the United States.

> Mix 1 pound of essence in 3 gallons of proof spirits and add to 37 gallons of rectified cider; then dissolve a pound of tartaric acid in half a gallon of hot water and add to suit the taste.

There we have got about one-half of the Rhine wine that is used in the United States.

The testimony of Dr. Bigelow, of the Bureau of Chemistry in the Department of Agriculture, is of special interest as bearing upon the misbranding of all oils as olive oil. The idea is quite prevalent that ordinary cotton-seed oil, which is sold extensively in France, comes back to this country bottled as olive oil. The researches of the Agricultural Department, however, do not seem to support this claim. There are strong reasons, however, for the supposition, based upon the fact that so great a proportion of the oil sold in this country as olive oil bears a foreign stamp.

The testimony shows, however, that most of these stamps are made wholly in this country, and that neither stamp, bottle, nor oil ever saw France. A large number of these labels were presented to the committee—labels that were taken from bottles especially purchased by the Agricultural Department, and each indicating that the material was manufactured in France. The product sold as olive oil consisted of corn oil, cotton-seed oil, peanut oil, and other oils. I quote from the examination of Dr. Bigelow:

> The CHAIRMAN. I have heard that there are some cotton-seed oils sold in the French market which are there mixed with a little olive oil and imported into this country as olive oil.
> Dr. BIGELOW. That statement is often made, and there is certainly a great deal of cotton-seed oil exported to France. During the last few years, however, we have examined a great many olive oils that were imported into this country, obtaining them through the customs officers, and we have not yet found any of them that contained cotton-seed oil. I do not mean to say that there are none imported, but we have no reason to think there are, although the statement is often made. I do not know that they are not.
> The oils marked "Olive oil" that are brought into this country are very frequently adulterated with peanut and sesame oils. They are also said to add, in foreign countries, sunflower and mustard oils, but we have not found them. We have only found peanut and sesame oils in our investigations of these "olive oils."
> Here is another label which recalls a very interesting interview I had with a clerk in Buffalo. They had two brands of "olive oil," as they were marked. One was American, they said; the other was imported. They looked very much alike. I asked the clerk if he could give me a quart bottle of the imported oil. He said he could bottle me one. I asked if his firm bottled it themselves. He said yes; and he finally admitted that those two samples of oil were bottled from the same barrel, and that they were both cotton-seed oil. The bottle he sold me is labeled "Olive oil, put up by Frères Du Peaux, Bordeaux, France."

Many samples of peanut and other oils were introduced in evidence, and the testimony shows upon the whole that the peanut and cotton-seed oil displaces, to a great extent, the pure olive oil in this country.

The olive-grower of California is entitled to protection against this counterfeit. In reference to olive oils, and as bearing upon the protection that is due the olive-growers of California, I quote this statement from Dr. Bigelow:

> There is one interesting point that might be mentioned in regard to olive oil. It is not generally known, I think, that it is possible to import European oils into this country, ship them across the country by rail, and put them on the market at San Francisco at a lower price than that for which the first-grade California olive oils can be made.
> The CHAIRMAN. Do you mean pure oils?
> Dr. BIGELOW. Well, we are not able to state definitely that they are not in some cases pure. Many of them are not.

The testimony of this same investigator shows that our wines of the cheapest character come into competition with the carefully manufactured and preserved product under a false coloring, flavor, and false pretenses.

Mr. President, I have an idea myself—possibly not founded upon expert knowledge—that, as a rule, vegetable oils are superior to animal fats; that cotton-seed oil is more healthy than lard. What I insist upon, and what I believe the public insists upon, is that they shall know when they are buying lard and when they are purchasing cotton-seed oil, when they are buying olive oil and when they are purchasing peanut oil. These may not be deemed injurious adulterations, so far as they relate to health. They are injurious so far as they relate to the morals and to the purse of the people of the country.

The deleteriously adulterated foods, however, form no inconsiderable percentage of the food products of the United States. The report of the Agricultural Department estimates that the amount of fraudulent adulterations reaches 15 per cent and injurious adulterations 2 per cent of the products consumed.

These estimates, however, were based upon figures obtained by the food commissioners of the several States, and then, to be conservative, by dividing such estimate by two. I believe, however, that the machinery for investigating matters of this kind has not been sufficiently perfected to ferret out but a small proportion of the real frauds practiced, and that we might safely increase, if not more than double, the estimate made by the Agricultural Department. But even taking the Department's estimate, the adulterated article amounts to $1,170,000,000 every year, and the deleterious adulterations to $156,000,000 per year. As I say, we can fully double this, and we would have almost $4,000,000,000 worth of commerce in adulterated articles. There is nothing that is not adulterated, unless it be potatoes, flour, and, to some extent, the ordinary uncanned meats.

No fair estimate can be placed upon the wholesale murder of our citizens by reason of both deleterious and misbranded articles being sold as genuine.

There is not one article, however wholesome, which is adapted to every individual. There is no individual, however healthy, who may with impunity use any article of food in these days of overtaxed nerves and weakened digestion. It is, perhaps, not going too far to say that the vast majority of the people must conform to some more or less rigid rule in reference to diet. No physician can prescribe or determine the results of any article of food upon the system of his patient unless he knows that the article prescribed and the article secured in conformity to the prescription is the genuine article.

Take the case of an infant. It comes into this world endowed with certain inheritances and legacies, one of which is the right to live, to grow up and develop, and reach the highest plane within the scope of its possibilities. It is perfectly helpless. It neither knows its requirements nor is capable of insisting upon them. In its sickness a physician is called in and prescribes a preparation for food. The life of that child may depend entirely on the character of the food purchased on that prescription. The prescription calls for milk and other materials. Now, the milk may be 30 per cent water. Water is healthful, but it is not the food the doctor prescribes. His skill and learning are rendered unavailable by a simple fraud, and the child dies. It may be only one life out of many, but it is an important life to those whose love gave it existence, surrounded it in its brief stay, and mourn its untimely end. And a government which has allowed that condition is derelict of a sacred duty, if not criminally negligent.

Again, a doctor may prescribe for either infant or adult condensed milk, a kind of malt milk which is presumed to be easily digested. Pursuant to his prescription, a can of condensed substance, marked "pure condensed" or "malted milk" is obtained. It is used as directed and with fatal results. An examination of this malted milk, or this condensed milk, shows that the milk from which it was made had first extracted from it, by an ordinary separator, the cream and butter substances in a proportion of 4 pounds to the hundred, and substituted in its place was deodorized lard, 4 pounds to the hundred, emulsified and sold as condensed milk. One of the most common cases of disease requiring a person to abstain from the most common article of food is that of diabetes. These patients must refrain from any character of starchy foods. Their lives depend upon it. They can use only the purely glutinous flour.

Now, take the markets here in the city of Washington. Dr. Bigelow, referring to a case like this, says:

> A number of years ago we examined about twelve or fifteen gluten flours obtained at random in the grocery stores of Washington, and of that number not more than two or three were really gluten flours.

Just think of the percentage of fraud there! More than 400 per cent of the entire amount was simply a fraudulent production of that which is prescribed for a certain class of patients, who necessarily must have the pure article.

Dr. Bigelow continues:

> The rest consisted of ordinary wheat flour—a perfectly wholesome product, one of the most wholesome on the market, but not what was required. The same is true of such nitrogenous foods as sausage, for instance, which is sometimes adulterated with 20 per cent or more of starch—a perfectly wholesome product, and yet not what is desired in certain cases.

Further on this line he says:

> We might go to exactly the opposite extreme and find illustrations of the same thing with carbohydrate foods that are mixed with proteids. For instance, there is on the market a prepared food which is sold for infants and invalids and contains an admixture of meat fiber. If this were fed to a patient who was being treated for nephritis or some kindred disease, we would have another illustration of the same general principle of which I was speaking.

Returning to the case of infants, he says:

> We know that very often in case of constipation the amount of cream in the mixtures that are fed to infants is increased, and if that is not sufficient it is often customary to add a little olive oil. Where that is prescribed it is olive oil that is desired. It is not cotton-seed oil, which is perhaps equally wholesome, but is not the same thing. It may not give the same results. It is not peanut oil that is desired. Olive oil is prescribed by the physician, and the information on which these prescriptions are based has been obtained with olive oil.

Now, in case of death as a result of this deception practiced upon the public, who is to be held responsible? The retail merchant, who buys but does not know that the article is not what it is represented to be; the manufacturer, who does not consider the special use for which the food may be prescribed; or the Government, which takes no steps to protect the lives of its citizens? I might not be injured in consuming that which comes to me under a false pretense, but I maintain that I should be protected against being misled into taking that which I do not want.

Mr. President, we have done much to eliminate filled cheese from our commerce. This filled cheese is manufactured by removing the butter fat from fresh milk by means of separators. The butter fat is made into butter in the same factories where the cheese is made. Then for every pound of butter fat which is removed a pound of neutral lard is substituted. The whole is emulsified and made back into cheese, just as the milk would be. Mr. Knight, of the National Dairy Union, referring to this subject, says:

> I can also say that the same thing is used in the manufacture of condensed milk. It is practically a filled milk. * * * They take milk and extract the fats from it, put this oleo oil into it, emulsify it, put it up in cans, and call it "condensed milk."

Mr. President, I have had some experience of that kind myself. In going into some three different stores and purchasing three brands every one of them was of the character described, having lard in them instead of pure cream.

> All the butter fat is gone out of it, you know. There are so many of these things being done that I could stand here almost all day and tell you of them; but I thought everything of the kind had already been covered.
> The CHAIRMAN. Q. You can see the importance of that matter where a doctor prescribes condensed milk for a child which is brought up on a bottle.
> Mr. KNIGHT. A. The difficulty in connection with those things is this: If there were only one grade of oleo oil it would be all right. But suppose they take this oleo oil that melts only at a temperature of 165, put it into milk, condense it, and it goes into a child's stomach. It is as indigestible as paraffin. You can not digest it; you can not melt it. I have some of this stearin in my possession now. You can bite it off and it will no more dissolve in your mouth than a piece of marble. They make tallow candles of it.

Speaking of the ice cream that is used, Mr. Knight says:

> To-day in making ice cream, instead of using real cream, as they used to do, the manufacturers will use condensed skim milk. They will take milk from which all the fat has been drawn and condense it until the liquid is as thick as cream; but it contains no fat whatever. The fat, of course, is the part that is valuable. That makes a very thick, white article like condensed milk, and they use that and neutral lard to make ice cream in place of real cream. Cream itself is now made in the city of Chicago from milk to which this condensed skimmed milk is added to make it thick. What is added is simply casein. All the fat that that cream will contain will be the 4 per cent that is in natural milk; but it will look thick and is thick and has all the consistency of cream. It is really the condensed product of the solids of the skimmed milk.

Mr. President, the oleomargarine bill that passed the Senate some time ago has failed to reach another insidious attack upon the product of the farmer's cow. It might be that an investigation would show that about as large a percentage of cream is fraudulent as the percentage of colored oleomargarine to butter.

This oleo oil is not alone used in the manufacture of butter and condensed milk, but to some extent forms the basis of caramel candies. Instead of using milk and cream they use beef fat, our oleo oil.

As I have stated, Mr. President, the principal objection to this bill has been made by those who wish to sell an article, not deleterious, possibly, to the ordinary individual, as something other than it is because of public prejudice. I beg to take the time to quote some of their testimony, in order that Senators may understand the character of the objections. I wish to say, however, in the outset, that but very few of these business houses in the United States are opposed to this bill. There are probably a half dozen or more of them that are; but the great majority are especially in favor of it, and they have signified their adhesion to the bill as it now stands by many letters and otherwise.

Mr. Miller, who represents the interests of Sprague, Warner & Co., dealers in food products, says:

> The CHAIRMAN. How do the provisions of the Hepburn bill injure the interests of any of these associations which you represent?
> A. Well, the Hepburn bill takes up the question of branding of articles. Now, for instance, you take glucose; that is an article with which the public is not familiar——
> The CHAIRMAN. The Hepburn bill requires that if glucose be sold in the market, it shall be as glucose and not as honey or maple sirup or any other kind of sirup. Now, how does that feature of the Hepburn bill become detrimental to the interest of your people?
> A. Whenever they are required to place that kind of label upon the product, a product which is admitted to be healthful, it destroys its sale.
> The CHAIRMAN. Don't you think the public might be educated to believe that such an article is healthy in some other manner than by denominating it maple sirup when it is not, than denominating it honey when it is not, even though equally healthy?
> A. Well, I would suggest this: If we want that kind of legislation, if we want things to be called by their right names, if we want true labels on articles of merchandise, that a bill be framed for that purpose and that all articles of merchandise be included.
> The CHAIRMAN. Other than food products?
> A. Certainly. My position is this: If we want such a law we should be frank enough to say so, and legislate for that purpose specifically and not do it under the cover of seeking to protect the public health. If we want legislation of that kind, let us frame a bill and include everything.
> The CHAIRMAN. Can not you see a clear distinction between eating glucose for honey and sleeping upon a basswood bed which is denominated mahogany?
> A. If glucose were admitted equally valuable as a food product, I say no.

I quote this testimony that you may see the character of the objections.

Mr. F. H. Madden, representative of the firm of Reid, Murdoch & Co., and others, states:

The CHAIRMAN. How are you going to protect the honest against the dishonest and unscrupulous manufacturer? How are you going to protect under that law the honest dealer who brands his goods, whatever they are, against the dishonest one?

That question referred to the law which made it simply an offense to sell deleterious articles or those of a poisonous character.

A. I do not quite get the intent of the question.

The CHAIRMAN. How are you going to protect the man who brands his goods honestly against the man who brands them dishonestly?

A. The only remedy, in my mind, would be to specifically legislate on each subject. I believe that once the question of deleteriousness or healthfulness of food is eliminated, that when the article is admitted to be pure and wholesome, it then becomes an article of merchandise, the same as any other article of merchandise. I think the consumer should have the same protection that he has in any other article of merchandise—no more, no less. We would be glad to sell every article under its true name, but we can not do it; we have tried it. It would compel us to sacrifice our profits, destroy our business, and disrupt our business almost entirely."

Mr. E. M. Newton, of Chicago, representative of the Commercial Exchange of that city, and connected with wholesale grocers and manufacturers, says:

There is but one point that I desire to make. There is a condition existing in this country which none of us are responsible for. Going back to the glucose proposition, sir, we are not responsible for the fact that probably ninety-nine out of every hundred mortals deem glucose injurious to health and to be a filthy product and not fit for human consumption, whereas as a matter of fact it is a clean, wholesome product, and is used to an extent—and must necessarily be used to an extent—that to prohibit its use would deprive a certain class of people of luxuries.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it not better to educate the people to a just idea or conception of the healthful qualities of glucose by advertising it as healthy, by having the Secretary of Agriculture, for instance, with a number of intelligent chemists he has under him, and these especially educated people to declare that it is a healthy article, rather than to mix it in an insidious form and attempt to sell it for something it is not, thereby inducing the people to believe, and educating them to believe, that it is a deleterious substance?

A. That is a question which would impose upon the merchants the burden of bringing about an educational feature which would take years and years of time. In the meantime what becomes of our business?

Senator HARRIS. Should the merchant not be the very man to do that, if he is selling that article?

The CHAIRMAN. It would seem that the glucose man would be interested in having the glucose sold for a healthy article?

A. Sir, it would take all of our profits and all of our time, and I think it would go beyond that, take more than our profits. We simply would have to adjust ourselves to an absolutely different condition of affairs.

That seemed, Mr. President, to be the only serious objection to this bill. To the same effect is the testimony of Mr. Walter H. Williams, representing the Association of Manufacturers and Distributers of Food Products, of Detroit, Mich.

He is supported by Mr. George A. Scherer, of Peoria, Ill., representing the National Retail Grocers' Association. This gentleman says:

The CHAIRMAN. Don't you believe all commercial business would be just as well and just as profitable if all the commerce were conducted upon an honest basis, selling just exactly what one has for sale for just exactly what it is, rather than to continue to insidiously introduce and sell a thing for other than what it actually is? If we adjust ourselves to those conditions, don't you believe it would result in benefit to every line of commerce?

A. I believe when you undertake by law to make all people perfectly honest in their dealings that you have got a very large job on hand.

The CHAIRMAN. You would not cease attempting, would you?

A. I want to say that I agree with you perfectly in theory, to the letter, and I should be glad to give you my full influence among my constituents, so far as that may go, and if you can establish the millenium right here, I am with you.

For an exposition of the other side of the question by the representatives of retail merchants, I call attention to the testimony of Mr. Albert Kaiser, representing the Retail Merchants' Association of Pennsylvania, and others, found on page 51, Senate Report 972.

Most of these merchants, and I may say 99 per cent of them, favor this bill. They wish to deal honestly, but they wish others to do the same thing, so that they may be able to compete with them upon an honest basis. The honest merchant and the producer are forced to come into competition with this character of commerce. There is scarcely an article in the grocery line, except a few of the staples, that is not forced to compete with these counterfeits. So the honest retailer is also entitled to protection. It is not competition that he is compelled to meet. Competition is one thing; insidious fraud is another.

But, Mr. President, it has been suggested that the introduction of all of these spurious articles is a benefit to the laborer; that by striking down the better article, or at least the real article, it makes it cheaper and brings it to the reduced scale of the selling price of its imitator; that thereby the laborer gets cheaper sirup and cheaper butter, even where he purchases the real article.

This argument, Mr. President, is as deceitful as the interest it purposes to support. If these counterfeit articles are just as good as the others, the result will be, if this legislation goes into effect, that by being compelled to disclose their character they can be purchased for perhaps half or a quarter of what they are now bringing, and the laborer will therefore be benefited and the manufacturer receive an honest profit, while the real article—the good butter, the good sirup, the pure jellies, the real cream—will bring in the market a price fixed by the demand for such genuine articles, and no more.

This bill purposes to protect the producers of genuine articles. It is throwing around a certain class of manufacturers or producers—the agricultural class, for the most part—the protection policy of the Government, which has heretofore been protecting the interest, and still continues to protect the interest, of the laborer; and it is a poor example of gratitude, a poor example of reciprocity, for the laborer, who has received the vote of the farmer to protect him, so that the articles which he produces would bring a higher price and he could receive better wages, to say, "We oppose this legislation because it will enhance the value of the products of those who have so generously voted us this favor."

To-day we talk of Cuban reciprocity. We talk of a charity that is due to Cuba. We have simply given Cuba her liberty. We have expended our blood and our treasure to the amount of about $300,000,000, and they say that now we owe them the duty of reciprocity. If that be true, I will ask you if we do not owe a greater duty of reciprocity to the agricultural class of our own country, consisting of more than 35,000,000 people; if they are not entitled to reciprocal relations with the other parts of the United States so that they may sell their products without coming into competition with any character of fraud which may be imposed upon the public?

Mr. President, two industries make the sum total of the business of my State—farming and stock raising—the former including the dairy interest. The prosperity of our State depends upon the prosperity in those two branches of industry. All commercial and mercantile interests are bottomed on those two industries.

Every article which our farmer and stockman requires and must have is by this Government protected. The plows and the reapers, the saddles and harness, every hammer and nail, every saw and ax, every hoe and spade and fork, every pound of wire, and every article of hardware, his knives and dishes, every article of clothing from his hat to his shoes, the very books his children read and the songs they sing are protected by law.

And when these people come to Congress and ask that their products be protected against sophistry and falsehood, against deceit and counterfeit, against imitated adulterants and lying brands, they are not blind to the fact that they are asking the payment of a just debt long past due. They know that, in balancing up the benefits derived from national legislation, there is a good, big balance to their credit. They ask that this debt be partially satisfied by the removal of these bogus obstacles which block the progress and destroy the profitableness of their own sales.

Mr. President, do we want any stronger evidence of the widespread demand for legislation than the fact that nearly all of our States have passed pure-food laws—stringent laws—to check this evergrowing evil? Do the many societies organized all over this country, State and national, to further the interest of pure food signify nothing of the importance of this subject?

Does not the hearty approval of this legislation by the Secretary of Agriculture, the earnest and zealous efforts of one who represents the agricultural people of the country, whose every want he knows and whose every interest he sacredly guards, carry a conviction as to the propriety and necessity for this legislation?

But the States' legislation has not proved a success. They have attempted to fence against this forbidden trespasser; they have builded well, but there is a dividing line where their jurisdiction comes in juxtaposition with that of the Federal Government, and right here is a gap wide enough to render almost useless the other precautions. It is the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution which forbids the State from closing that gap—forbids it from prohibiting the importation and sale of any articles in original packages condemned by it.

The great bulk of imitated and adulterated food products become articles of interstate commerce before reaching the consumer. This has crippled the power of the State, and to a great extent rendered its police powers unavailing. And here, Mr. President, arises the necessity for Federal legislation supporting the efforts of the States in closing up this aperture and making one complete whole of the pure-food legislation.

The substitute bill, which has been reported by the committee, carefully avoids trespassing upon, or interfering with, the police power of the several States.

It avoids the field of conflicting opinions as to whether the Federal Government, under the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution, or the State, under its police power, has the right to determine what is deleterious or a proper subject of commerce. It allows all to enter into commerce, but compels adulterants to unmask.

It lays its hands only upon articles while they are subjects of interstate commerce, and leaves them to the States the moment they cease to be such. It regulates commerce in all foods. It prohibits it in none, except known poisonous ingredients.

The framers of this bill have tried to so avoid all dangers of encroachment by the Federal authority upon police power that all Senators, whether schooled in the principles of liberal construction of the Constitution or taught by education and environment to guard the right of the State against Federal aggression, might lay aside all partisanship differences and meet and join their mutual efforts against fraud and deceit which affects the health and the purse of every family in every State in the Union.

Mr. President, before proceeding with the several provisions of the bill, the law under which the Federal power is to be exercised may aptly require brief consideration.

I have prepared a short and concise statement of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States bearing upon the construction of the interstate-commerce clause in the Constitution, showing the evolution which we have passed through in arriving at the present judicially established doctrine. I will ask that this be printed as a part of my remarks.

LEADING CASES CONSTRUING THE INTERSTATE-COMMERCE CLAUSE OF THE CONSTITUTION.

Section 8 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States provides:

Congress shall have power * * * to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with the Indian tribes.

The framers of the Constitution, in adopting this provision, undoubtedly had in mind only the prevention of discriminating rates or laws between the different States, so that one State might not prevent free access of goods of one State into or through another. This power, however, is in late years exercised for a totally different purpose. The provision does not merely place it in the hands of Congress to prevent the States from interfering with the free introduction of the commerce of one State into another, but gives to Congress the power to regulate.

GIBBONS V. OGDEN (19 WHEATON, 1).

A law of the State of New York gave to certain persons the exclusive right to navigate the waters of that State by steamboat.

It was claimed on the one side that this law was an attempt by the State to regulate commerce and in conflict with the exclusive right of the Federal Government to make such regulations.

On the other hand it was claimed that in the absence of Federal legislation the State might act.

It was held that the commercial power is, as a whole, incapable of division, and therefore exclusive in the Federal Government. The word to "regulate" implies full power over the thing to be regulated, and necessarily excludes the action of all others that would perform the same operation on the same thing.

That it would produce an arrangement by changing what the regulating power designs to leave untouched as to that on which it is operated.

BROWN V. MARYLAND (12 WHEATON, 419).

This case involved the validity of a law in Maryland, imposing a license tax upon importers for the privilege of selling imported goods. The court held that the power of Congress upon the subject was not dormant; that it was not necessary to decide whether the mere existence of the power in Congress excluded action by the State, as Congress had expressly authorized importation by imposing a duty.

WILSON V. BLACKBIRD, ETC. (2 PETERS, 245).

This case involved the validity of a law of Delaware, authorizing a dam in a small but navigable creek. Congress had passed no act concerning interstate commerce, and the court says: "We do not think the act empowering the company to place a dam across the creek can be considered as repugnant to the power to regulate commerce in its dormant state." This opinion has been considered inconsistent with Gibbons v. Ogden and Brown v. Maryland.

NEW YORK V. MILN (11 PETERS, 102).

A New York law required masters of vessels from other States or countries to make a report to the State authorities in giving information as to the passengers. The court held that the act was valid as an exercise of the police power, and not a regulation.

PIERCE V. NEW HAMPSHIRE (5 HOWARD, 504).

New Hampshire required a license for selling spirituous liquors. A barrel of gin being bought in Boston was transported and sold without this license in New Hampshire. The seller was indicted. It was held that the New Hampshire law was a valid exercise of the authority of the State.

THE PASSENGER CASES (7 HOWARD, 282).

Both New York and Massachusetts passed laws imposing a tax on all passengers arriving from other States or foreign countries. The decision of the court (four justices dissenting) was against the constitutionality of the laws.

BOWMAN V. NORTHWESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY (125 U. S., 465).

The laws of Iowa forbid a common carrier to bring within the State of Iowa any intoxicating liquors without having been furnished with a certificate by the county auditor of the county to which said liquor is being transported showing that the consignee is authorized to sell intoxicating liquors. The court held: First, the question whether the failure of Congress to act is conclusive evidence of its intention that the subject of commerce shall be free from positive regulation or whether it shall be left to be dealt with by the States is to be determined from the circumstances of each case; second, it held, however, that Revised Statutes 5258 are indications of an intention that the transportation shall be free except when restricted by Congress or by a State with permission of Congress; third, that the Iowa law is neither an inspection law nor a quarantine law, but a regulation of commerce, and repugnant to the Constitution.

It does not decide whether the right of transportation includes the right to sell.

IN RE RAHRER (140 U. S., 545).

This is a well-considered case. By a Congressional act of August 8, 1890 (26 Stat., 313), it was provided that intoxicating liquors transported to a State for consumption, sale, or storage therein shall, upon arrival, be subject to the operation of the laws of such State * * * and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise. It was held that this is a valid and constitutional exercise of the legislative power conferred upon Congress. The court makes the following remarks:

The Constitution does not provide that interstate commerce shall be free, but, by the grant of this exclusive power to regulate it, it was left free except as Congress might impose restraint. Therefore, it has been determined that the failure of Congress to exercise this exclusive power in any case is an expression of its will that the subject should be free from restrictions or impositions upon it by the several States. (Robbins v. Shelby, etc., 120 U. S., 489.)

Second. The right of a State to prohibit the manufacture or sale of liquors therein does not necessarily infringe any right secured by the Constitution. (Bugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S., 623.)

Third. These cases rest upon the acknowledged right of States to control their purely internal affairs, and in so doing to protect the public health, morals, and safety of the people.

Fourth. Whenever a thing, from character or condition, is of a description to be regulated by the power in the State, then the regulation may be made by the State, and Congress can not interfere, but this must depend on facts.

Fifth. The case involves the distinction which exists between commercial power and police power.

Sixth. And the fact must find its support in this, whether the prohibited article belongs to and is subject to be regulated as a part of foreign commerce or of commerce among the States.

Seventh. If, from its nature, it does not belong to commerce, or if its condition, from putrescence or other cause, is such when it is about to enter the State that it no longer belongs to commerce, or, in other words, is not a commercial article, then the State may exclude its introduction. And here is the limit between the sovereign power of the State and the Federal power. That is to say, that which does not belong to commerce is within the jurisdiction of the police power of the State; and that which does belong to commerce is within the jurisdiction of the United States.

Eighth. The State can not determine the question whether spirituous liquors which shall pass by sale from hand to hand shall be excluded from commerce. If it could do this, then the paramount power of Congress to regulate commerce is subject to the State.

Ninth. But Congress has now spoken and declared that imported liquors or liquids shall, upon arrival in the State, fall within the category of domestic articles of a similar nature. Is the law open to constitutional objection?

Tenth. Congress can not transfer legislative power nor sanction a State law in violation of the Constitution; and if it can adopt a State law as its own, it must be one that it would be competent for it to enact itself, and not a law passed in the exercise of police power. Congress can neither delegate its own powers nor enlarge those of a State.

Eleventh. By adoption of the Constitution the ability of the several States to act upon matters of commerce was extinguished and the legislative will of the Government substituted.

Thirteenth. While the object was undoubtedly that of preventing commercial regulations partial in their character and contrary to common interest, still this furnishes no support to the position that Congress could not, in the exercise of discretion reposed in it, concluding that common interests did not require entire freedom in the traffic in ardent spirits, enact the law in question.

Fourteenth. In doing so Congress has not delegated its power. It has made its own regulation, applying to those subjects of interstate commerce one common rule.

Fifteenth. Congress did not use terms of permission to the State to act, but simply removed an impediment to the enforcement of the State laws in respect to imported packages in their original condition, created by the absence of a specific utterance on its part. It imparted no power to the State not then possessed, but allowed imported property to fall at once upon arrival within the local jurisdiction.

PLUMLEY V. MASSACHUSETTS (155 U. S., 451).

A statute of Massachusetts prohibited the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine which should be an imitation of yellow butter. The defendant was found guilty and sued out a writ of habeas corpus.

By an act of Congress a tax was imposed for carrying on a trade in oleomargarine. The court held—

First. The act of Congress relating to oleomargarine was not intended as a regulation of commerce.

Second. The act of Massachusetts did not prohibit the sale of oleomargarine, but only such as is colored in imitation of yellow butter.

Third. If free from coloration the right to sell it in a separate and distinct character is not prohibited.

Fourth. The real object of coloring oleomargarine is to make it look like genuine butter and to secure its sale for butter.

Fifth. A person is only forbidden to practice a fraud upon the public. The statute seeks to suppress false pretensions and promote fair dealing in the sale of an article of food.

Sixth. This is merely a police power. If the article had been only against imported oleomargarine, it would have been different.

Seventh. The Constitution of the United States does not take from the States the power of preventing deception and fraud.

Eighth. In conferring upon Congress the regulation of commerce it was never intended to cut the States off from legislating on all subjects relating to the life, health, and safety of their citizens, though the legislation might indirectly affect the commerce of the country.

The court considered the case of Leisy v. Hardin, 125 U. S., 100, in which it was held that parties who ship beer into Iowa had the right to sell it in original packages, and then says: "So far as the record disclosed in that case, and so far as the contentions of the parties were concerned, the article there in question was what it appeared to be, namely, genuine beer, and not a liquid or drink colored artificially so as to cause it to look like beer." The language quoted from Leisy v. Hardin must be restrained to that case, and does not justify the contention that a State is powerless to prevent the sale of articles manufactured in or brought from another State and subjects of traffic and commerce, if their sale may cheat the people into purchasing something they do not intend to buy, and which is wholly different from what its condition and appearances import. This law was sustained, though not without dissenting opinions.

SCHOLLENBERGER V. PENNSYLVANIA (171 U. S., 1).

This case reviews the many other cases, and held that a law of the State of Pennsylvania prohibiting the importation of oleomargarine was unconstitutional. This was based upon the fact, first, that oleomargarine is a usual subject of commerce not deleterious to health; second, that providing for its manufacture and imposing a tax upon it, and regulating its manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation, Congress had recognized it as a proper subject of traffic. These decisions have at last, by a somewhat circuitous route, succeeded fairly well in defining the limit and extent of both the Federal and State authority over articles of interstate commerce and the line of demarcation between Federal interstate-commerce authority and State police power.

The law may now, with much confidence, be laid down about as follows:

1. The right to regulate interstate commerce is exclusively a Federal right and attaches not only to the transportation of an article, but to the thing transported.

2. Failure of Congress to exercise this exclusive power in any case is an expression of its will that the subject should be free from restrictions or impositions by the State.

3. That a State can not prohibit the importation or sale, in original packages, of any article in its nature wholesome and free from fraud, or which Congress has by its laws acknowledged a proper subject of commerce.

4. The police power of a State extends to the prohibition of the sale, even in original packages, of imported articles if their sale may cheat or defraud, or if the article, from putrescence or other cause, is such that it is not a commercial article. In these cases the State may exclude its introduction.

5. But the paramount power to determine whether an article is a proper subject of commerce is in Congress, and not the State.

6. Under its power to regulate, Congress may determine that an article of commerce, upon its arrival within the borders of a State shall become immediately subject to all police regulations of such State.

We believe the proposed legislation is not subject to attack as going beyond the clearly defined and determined Federal authority. It strikes at frauds and sophistries of every character in food products. On the other hand it imposes no hardship on any dealer or on commerce, but rather facilitates the latter by requiring goods to be transported and sold for what they are.

Section 1 of the bill provides for the organization, in the Bureau of Chemistry of the Department of Agriculture. of a food and drug division. It creates no new power, but utilizes one already established and existing in this Department.

This division is charged with the inspection of food and drug products as provided for in other sections of the act. It provides for the analysis and examination—chemically, microscopically, or otherwise—of foods and drugs which are subjects of foreign or interstate commerce.

Section 2 prohibits the introduction into any State or Territory or the District of Columbia from any other State, Territory, or foreign country, adulterated or misbranded foods or drugs, and provides for the punishment therefor.

Under section 3 the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry is required to make rules and regulations for examinations of specimens of foods and drugs offered for sale or intended for shipment, and if it shall appear from such examination that the provisions of this act are violated, to certify the facts to the proper United States district attorney, with a copy of the results of the analysis duly authenticated.

Section 4 makes it the duty of every district attorney, upon receiving such report, to cause proceedings to be commenced for the prosecution of the person violating the act.

Section 5 defines the terms "drug" and "food," as used in said act, the first to include all medicines and preparations recognized in the United States Pharmacopœia for internal or external use, and the latter to include all articles used for food, drink, confectionery, or condiment by man or domestic animals.

Section 6 defines what shall be construed as adulterations and misbranding, and provides that drugs shall be deemed adulterated:

1. If, when sold by a name recognized in the United States Pharmacopœia, it differs from the standard or strength of quality or purity as laid down in said pharmacopœia official.

2. If the strength or purity fall below the professed standard under which it is sold.

That such drug is misbranded:

1. If it is an imitation of or offered for sale under the name of another article.

2. If the package containing it, or its label, shall falsely state its ingredients or substances, or falsely state the place of its manufacture.

That confectionery shall be deemed to be adulterated if it contain certain poisonous substances as therein stated.

That an article of food shall be deemed to be adulterated:

1. If other substances have been mixed with it so as to reduce or injuriously affect its quality, so that when offered for sale it shall tend to deceive the purchaser.

2. If any substances have been substituted, wholly or in part, for the article so that it shall deceive or tend to deceive the purchaser.

3. If any valuable constituent of the article has been partially or wholly abstracted, so that it shall deceive or tend to deceive the purchaser.

4. If it contain any added poisonous ingredients.

5. If it consists of a filthy, decomposed, or putrid animal or vegetable substance unfit for food, or the product of a diseased animal, or one that has died otherwise than by slaughter.

We have made a clear distinction between misbranding and adulterated food, so that one may not misjudge the character of a food by denominating it adulterated when it is simply misbranded.

That an article of food shall be deemed to be misbranded:

1. If it is an imitation of or offered for sale under the distinctive name of another article,

2. If it be mixed or colored in a manner whereby damage is concealed so as to deceive a purchaser.

3. If it be branded so as to deceive or purport to be a foreign product when it is not.

4. If its package or label bears any false statement as to its ingredients or substances, or if it is misbranded as to the State or Territory in which it is manufactured.

This section also provides that compounds of foods under their own distinctive names which do not contain added poisonous or deleterious ingredients, or articles labeled or branded so as to plainly indicate that they are mixtures or combinations or imitations, shall not be deemed to be adulterated or misbranded, provided they are labeled or branded so as to show the character of their constituents.

This section also provides that no dealer shall be convicted under the provisions of the act when he is able to prove a written guaranty of purity in a form approved by the Secretary of Agriculture, signed by the manufacturer or party from whom he purchases the article. In such case the manufacturer or party from whom the purchase is made shall be amenable to the prosecutions and fines.

Section 7 requires the Secretary of Agriculture to fix standards of food products when advisable, and to determine the wholesomeness or unwholesomeness of preservatives and other substances which may be added to foods, and to assist him in this he is authorized to call upon the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry and the chairman of the committee on food standards of the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists, and not less than five eminent physicians, to be selected by the President, three of whom shall be from the Medical Departments of the Army, Navy, and Marine-Hospital Service, and not less than five experts to be selected by the Secretary of Agriculture by reason of their attainments in physiological chemistry, hygiene, commerce, and manufactures, to consider jointly the standards of all food products, and to study the effect of preservatives and other substances added to food products on the health of the consumer. This provision alone will be of incalculable benefit to the people.

This section has been to a great extent misunderstood. There seems to be a general understanding that when the Secretary of Agriculture has fixed a standard of foods all foods which are sold or which may become subjects of interstate commerce must correspond with that standard. There is nothing of that character in the bill. The only object whatever of section 7 is that the public may be enlightened as to what is a proper standard, of what is deleterious and what is not, and no one is bound to accede to the rules and regulations laid down by the Secretary of Agriculture in relation to pure foods.

This section also provides that these officers and experts shall confer with and consult, when so requested, the duly accredited representatives of all industries producing articles for which standards shall be established.

This section, while it in no way affects or interferes with commerce in adulterated or misbranded goods, is, nevertheless, a most beneficial provision. We here create a commission of the most eminent chemists and food specialists in the country, to determine not only what is the highest standard of food, but also what is deleterious or injurious. The publication of the decisions and findings of this high court, while it will be binding upon no person, will at the same time acquaint the public with the quality and character of all food products, and become in time the bureau of food information to which the American people will look for all matters pertaining to its health and physical welfare. It will be one of the greatest incentives in the world to every manufacturer of food products to bring his productions up to as near perfection as possible. Not only this, but it will tend to eliminate the very objections which are urged against this bill—the unreasoning prejudice of the public against any article of food. When the maker of an imitation—glucose jelly, for instance—has the certificate, the finding, of this high and intelligent tribunal to the effect that glucose manufactured from corn is one of the most easily digestible and wholesome articles of food, he can take that certificate, publish it in every paper in the United States, and it will no longer be necessary for him to sell that glucose as apple or currant or raspberry jelly. Ascertaining that it is equally healthful, that it is equally nutritious, and its flavor equally pleasant, the man who can not afford to pay a higher price for pure fruit jelly will, without fear of deception, purchase this article, and its sale will be increased.

The original Brosius and the Hepburn bill, as introduced in the House, provided—

> That such standards and determinations, when so fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture for the use of the chemists of the Department, might be read in evidence in the United States courts, but should not be considered as determining the adulteration of any articles under section 6 of the act, unless such standards and determinations should be approved by the court.

This provision does not appear in the bill reported by our committee, and we can see no place for it in the proposed legislation. These standards fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture are not binding obligations of law. The failure to comply with them is not anywhere made an offense, nor do we consider it necessary to pass such stringent legislation at this time. I do not believe that this provision in the bill has had due consideration from a legal standpoint.

No mere certificate could receive the sanction of any court as proper evidence in a criminal case where the defendant is entitled to have his accusers brought face to face with the accused, and I know of no procedure by which a court could either approve or disapprove of a standard fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture or determined by him as being of the highest character. And even admitting that courts could so do, anyone can see that a standard might be approved by one court and disapproved by another. Different persons require different foods, and, as we have stated, almost every ailment requires as its antidote some special character of food, and we think we have done all that is required when we have enabled every person, after determining what is most healthful for him, or what he wishes, to purchase it without danger of fraudulent deceit.

Section 8 makes it the duty of every person manufacturing or shipping articles of food, upon being tendered the price, to deliver to the representative of the Department of Agriculture a sufficient amount of such article of food for analysis.

Section 9 provides for punishment upon failure so to do.

Section 10 provides for the confiscation of such articles by the several United States courts.

By section 11 it is provided that this act shall not be construed to interfere with commerce wholly internal in any State nor with the exercise of their police powers by the several States, and that nothing in the act shall be construed to interfere with legislation now in force, either in the District of Columbia or the Territories, regulating commerce in adulterated foods or drugs, except wherein such legislation conflicts with the provisions herein.

Mr. President, an objection was made to that feature of the bill by the commissioner of food products, I believe he is called, or the commissioner, in the District of Columbia. It was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. The objection is that the proposed law interferes with and practically sets aside all of the other laws of the District of Columbia relative to the control over adulterated and misbranded foods. I wish to say now that that is an error. This bill does not touch nor attempt to touch, in any manner, foods or the selling of foods after they have ceased to be articles of interstate commerce, except in the District of Columbia and in the Territories, and in those it does not interfere with the local laws of the Territory or the District. If those who make this objection will read over the bill and see that it pertains only to the sale of these adulterated articles in the first instance, they will see that their objection is not well founded, whereas if we should allow the amendment which they request the bill would be entirely a nullity in the District of Columbia and in the Territories.

Mr. President, the object of this section is to make it doubly certain that it is not intended to interfere with the police power of a State, and also that it does not intend to cover mere local legislation in the District of Columbia and the Territories regulating such things as selling adulterated milk, etc.

We believe, Mr. President, that the enactment of this proposed legislation into a law would do very much to strengthen the credit of our food products abroad and to remove from them the stigma of adulterations both abroad and in our own country.

These spurious articles are sold at enormous profits, and hence the incentive to continue the business. By them the unscrupulous and dishonest are enriched, while the fair and the honest are forced by this competition to suspend business. The fair, honest goods are compelled to go begging for meager profits, and in many instances are forced out of the market. As we have said before, both the producer and the consumer suffer. The producers of food products suffer immeasurable hardship and wrongs when their products come into competition with these bogus articles. The consumers suffer the imposition of this continuous stream of spurious frauds upon their stomachs and purses.

We state again that Congress owes to her producers the duty of protection against counterfeit articles of production, and owes our consumers a protection against fraudulent and deceptive articles of consumption. No one will be injured by this. Whenever we readjust our commerce upon a plane of absolute honesty and integrity, whenever we require that every article of food shall be sold under its own proper name, shall be sold for what it is, every commercial article will find its place. If it is healthful it will never be despoiled of an honest market. It will find ready consumption on its own merits. It will reap a legitimate, and not an illegitimate, profit when it comes into the field of competition under its own true name.

The only serious objection which was made was from the Preservers and Picklers' Association, and they made it upon the ground that there would be other dealers in adulterated articles, and, therefore, if they were compelled to brand theirs for just exactly what they were the objection against glucose in place of sugar would be such as practically to drive them out of business. After considering the bill, however, as amended they had another meeting, and I have the following letter:

PRESERVERS AND PICKLERS' ASSOCIATION,
Philadelphia, Pa., April 17, 1902.

Hon. P. J. MCCUMBER,
Senate Chamber, Capitol, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: By request of the president of the Preservers' and Picklers' Association I wish to inform you that at a meeting of our association held April 12 a resolution was passed to the effect that, as far as this organization is concerned, they have withdrawn the preamble and resolution presented to the Senate and House of Representatives committees having charge of the Hepburn bill, and which reads as follows:

"In the case of fruit preserves, jams, fruit butters, jellies, sauces, condiments, fruit juices, and sirups, if they contain salicylic acid and its salts, boracic acid, alum, beta naphthol, or any substance which is poisonous or injurious to health in the quantity used, or if they contain less than 25 per cent of the substance which gives the product its name, as indicated by the label on the package."

This was the resolution which they sent and which they now withdraw. He states:

> Our organization has also decided to make no further opposition to the passage of the Hepburn bill.

Talking with the gentleman who sent this letter and who represents this association, he gave me as his reasons that their company was ready, and so far as he knew all other companies were ready, to go into the commerce of the United States upon an honest basis; that all they required was that all other dealers should go into competition with them upon the same basis, believing that this bill would have that result; that it would cooperate and conform with the several laws of the States and would be taken practically as a basis for their laws, so that they would escape many of the restrictions which hampered them in the several States.

Mr. President, I will consider other objections to this bill at the time that it shall come up for final consideration.

SOUTHERN APPALACHIAN FOREST RESERVE.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that at the conclusion of the morning business to-morrow I shall discuss the provisions of the bill (S. 492) for the purchase of a national forest reserve in the Southern Appalachian Mountains.

CUBAN SUGAR INVESTIGATION.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. From the Committee on Relations with Cuba, I report a substitute for Senate resolution 195, submitted by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], which was referred to that committee. The substitute should be read, perhaps, and then I ask that it may be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The resolution was read, and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Whereas it has been currently reported that nearly the entire crop of Cuban sugar has been purchased and is now held by what is generally known as the sugar trust, which is the principal consumer of raw sugar in the United States, and that any concessions given to the raisers of cane sugar in the island of Cuba, or any measures intended for their relief by admitting their sugar at reduced rates of duty into the United States will only benefit the said sugar trust, and that the Cubans will receive no real benefit from said concession;

And whereas it is alleged that a large number of citizens of the United States have acquired large holdings of cane-producing lands in Cuba, and are now especially urging the reduction of duty on sugar, under the claim that such reduction will benefit the people of Cuba: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Relations with Cuba be, and is hereby, directed to make an investigation as to the truth of such charges and to report to the Senate.

That for the purpose of carrying out the above resolution the committee be, and hereby is, authorized to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, take testimony, employ a stenographer, and that the expenses of the investigation be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The committee is authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate, and also to print from time to time its hearings.

PROTECTION OF GAME IN ALASKA.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, yesterday I objected to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11535) for the protection of game in Alaska, and for other purposes, saying that I would present an amendment. I have the amendment now, and I should like to have the bill taken up.

Mr. BURTON. If the Senator will allow me, I will ask unanimous consent that the bill be put upon its passage now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I move to add at the end of the bill the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That nothing contained in the foregoing sections of this act shall be construed or held to prohibit or limit the right of the Smithsonian Institution to collect in or ship from the District of Alaska animals or birds for the use of the Zoological Park in Washington, D. C.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, the Committee on Military Affairs asks me to request permission for that committee to sit during the sessions of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks that the Committee on Military Affairs shall have leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. W. H. CROOK, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 23d instant approved and signed the following act and joint resolution:

An act (S. 2371) granting a pension to Andrew J. Felt; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 56) providing for a modification in the adopted project for the improvement of Everett Harbor, Washington.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had on the 24th instant approved and signed the act (S. 4798) to authorize the Quincy Railroad Bridge Company, its successors and assigns, to rebuild the draw span of its bridge across the Mississippi River at Quincy, Ill.

The message further announced that the President of the United States had on this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 1512) granting an increase of pension to Mary Jane Faulkner;

An act (S. 2082) granting an increase of pension to Louise Ward; and

An act (S. 4072) granting an increase of pension to Samuel J. Lambden.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, it seems to me that the eagerness of Senators to press this bill to an early passage might be expended with more honor to themselves and more profit to the country upon the investigation which is now dragging its slow length along before the Committee on the Philippines; an investigation which, without any reason whatever, or, at least, without any good and sufficient reason, is suspended for eight days, with a witness on the stand and other witnesses here in the city of Washington ready and willing to testify. It is an investigation which seems to be haunted by a constant dread that it may find out something, and its present condition may be properly described as that of a fugitive from information.

I had hoped that some Senator upon the other side of the Chamber would be ready to proceed with this debate. While I know that the measure now before the Senate is utterly indefensible, I had supposed that some of those who had the hardihood to present it to the American Congress would have the hardihood to uphold and defend it.

I know, sir, that it requires a great deal of effrontery for any man to openly champion a measure so utterly bad, so utterly destitute of any virtue or of a single redeeming quality, as the bill now before the Senate. But I am not sure but that the cold-blooded, studied contempt displayed by Senators upon the other side of the Chamber for the pitiless exposure of its iniquities, and their stony-faced indifference to the story of all the horrors and barbarities being perpetrated in the Philippine Islands, exhibit even more impudence and effrontery.

Mr. President, we have under consideration a bill which is a confessed departure from the principles and traditions of our own country, a bill which deals in the most drastic fashion with the lives and liberties of 10,000,000 people, a bill which enacts despotism into law, and as surely enacts hatred and war and bloodshed and desolation. Yet, sir, a majority of the Senators upon the other side of the Chamber are ready to vote for it without debate, without asking a single question, without having read a single line of its contents, without knowing or caring to know the meaning of a single provision that it contains.

Senators seem to assume that the American conscience is so dead that no shock can awaken it to signs of life and activity. Sir, if the American conscience has slept, it will awake, strengthened and invigorated, like a giant refreshed from slumber, and woe then to those who have sinned against it. There will be a day of reckoning. Those who are proceeding in this reckless and criminal course are sowing the wind, and the whirlwind will be their harvest.

Mr. President, the Philippine tariff bill which we considered a short time ago presented one aspect of imperialism. This bill simply presents another. Now, as then, the the real question is of far deeper significance than anything written in the mere words and phrases of the law. As the former bill did something more than provide revenue, this bill does something more than provide government for the Philippine Islands. It asserts a policy for the United States of America; and whenever that policy, in any form whatever, approaches the halls of an American Congress, I trust there will be some man brave enough and patriotic enough to challenge it at the threshold.

When the Philippine tariff bill was under debate I said the question was not simply whether you had properly selected the subjects and properly adjusted the rates of taxation; the question was, "What right have you to impose any taxes whatever upon the people of the Philippine Islands?" The question now is not simply and alone whether you have framed just laws for the government of the people, but what right have you to frame laws and devise a system of government for an alien and unwilling people?

Your answer is that we have won that right with the sword and bayonet. You say that we have burned enough towns, we have wasted enough country, we have butchered enough people, to make good our right to tax and govern; that the land is ours because we have strewed it with the ashes of its homes and drenched it with the blood of its people. What wolf ever had a better right to eat his mutton in peace than we have to possess and enjoy the Philippine Islands?

That, stripped of all rags of rhetoric, is your answer, and we meet it with a simple denial that you have derived any just powers of government from the subjugation of the governed. That, sir, is the issue in this debate, as it will be, I trust, of every debate where the purpose is asserted upon this floor to govern a people by right of the sword.

Mr. President, while the occasion of this debate is different, to my view it simply reopens and continues the debate that was suspended by the passage of the Philippine tariff bill. The question of right, the question of just power is precisely the same. There are many enormities and iniquities in this particular measure to which I shall advert in the course of my remarks, although it seems almost presumptuous for any man to do that after the exhaustive and pitiless analysis made by the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS].

But I say, Mr. President, after all, the real issue is not the bill you are about to enact, but the policy you thereby proclaim. That policy I have discussed heretofore somewhat at length. For the present I wish to recur to certain passages, to gather up certain odds and ends of the former debate, to reply to certain charges repeated with damnable iteration against the opponents of this policy, and to deal with certain arguments, not very weighty in themselves, but repeated with such insistence as to make them worthy of attention.

The distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], in his brilliant apology for the course of his party, seemed to charge that we were moving in pursuance of some hellish design, that we were actuated by pure sin and devilishness in presenting our view as to what should be the course and policy of this Government in dealing with the Philippine Islands. He said that we had prostituted this question to base and wicked partisan purposes.

Mr. President, when one looks over the list of great and honored Republicans who have opposed themselves with all their zeal and energy to the policy of this and the preceding Administration, and when he sees that it includes every survivor of those who bore a conspicuous part in the formation and foundation of the Republican party, it ought to occur to him that there is something more in this opposition than Democratic wickedness and depravity; that there is something more in it than treason to the Republic.

The Senator from Wisconsin said that Mr. Bryan had seized upon this question in order to force an issue with the Administration. Unfortunately for that Senator, the facts of history are against him. It is well known that for a long time the Administration was in serious doubt and perplexity as to whether or not it should demand a cession of the Philippine Islands. It was known that many leading Republicans, including members of the President's own Cabinet, were opposed to that policy. Every public utterance of Mr. McKinley himself had indicated a contrary intention.

Now, sir, long before the treaty of peace was negotiated, long before the Administration had resolved its own doubts and perplexities, long before a single man in the United States knew or could possibly have known what would be the policy of the Administration, before the Administration itself knew, Mr. Bryan had openly declared against the annexation of the Philippine Islands, or the annexation, by force or otherwise, of distant territory or of territory inhabited by a people who could not be assimilated with our own.

At that time the public utterances of Mr. McKinley and the public utterances of Mr. Bryan upon this question were in absolute and exact accord. They both believed and had declared that the forcible annexation of a country without the consent of its people would be a crime; and if the Administration had adhered to that noble sentiment as faithfully as Mr. Bryan adhered to it there would have been no issue, no conflict of opinion between them. Mr. Bryan did not seek to make, and he did not make, an issue with the Administration. It was not until the Administration had abandoned the position which they had occupied in common that he found himself in conflict with its views. The only basis for the charge that Mr. Bryan seized upon this question for an issue rests upon the fact, and upon that fact alone, that he refused to abandon his own declared convictions simply because a Republican Administration had reversed its own.

Mr. President, I wish to read here an extract from an address delivered by Mr. Bryan at Omaha on the 14th of June, 1898. In that address he said:

> To inflict upon the enemy all possible harm is legitimate warfare, but shall we contemplate a scheme for the colonization of the Orient merely because our ships won a remarkable victory in the harbor of Manila?
> If others turn to thoughts of aggrandizement and yield allegiance to those who clothe land covetousness in the attractive garb of "national destiny," the people of Nebraska will, if I mistake not their sentiments, plant themselves upon the disclaimer entered by Congress and insist that good faith shall characterize the making of peace as it did the beginning of war. Goldsmith calls upon statesmen
> "* * * To judge how wide the limits stand > Betwixt a splendid and a happy land."
> If some dream of the splendors of a heterogeneous empire encircling the globe, we shall be content to aid in bringing enduring happiness to a homogeneous people, consecrated to the purpose of maintaining a government of the people, by the people, and for the people.

That address, sir, was delivered on the 14th day of June, 1898, in the very same month and within a very few days of the time when Admiral Dewey sent his famous cable dispatch testifying to the capacity of the Filipinos for independence and self-government. No man at that time knew, or could have known, that the Administration would adopt the very opposite policy from that which it had itself declared. What is true with respect to Mr. Bryan is true with reference to the Democrats in both branches of Congress.

It is not true that the Democrats in the Senate sought to make this a party question. The records of the Senate disclose the very opposite to be the truth. They show that the Democrats made every effort to remove it from party politics. If the Vest amendment to the treaty had been adopted, or if the Bacon resolution, which was defeated only by the casting vote of the Vice-President, had been adopted, the question of annexation as a party issue would have died with the ratification of that treaty, would never have been named in a party platform, or heard of in a political campaign.

The plain truth of the matter is that the Republicans themselves seized upon this question and made it an issue. They believed that the people had gone mad with the rage for conquest. They believed, in the language of one of their ablest newspaper supporters, that the "taste of empire was in the mouth of the people, even as the taste of blood in the jungle."

You sought to reap party profit and advantage from the passions of the hour, and it does not lie in your mouths to challenge the motives or the sincerity of men who, when you weakly and pusillanimously yielded, manfully and heroically breasted the storm.

Another argument put forward by the Senator is that we are actually estopped from debating this question at all. He dwells with unction upon the fact that Mr. Bryan urged the ratification of the treaty and that a number of Democratic Senators voted for its ratification, and he seeks to deduce from this fact the conclusion that we are logically precluded from any further agitation of the question; that we are bound by any policy the Republican party may elect to pursue. I want to ask, Mr. President, whether a single Senator upon that side of the Chamber attributed any such signification to a vote for ratification when that question was in debate? Was there a single leader of the Republican party at that time, from the President down, who professed to believe that the ratification of the treaty was intended to express any definite purpose whatever with reference to our policy in the Philippine Islands? Not one.

The President of the United States, in his message transmitting that treaty, expressly declared that that was not a time to debate or consider that question; such discussion, he said, would be appropriate after the treaty had been ratified. "Do not talk about it now," said he, "but after you have ratified the treaty, then it will be in order to consider whether or not we shall permanently hold the Philippine Islands." Such, in substance, was the position of President McKinley.

What then was the attitude of the Senator from Wisconsin himself? He was strongly opposed to the permanent annexation of the islands. It was only after a period of doubt and hesitation that he voted for the treaty, and then with the distinct declaration that he would not vote for it if he thought it meant permanent annexation.

Without stopping to read, I shall ask to put into the RECORD an extract from the speech then made by the Senator from Wisconsin, and to follow that extract with an interview by Mr. William J. Bryan, both on the same line, using the same argument, and outlining the same policy:

> I am not able to forget that it is a treaty of peace, and that its ratification is to bring peace between the United States and the Kingdom of Spain. A rejection of it continues the status of war. Senators say that Spain is exhausted, and that active hostilities would not be renewed. Possibly this is true. Possibly it is not true. One can never safely prophesy what complications will come from a long-continued status of war.
> If the status of war is to continue, we could not well reduce our expenses to the basis of peace. We should be obliged inevitably to maintain our country and our expenditures upon the basis of war, and the cost would be great and in the end probably useless. The situation, Mr. President, could not fail to be filled with unpleasant possibilities, indefinite public burden, uncertainties, and trouble.

This is the extract from Mr. Bryan's interview to which reference was made:

> Some think that the fight should be made against ratification of the treaty, but I would prefer another plan. If the treaty is rejected, negotiations must be renewed, and instead of settling the question according to our ideas we must settle it by diplomacy, with a possibility of international complications. It will be easier, I think, to end the war at once by ratifying the treaty and then deal with the subject in our own way.

Mr. Bryan urged the ratification of the treaty, expressly reserving his right and declaring his purpose to oppose the permanent retention of the Philippine Islands under the sovereignty of the United States. The Senator from Wisconsin urged the ratification of the treaty, expressly reserving his right and declaring his purpose to oppose the permanent retention of the Philippine Islands under the sovereignty of the United States. The Senator from Wisconsin and Mr. Bryan fought side by side. They were Damon and Pythias, Jonathan and David, Castor and Pollux in that great battle—

> Two souls with but a single thought,
> Two hearts that beat as one.

Mr. President, if I had then been a member of the Senate, I do not believe I should have voted to ratify the treaty; yet I can see the force of the arguments that were presented upon the other side; I can see the strength of Mr. Bryan's position, as so ably expounded by the Senator from Wisconsin. If I had been here, with the responsibility resting upon me, I might have been persuaded to vote for the ratification of the treaty by the argument that it was necessary for us to bring about a state of peace to remove the danger of a reopening of hostilities, or at least to put an end to a condition that was disturbing the business and commerce of the country. I might have been moved by the argument that in a few weeks there would be a change in the membership of the Senate that would give an increased Republican majority, and that to then defeat the treaty would simply delay it to no purpose. I believe I should have been almost persuaded by the belief that the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin would use his influence after the treaty had been ratified to secure peace and independence to the people of the Philippines.

But, Mr. President, after arguing that we are too late, the Senator proceeded to argue that we are too early. His first objection is that we have waited too long. His second objection is that we have not waited long enough. He says that we are making trouble by a premature discussion of this question; that it is too early to talk about it now. We were asked to wait until the treaty was ratified. We waited for that, and then we were told that we should wait until the insurrection had been suppressed and the civil authority of the United States established. Well, they tell us that the insurrection has been suppressed; that the civil authority of the United States has been established; that with a few trifling exceptions a peace, as deep as that which reigned at Warsaw, prevails throughout the length and breadth of the archipelago; and yet we are still commanded to wait, and it is still treason for a Democrat to express an opinion.

When Governor Taft was before the committee he protested with some show of indignation against any consideration whatever of a question that would not be ripe for consideration, he said, for twenty-five, or fifty, or perhaps a hundred years. Wait, wait, wait—mañana, mañana, mañana—that Spanish word of procrastination, which the Senator spoke so trippingly on the tongue, has become the very motto of the Republican party. Among the other things you have learned from Spain is the Spanish conception of to-morrow. Your promises to the people of the Philippine Islands are for a day that will never come.

I should be glad to know what the Senator means when he asks us to refrain from a discussion of this question? Does he mean that both the advocates and the opponents of the colonial policy should postpone the discussion to a more convenient season, or does he simply mean that the opponents of this policy shall be silent and give its advocates the floor? If the Senator means that there is a mutual obligation on both parties to the controversy, I can see some small show of reason and plausibility in the argument; but even then it would not be sound. But has the Republican party, have its leaders, its newspapers, and its public men, refrained for a single day, or for a single hour, from pressing their argument in favor of colonialism?

Why, Mr. President, from the very day when the thunder of Dewey's guns was heard across the sea a clamor went up from one end of the land to the other that this country should abandon its historic traditions and join the robber nations of the world in their bloody hunt for empire and dominion. A demand was made that we should seize and hold the Philippines, not from any regard for the welfare of their people, but solely for our own profit and advantage; and that, sir, was the first thought that turned the mind of the Administration toward the annexation of the Philippine Islands.

The Senator seems to assume that we are beating the air with a vain and silly protest against a policy which no man has proposed; that no single voice has been raised in favor of a colonial policy or the permanent acquisition of the Philippine Islands. Yet we know that the policy of permanent annexation was declared again and again by President McKinley; we know that he declared again and again that the Philippine Islands, which we had raped by force and violence from their rightful possessors, were as justly ours as any part other of our territory; that our flag was up there and that it should never come down; that those islands should be retained under our sovereignty, and were to be a priceless and invaluable heritage to the American people. We know that he referred with scorn to those who wanted to give independence to the Filipinos as "contractionists," and scornfully asked, "Who would be a contractionist?"

We know that his distinguished successor in the White House has not only advocated the permanent annexation of the Philippine Islands, but that he has defended and glorified the bloody colonialism of the Old World powers. We know that his conception of the true grandeur of nations is strife and war and bloodshed for the sake of empire and dominion. We know that he has held up England's subjugation and rule of India, an absolutely despotic government over an absolutely dependent people, as a model for our imitation in the Philippines and as an evidence of the blessings that will flow from the despotic government of a vassal province and a subject race.

We know, sir, that distinguished leaders of the Republican party upon the floors of Congress have dwelt with rapture and enthusiasm upon the profit to be made by holding and exploiting the Philippine Islands as a conquered province. We know that it has been proclaimed upon the floor of the Senate that we are to hold them fast and hold them forever. We know that it has been proclaimed by a distinguished Republican leader upon this floor that the question of religion or of sentiment or any such consideration had nothing to do with it; that we are to hold and govern the Philippines simply because there is money in the business.

Mr. President, the argument was made by Mr. McKinley, it was made by distinguished members of the Peace Commission and by members of the Philippine Commission, that we must hold the Philippines in order to establish our power and to extend our commerce in the Orient. We know that this cry was taken up by Republican organizations from one end of the country to the other. Right here I will stop long enough to read an extract from a leaflet issued by the Republican Club of the city of New York, whose president at that time was the junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW]. In that pamphlet it is declared:

The policy of territorial acquisition beyond the seas has been adopted by boldly acquiring such territory, and the only question left is how shall we best govern and protect our insular acquisitions, and what is right and expedient in respect to territory our title to which has not yet been acknowledged by Spain.

* * * * * * *

But there are a few broad facts and considerations affecting the question which must be apparent to all, and which, it is submitted, of themselves justify the demand of the United States for the cession of the whole of the Philippine territory.

Again:

The world has entered upon a struggle in industrial and commercial competition under which the partition of the earth is swiftly proceeding. No nation can hold its own in that struggle unless it has an adequate share in the markets of the world, either by controlling those of its own colonies or countries under its protection or by virtue of trading facilities with countries under the dominion of foreign powers.

They say:

We need the Philippines, then, not only for the benefit arising from the development of their native riches and the opening they afford for extended American enterprise and trade, but they are also a necessary outpost for us in the world-wide struggle for commercial equality. To take them from Spain, if it be called conquest, is a just one. It is merely collecting the judgment in our favor rendered after trial by battle, a judgment from which there is no appeal.

This, Mr. President, was issued in November, 1898. The president of the club was, as I stated, the distinguished Senator from New York, the same Senator who but a few months before had declared that this very policy was revolutionary and destructive of our form of government; the very same Senator who but a few days ago delivered a humorous address upon this floor with respect to the elasticity of the Democratic conscience. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, your campaign literature in the contest of 1900 was filled with these arguments. You deluged the country with arguments not only in favor of permanently holding the Philippines, but in favor of a general policy of conquest and colonizing throughout the world. I have here the Republican campaign text-book of 1900, and page after page is filled with arguments, not only in favor of permanently holding the Philippines, but in favor of going out and seizing any other territory that might be considered profitable for us to seize and hold. If the Senate will bear with me, I will read just a few of the headings and subheadings from this campaign text-book, beginning on page 132.

COLONIES AND COLONIZATION.

Some lessons from the experiences of other peoples and other nations. A plain statement of the effect of colonization upon the people affected and upon the governing nation.

Effect of colonization upon the people of the countries colonized.

Are colonies advantageous to the commerce or people of the governing country?

COST OF COLONIZATION.

Are colonies a burden to the country establishing them? Some practical facts from the practical experience of the most successful colonizing countries of the world.

COST OF COLONIAL CONTROL.

It then goes on with a lot of doctored figures to show that colonies are very profitable both to the nation controlling the colonies and to the colonists themselves.

TRADE OF EUROPEAN COUNTRIES WITH THEIR COLONIES.

Showing, or attempting to show, that but for their colonies they would have no trade at all, all of which is about as false as anything that was ever imagined in the brain of man.

Commerce of the United States with Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Hawaiian, Philippine, and Samoan Islands.

And so on, and so on.

Thus, Mr. President, it appears from the political campaign literature of the Republican party that they were deliberately seeking to lure our people, not simply into holding the Philippines, but into a general policy of territorial conquest throughout the world. All this, sir, is utterly hateful; it is utterly abhorrent to the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin. He believes that such a policy would be ruinous to the United States; but has he ever uttered one word of protest against such arguments from his own associates?

Has he ever demanded that they should refrain from a discussion of the question? Oh, no, the Senator only demands that we shall remain dumb and silent and unprotesting; that the opponents of colonialism shall say nothing and allow its advocates by one-sided debate to fill the minds of the people with falsehood and sophistry and misinformation, to fix and harden public opinion in favor of a colonial policy. While every stump is crowned with a "spellbinder" howling for colonialism, while hundreds of newspapers are filling their columns with false arguments and false statements to support that policy, it is treason for any man to refute their sophistries or deny their falsehoods!

But, Mr. President, we are told that we must wait until we can educate the Filipino people and instruct them in the art of self-government. But how much time do you propose to consume in your ridiculous experiment? What is the course in your political kindergarten? How many ages of spelling and parsing, how many centuries of wrestling with the parts of speech, before your pedagogue statesmanship will have done its perfect work? The President of the United States says it is a long and painful task; he says that it has taken our race, starting far in advance of the Filipinos, a thousand years to master the lesson of self-government, and the implication is that it will take the Filipinos a great deal longer than that. We are not to hold them permanently. We want to experiment with them for only a thousand years or so. [Laughter.]

The argument of the President seems to be that because it has taken a thousand years of experience for us to learn the lesson of self-government it will take at least a thousand years of servitude to prepare the Filipinos for the same blessing. It does not require a logician to see the hiatus, as wide as the globe, between the premises and the conclusion of this argument. Experimenting for a thousand years! The President of the United States is a large-minded, broad-visioned man. He comprehends endless cycles in the sweep of his glance. A thousand years in his sight are but as yesterday when it is passed, and the duration of a geological epoch is like waiting for a car. [Laughter.] To a man of such serene and composed and restful temper an æon or two, more or less, is a matter of small consequence. But unfortunately there are some people who have hearkened to the doctrine of the strenuous life and to whom ten centuries seem a long time to wait. Mr. President, we ought to have some better argument than that given in the President's misreading and misinterpretation of history before we consent to do so.

The truth is that the experience of our race is the strongest argument in all history against the very experiment we are now attempting in the Philippine Islands. The truth is that long before our Teutonic ancestors had reached the stage of culture now possessed by every Christian Filipino community they were a free, democratic, self-governing people. The truth is that all this vast superstructure of free government under which we live was but reared upon the foundations laid by our rude forefathers in the German wilderness before their recorded history begins.

At that time the all-conquering race of Rome was extending its dominion throughout the world. It represented the highest state of culture and civilization as well as of power. Who could then have supposed that the great Roman Empire would crumble and dissolve, while the conception of representative free government, which had its birth in the German wilderness, would become the hope and the heritage of mankind?

What a calamity it would have been if these rude, unlettered Northmen had fallen under the benevolent subjugation of a more enlightened nation. What a vast change it would have made in the history of free institutions if their simple system had been supplanted by that of some supercilious alien power, boasting a higher civilization and a higher culture. They might indeed have got a smattering of Roman learning; they might have been smeared with a thin varnish of Roman manners, but they would have lost their freedom, and mankind would have lost that grand political conception which it is their peculiar glory to have preserved and perpetuated for the political regeneration of the world.

Mr. President, the great fact that stands out in the history of our race is that it did not learn free government from a master. It trampled out the last vestige of Roman law and Roman civilization in the island of Britain and built up a higher and nobler civilization of its own. The President ought to have learned from the very history to which he appealed that freedom is the only schoolmaster that can teach the lessons of freedom. No people ever learned self-government under a tutor. No peoplo ever learned to govern themselves by being held in subjection by a higher and a stronger race. If the rule of the master is harsh and despotic and too powerful to be overthrown they will become base and servile and treacherous. If it is mild and benevolent they will become weak and dependent, and the milder and the more benevolent it is the more dependent and the more distrustful of themselves they will become.

The idea that you are going to transform the character of a whole people simply by teaching them to read in English "This is a horse," or to parse "The bird flies swiftly;" that you are going to give them practical instruction in American institutions by setting up a carpetbag government for them to look at and pay taxes to; the idea that you will teach them to govern themselves by making them bear the burdens of a foreign government is the wildest, the craziest, the most fantastic dream that ever flitted through a lunatic's brain. You might as well suppose that a horse can learn to think by bearing a philosopher upon his back.

We have had some very moving eloquence with respect to the great work we are doing by conferring upon the people there the blessings of education. One would imagine to hear some of the speeches made on this floor that we are doing all this at our own expense; that we are performing some act of heroic and supreme self-sacrifice. As a matter of fact we are simply levying a tax of $2,000,000 per annum upon the Filipinos themselves in order that we may pay high salaries to American school-teachers and provide profitable contracts for American book publishers.

I can not see that there is any great amount of charity involved in the act of forcibly taking money out of another man's pocket and putting it into your own. Not only, sir, is there no charity in this business, but, in my opinion, it is and will prove to be an utter and ridiculous farce.

Senators seem to assume that no ray of learning ever penetrated the Plutonian shadows of that far-distant country until it was borne there on the shimmering wings of a Yankee schoolteacher. As a matter of fact, nine-tenths of the Christian Filipinos, or at least a large majority of them, as proved by the witnesses before our committee, by General Hughes and Professor Barrows and others, can read and write their own language and have a knowledge of arithmetic. Now, you are proposing to displace this learning and this education by sending there a lot of school-teachers from the United States who can not speak one word of the native language to teach the natives how to read the language of the United States.

What will be the result of this education? Does any man suppose that English will ever become the familiar spoken language of the people there? Professor Barrows before our committee admitted that it was neither possible nor desirable that it should be so. The children will continue to speak the language of their parents, and as they will have little or no contact with English-speaking people after quitting school the little smattering of learning they have received will soon fade from their memories and leave no impression whatever upon their minds.

Mr. President, it is human nature for men to magnify their own work and their own importance, and it was to be expected that we should have some very tall stories in regard to the great transformation that had been wrought by a few months' contact with English spelling books and English grammars. But already, sir, we are beginning to have another side of the story. I shall be glad to have the Secretary read at this point an extract from an article by Mr. Bradford K. Daniels of the department of education in the Philippine Islands.

The Secretary read as follows:

> If the Americans really wish to benefit the Filipinos let the teachers learn the language of the people and conduct the school in Filipino instead of English. The better classes realize that they are far behind the march of civilization, and would take a keen interest in the schools, provided it did not involve the hopeless task of changing the language of the people. "But the Filipino has no national language," the advocate of the English will say, and to a certain extent this is true. There is, however, a great similarity between the different dialects, and an Ilocano can converse with a Tagalog or a Macabebe and always make himself understood. If the different tribes were brought into closer contact through the medium of roads and inter-island navigation, a national language would be evolved by a natural and unconscious process. The Spanish language outside of Manila could be ignored both in the schools and in all official documents, as less than 20,000 people speak Spanish in the whole archipelago.
> Indeed, the fact that after three hundred years of occupation by Spain only this small proportion of the population have learned to use a foreign tongue should be an object lesson to the Americans. For language is the outgrowth of the life of a people, and certainly the conditions which produced the English language are as different from those which produced the Filipino dialects as they well could be. To the Filipino the great body of the English language is useless, and if it were ever forced upon him he would mutilate it into an unlovely sort of pigeon English that would scarcely be recognized by Americans, and that would be much inferior to his own tongue. As the money (more than $2,000,000 a year) necessary to conduct this experiment comes out of the pockets of the Filipinos, the American people are looking on complacently to see what the result will be. If the money came from the United States Treasury the experiment would be short-lived indeed.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, Professor Daniels also tells us that the native presidentes are taking no interest whatever in this scheme of education, which is very different from some of the stories we have heard of the wild and tumultuous rush of the whole people, including old men and old women, as well as children at the breast, to unlearn the language of their country. Professor Daniels tells us that it is a hopeless task to change the language of the people, and in so far as it can succeed at all, it will simply result in a barbarous mixture and corruption of the two languages, forming a new language infinitely inferior to either.

Now, sir, if all this be true—and what man with a grain of common sense in his head does not know it to be true—then our scheme of so-called education in the Philippine Islands is not only useless and idle and futile, but it will be absolutely mischievous in its effects. The only good it will do to anybody will be to the school teachers who are getting their salaries and to the American book publishers who are selling the books.

Mr. President, Dr. Schurman, president of the first Philippine Commission, tells the truth when he says that the Filipinos must develop along their own racial lines, not ours. We can not recreate them in our own image. Left to themselves, free to adopt whatever they can assimilate and to reject what they can not, they will be profoundly and beneficially affected by our civilization, just as Japan has been; but any attempt arbitrarily to impose our own system, our own ideas, our own type and standard of civilization upon a people with such deeply fixed traits of racial character, a people so different from our own, is doomed to certain and inevitable failure. You can not modify the character of an oriental race by forcibly cramming them with your own ideas any more than you can change the character of a carnivorous animal by stuffing him with grass.

When we are asked, sir, to give you time, a thousand years or so, in which to elevate the character of the people and teach them the lesson of self-government, we say the course you are now pursuing will not elevate, it will degrade the character of the people and will utterly unfit them for self-government. The mistakes, the errors, the blunders you are making at this very moment are not questions to be considered ten centuries hence. They demand the present consideration of the American people. And because we will not be silent while you go on in your blundering and criminal career, making wreck of your own Constitution and the liberties of a people who have never offended you except by asking you to let them alone, we are to be held up to execration and charged with responsibility for every drop of blood that has been shed in the Philippine Islands.

That question I propose to deal with a little this evening. The question of responsibility for present conditions will not be determined by mere denunciation or abuse. It must be determined by the facts of history, and I shall appeal to that history as you yourselves have made it and as you yourselves have written it. It has been said that we are responsible because we have held out to the people the hope of independence. You not only filled them full of the hope of independence, but you armed them in the cause of independence, and now you have the devilish impudence to rail at us because they fight for independence.

The Senator from Wisconsin read certain notes of the secret proceedings of the Philippine junta to prove that no promises were made to Aguinaldo in his conference with Consul-General Pratt. What he read not only failed to sustain his contention, but it utterly disproves and falsifies an important statement put forward by the Philippine Commission and circulated broadcast for the purpose of affecting the Ohio election in 1899. That report of the Commission, after referring to the fact that Dewey had ordered Aguinaldo to remove his camp from Cavite to Bacoor in July, 1898, says, "then for the first time arose the idea of independence."

The extracts which the Senator from Wisconsin paraded before the Senate establish beyond controversy that at the very beginning of this business—at the very beginning of the negotiations—Aguinaldo and his associates were determined to achieve the independence of their country, and had even resolved to turn their arms against the United States in the event that this Government should attempt to extend its sovereignty over them. I say it proves that, and it does not prove his other contention. These extracts simply refer to a written agreement which they demanded and to an authoritative agreement with the Government of the United States.

But, Mr. President, what occurred between Aguinaldo and Consul-General Pratt is not a mystery, to be searched for among the secret proceedings of the Philippine junta. It is spread broadcast upon the records of your own Government, transmitted in the official report of Consul-General Pratt himself over his own signature. Now, I desire to refer briefly to that. Mr. Pratt transmitted to the Department of State a newspaper account of the interview between himself and Aguinaldo, which he said in his letter of transmission was a "substantially correct" report of the proceedings. Now, sir, this statement says:

> During this conference, at which Mr. Bray acted as interpreter, General Aguinaldo explained to the American consul-general, Mr. Pratt, the incidents and objects of the late rebellion, and described the present disturbed state of the country. General Aguinaldo then proceeded to detail the nature of the cooperation he could give, in which he, in the event of the American forces from the squadron landing and taking possession of Manila, would guarantee to maintain order and discipline among the native troops and inhabitants. * * *
> He further declared his ability to establish a proper and responsible government on liberal principles, and would be willing to accept the same terms for the country as the United States intend giving Cuba.
> The consul-general of the United States, coinciding with the general views expressed during the discussion, placed himself at once in telegraphic communication with Admiral Dewey at Hongkong.

That paper goes on to explain exactly what was meant by "the same terms for the country as the United States intend giving Cuba."

General Aguinaldo's policy embraces the independence of the Philippines, whose internal affairs would be controlled under European and American advisers. American protection would be desirable temporarily on the same lines as that which might be instituted hereafter in Cuba.

Mr. President, this is no lie invented by the wily Aguinaldo long after the event to cast dishonor and discredit upon the Government of the United States. It is Mr. Pratt's own statement, transmitted to his own Government over his own signature.

In the meanwhile Aguinaldo had gone to the Philippines on an American vesssel, and he proceeded to issue proclamations to his people, calling upon them to rally to his standard, and declaring that the Americans were there to help them achieve their independence. That fact and the proclamation itself were promptly transmitted to the American Government at Washington, and no word of protest was ever heard.

Now, sir, what was the effect of those proclamations? What was the effect of this appeal to the people in the name of independence? I have here a statement from ex-Minister John Barrett, the swiftest and most willing witness for imperialism in the United States:

The impression went abroad among the masses of the people that Aguinaldo had arrived to establish an independent government and that the Americans would assist him. The actual workings of his government under the guns of our ships was sufficient evidence to them of our approval. From one end of Luzon to the other spread the report that Gen. Emilio Aguinaldo, the exiled leader of the former revolution, had returned to his home under the protection of the ships of a nation called America, which had gone to war with Spain, and would give them their freedom and independence at once. These influences had a tremendous effect. Before Aguinaldo had been in Cavite a month he not only had more soldiers than he could arm, but contributions of large sums of money, with unlimited amounts of rice and other raw food supplies, brought in by the people for the support of his army.

Thus, sir, it is shown that the people rose in arms not simply to fight Spain, not with the hope of being transferred from the dominion of one country to that of another, but that they were burning with a desire and enthusiasm for independence.

Mr. President, here is the record. It shows that the Government of the United States knew that we had sought and obtained the military assistance of Aguinaldo and his associates, with a full knowledge that they were determined to achieve the independence of their country, and had sent him on an American vessel to the Philippines to organize an army to fight for independence.

I put the question: When, with a full knowledge of their purpose, you besought the aid and assistance of the avowed champions of Philippine independence, when you helped them to organize an army to fight for independence, what did you expect that army to do when you undertook to overthrow their independence?

Here were a people—a whole people—ablaze with enthusiasm for an independent government; a people with guns in their hands; a people with an army, organized, officered, and equipped, and flushed with victory, and you expect people to believe that if we had only kept our mouths shut that army would have surrendered the hope that was dearest to its heart and embraced the form of government it most loathed and detested and that it would have done this without a murmur and without a blow.

Sir, there may be men glaring through barred windows or beating their addled brains against padded walls to whom such a statement may seem credible, but for the honor of this Republic I am glad to believe that there is no such fool in the Senate of the United States.

If you intended to seize and hold the Philippine Islands, what an act of monumental folly and stupidity it was to put guns into the hands of the very men who had openly warned you that they intended to resist you to the very last if you attempted it. Put aside all question of promises, put aside the question even of good faith, of the obligation of conscience, why did you arm or help to arm a people ablaze with enthusiasm for independence, to arm them with rifles and cannon, if you did not expect them to fight for their independence? When you saw the people rallying to the standard of Aguinaldo and to the battle cry of independence you must have known and you did know that you would have to slaughter that army with your guns as soon as you had used it to serve your purpose. Deliberately and with a full understanding you have pursued a course whose known and inevitable effect was a bloody and desolating war against a people who but lately had been your allies and your brothers in arms.

You may rail at the Democratic party, but you can not rail the blood spots from off your own history. The responsibility for every drop of blood that has been shed in the Philippine Islands is with you, and it will remain with you though you wash your criminal hands in the bowl of Pontius Pilate forever.

Treason and traitor! A Senator on the other side of the Chamber imagines that he can hear soldiers in the Philippines singing:

Tell the traitors all around you,
Their cruel words we know.

I can not imagine any soldier singing any such song. I can only imagine a lot of Republican demagogues singing it, and I am sorry that one of them has sung it on the floor of the Senate.

So far as I am concerned I have never permitted myself to be disturbed by this cry of treason. We have got used to it down in my part of the country. There is hardly a man of distinction in my section of the United States who has not at some time or other been denounced as a public traitor by some public thief. Men have been denounced as traitors because they opposed the protective tariff. They have been denounced as traitors because they opposed extravagant pension legislation. So long as men have the courage to oppose wrong and denounce it there will be knaves to raise the cry of treason and fools to repeat the cry.

For the most part, sir, such abuse comes from brawling demagogues and may be passed with patient and serene contempt. But I regret to say that there have been men whose utterances usually command and usually deserve respect who have used language that will give countenance and encouragement to crawling slanderers who are not worthy to lick the dust at their feet.

I believe, sir, that I have as high respect for the office of President as any man in the country. I have much admiration for some of the strong and splendid qualities of the distinguished gentleman who now occupies that office, and because I have I very greatly regret that he has uttered language which for his honor I am glad to believe he will some time be ashamed of. In his address glorifying the strenuous life he says:

No small share of the responsibility for the blood shed in the Philippines—the blood of our brothers and the blood of their wild and ignorant foes—lies at the thresholds of those who so long delayed the adoption of the treaty of peace, and of those who by their worse than foolish words deliberately invited a savage people to plunge into a war fraught with sure disaster for them.

And again:

It must be remembered that their utterances are saved from being treasonable merely from the fact that they are despicable.

Mr. President, I have not quoted that language for the purpose of expressing resentment. I do not feel any. I know, sir, that we must make many allowances for that remarkable man, and especially must we not expect from him the language of moderation when dealing with the character and the motives of his political opponents. We must not judge the President in his moments of oratorical ferocity or by the way he ejaculates his parts of speech when the maniac frenzy of battle is in his blood.

The President is not vindictive, he is simply strenuous; and these outbursts are due to that abounding animal energy which makes it impossible for him to move except with a bound, to speak except at the top of his voice, or to express his disapproval except with the full strenght of his vocabulary. He is the strong man Kwasind, and rends and tears not from fury but from sheer excess of strength and energy. He resembles, in his habits of speech, my friend Joe Ballanfant's horse, of which remarkable animal it was said that running away was his natural gait. [Laughter.]

Now, I say that the President is not vindictive. I do not believe that he hates Democrats any more than he hates grizzly bears or mountain lions. He just loves to shoot them. He is an always loaded gun, and can only go off with the full force of the powder that is in him. In his talk about the "treasonable" and "despicable" utterances of men whose motives and opinions are as honest as his own, just as when he described Mr. Bryan as a red-handed anarchist in the last campaign, the President was simply "going off."

Mr. President, we are no more responsible for the resistance of the Filipinos than any man who anywhere or at any time has spoken the language of liberty and left his words upon the page of history as an inspiration to mankind. We are no more responsible than the author of that great document now being reviled by some of our military heroes as a "damned incendiary document."

I wish to suggest to our friends on the other side that when they get out a special Philippine edition of the Declaration of Independence they ought to edit it after the fashion of the distinguished junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who in a recent address paraphrased one of its immortal sentiments so as to make it read, "All civilized governments ultimately derive their power from the whole body of the people." Diluted with this word "ultimately" it is not half so incendiary, and I doubt whether in this form it would have ever set the American colonists on fire.

But, Mr. President, if we are to be held responsible because we are said to have held out words of hope and encouragement to the Filipinos, what shall be said of the responsibility of those who have habitually maddened them with words of insult and opprobrium, whose every utterance has been made as though with a deliberate purpose to destroy every hope of a just and liberal government at our hands and to plant in their bosoms an inextinguishable hatred of American rule?

Sir, we are not left to inference. Governor Taft in his testimony before the committee declared that the Filipinos are a proud and a sensitive people; that any words of contempt or disparagement, any words reflecting upon their character as a people, imputing to them savagery or barbarism—all such words he said quickly find their way to the Philippines and are used by the insurgent leaders with great effect to excite the animosity and hatred of the people and drive them into insurrection.

Now, sir, the first and worst offender in this respect is the President of the United States. "Savages," "barbarians," "a savage people," "a wild and ignorant people," "Apaches," "Sioux," "Chinese Boxers," these are the words habitually employed by him to describe a people nine-tenths of whom are sufficiently educated to read his bitter and scornful and contemptuous words!

What, sir, must have been the effect? We know that one of the leaders of the Filipinos made an indignant protest against such language on the part of the President. What must have been the effect when this language was spread broadcast before the people? At the very time when the Philippine Commission was seeking to conciliate the people, when it was holding out to them the alluring promise of a just and liberal government in which they should have a large and ever-increasing share of political power, Mr. Roosevelt was telling them that they were to be held and ruled and governed as mere savages and barbarians.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator from Tennessee kindly refer me to the document in which the President used those words?

Mr. CARMACK. I have just read it. It is page 1003, beginning at the top of the page. I will say that is not all by any means. It is all I happen to have right here. I can furnish the other to the Senator later.

How many thousands and tens of thousands of people were driven by these opprobrious and scornful words into insurrection against the United States? Why, Mr. President, Governor Taft the other day, in defending the action of the Philippine Commission in arresting and prosecuting Manila editors, said that their scornful and contemptuous words toward the Filipinos were destroying their confidence in the Philippine government and in the United States, and that it was necessary to stop such talk in order to keep these editors from stirring up insurrection.

Why, if the President of the United States were to go to Manila and utter and publish the very words he has uttered again and again in the United States he would be guilty of violating the sedition law as made and construed by his own Commission. His words would be classed as incendiary, as tending to inflame the people and stir them up to insurrection.

Ah, Mr. President, assume that we are responsible to the full measure that you charge, I say the fact will still remain that in this matter—responsibility for bloodshed in the Philippines—President Roosevelt is as much greater than William J. Bryan as David was greater than Saul.

And, Mr. President, some of our military heroes must bear their share of responsibility also. I want to say right here that I have become a trifle weary of the licentious insolence of some of these heroes. I have seen some real heroes from the Philippines, men who bear scars of battle to attest their bravery on the field; men who in the freedom of private conversation do not hesitate to tell you that they despise this whole Philippine business. But, sir, the idea seems to have gone abroad that the swiftest and surest way to the favor of the powers that be is to indulge in denunciation of the political opponents of this Administration, and if one has too much self-respect to do that then he had better keep his mouth shut.

Some time ago, when Dr. Schurman, a man who had been thought worthy by President McKinley to be the president of the Philippine Commission, declared that he had changed his views on this question and thought that the Filipinos should be given their independence, one of these military heroes in the Philippines expressed himself to the effect that if the Doctor would only come to the Philippines and say that he would land him in the penitentiary.

Mr. MONEY. He would, too.

Mr. CARMACK. He would be guilty, under the law, of a penitentiary offense. But, sir, that was nothing to what was to come.

Hardly had we comforted ourselves with the thought that we had only to remain within the shadow of our own Constitution to be secure against such vengeance when a new war whoop larumed our ear; and now there rushes red on our sight the jayhawker brigadier from the wind-swept plains, the renowned and immortal Funston. He is the most valiant captain that ever marshaled a dictionary in battle array, the mightiest Samson that ever wielded the jawbone of an ass as a weapon of war.

Funston achieved his title of hero by a violation of the rules of honorable warfare, by an act for which Aguinaldo would have been hanged in ten minutes if he had attempted it on an American officer.

But, sir, it is vain to go behind a hero's title. Funston is a hero officially acknowledged and proclaimed, and with all the rights, privileges, and immunities that go with the title. There have been heroes, sir, who were modest and unassuming. There have been heroes who were something more than licensed swaggerers and braggarts. But Funston is not of these. As a hero it is his business to heroize. What is the use of being a hero if you can not jar the sure and firm-set earth with your tread and shake the everlasting hills with your frequent vociferations? What is a hero for except to awe the world with his wide and majestic strut?

Funston is the lion of the Philippines, and because it is the nature of a lion to do that way, he shakes his tawny mane and swings his tufted tail 10 feet in the air while terror deep hushes the wilderness as his awful roar goes forth upon the trembling and affrighted breeze.

Mr. President, I read of a lion once that performed a part in the play of Pyramus and Thisbe. He was a stage-play lion, just like this fellow. [Laughter.] He knew as well as Funston that there is "not a more terrible wild fowl than your lion living." He knew that a "lion among ladies is a most dreadful thing." But he was a tender and a considerate lion, and lest his very presence should strike terror to the hearts of all beholders he prepared and recited a prologue in which he frankly assured the audience that he was not a lion truly; he was simply Snug, the joiner.

Now, Mr. President, I will take it upon myself to recite the prologue for this performer and tell the audience that it is not a real lion; it is nobody but Funston. [Laughter.] The performances of this doughty warrior illustrate the danger of a small man becoming a hero too suddenly. There is always danger of his overacting the part, and that is what Funston is doing seven days in the week. In his efforts to bestride the world like a Colossus he has put a strain upon his military trousers with results too shocking for modesty to contemplate or parliamentary language to mention. [Laughter.]

As soon as Funston had achieved his title of hero his ambition swelled beyond the measure of his environment. No pent-up archipelago could contract his powers—a whole boundless continent must be his.

So having quelled the insurrection in the Philippines, he comes with one stride across the shuddering deep to deal with the insurgents at home. For this purpose he has laid aside his "blameful, bloody sword," and armed himself with a hangman's noose—"to wield in judgment and at length to wear." His plan of campaign is simplicity itself. He proposes simply to hang all the traitors, all who oppose the policy of this Administration. Yet, there are men in this list of doomed criminals who had proved their devotion to their country when Funston was mewling and puking in his nurse's arms—men whose white hairs are a crown of glory, men whose lives are without a stain of dishonor, men who stand so high above this hangman brigadier that it is almost an insult to decency to mention their names and his on the same day of the week.

There are some disappointments in store for our hero. Age and care and the burden of noble tasks have robbed his gallows of some of its most illustrious victims. The late Senator Morrill, of Vermont, died breathing treason to the last. The late John Sherman, of Ohio, denounced this war in the bitterest and most unmeasured terms. What a pity they could not have got old John and hung him before he died a natural death. There was ex-President Harrison. His pen was busy with treason when death claimed him. But still there are enough to hold Funston for a while. There are ex-Senator Edmunds, of Vermont, and ex-Governor Boutwell, and Carl Schurz, and Tom Reed. I can easily recall the time when I should like to have seen Tom hung. [Laughter.] Last, but by no means least, there is the distinguished senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]; and if that Senator is disposed to murmur at his fate, I can tell him that it will not be the first time in history that men as great as he, as patriotic as he, as brave and as high-minded as he, have been hung by just such fellows as Funston.

I noticed in the papers the other day that Funston said the President had entirely approved of his gallows diatribe and was very anxious for him to accept the invitation of the junior Senator from Massachusetts to go to Boston and help him organize a movement there for hanging the senior senator from Massachusetts. [Laughter.] Unfortunately, Funston was previously engaged elsewhere for a similar function, and so the junior Senator from Massachusetts was not able to pull off the little lynching bee he had arranged for his colleague. [Laughter.] I suppose it will come off later, and that this is just a reprieve.

But, Mr. President, the plain truth of the matter is that Funston can not hang anybody. The Constitution still stands, and it is by the language of that instrument, and not by the words of a blatherskite brigadier, that the crime of treason is defined. Trial by jury is still the right of every American citizen. Funston should go back to the Philippines, to a land where there is plenty of hemp and no constitution. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I introduced Funston into this debate in pursuance of my inquiry as to who was most responsible by words for the prolongation of the war in the Philippines. I say that if we are to hang men without regard to the Constitution or the law, without judge or jury, for provoking the Filipinos to war and insurrection, then the very first neck to feel the strangling clutch of the soaped rope should be the heroic gullet of Brig. Gen. Fred A. Funston. Every word he has uttered since he has been in the Philippine Islands has been uttered as though with a deliberate purpose to inflame, to incite, and to arouse the people and drive them to hostility against the United States.

Two or three years ago, in a letter written over his own signature, which was published in the newspapers of the United States, he said that as soon as this insurrection was over he wanted to see the people over there put and kept under a military government, the only kind of government they were fit for, and ruled with a rod of iron. Yet, Mr. President, Governor Taft tells us that it was the fear of that very thing, which he said was instilled into them by their leaders, that kept the people in insurrection.

Yet Funston was saying the very same thing. The Filipino leaders could go to their people and tell them this and then prove it by Funston. And some time ago, when the Philippine Commission, in order to pacify the people and induce them to submit, arranged a plan of government, including a legislature, of which one chamber was to be elected by a small body of the people, Funston rushed forward and entered his indignant protest against it, and said, "If you give the people over here any liberty at all, they will ask for more." He protested against the policy proclaimed by the Commission for the very purpose of pacifying the people. What was this but the act of a meddlesome marplot, trying to defeat the work of the Commission and to make trouble for his own Government?

The very speech in which he proposes the gallows is filled with the most indiscriminate abuse of the whole Philippine people, leaders and followers, all of whom are pictured by Funston as the vilest brood of vermin that ever crawled upon the face of the earth. He dismisses with contempt the testimony of Dewey and of MacArthur and of Schurman and of Taft. He says, "I never knew but two people of ability and patriotism in the whole Philippine Islands, and one of these is dead." Thus the very people relied upon by our Commission to aid them in the work of pacifying the Filipinos, and who, as Governor Taft said, have done more to that end than the armies have done, are outrageously and deliberately insulted by Funston for no other purpose that I can see except to excite their rage and animosity and drive them back into insurrection so that he can catch them again. [Laughter.]

I do not say that was his purpose; I would not attribute any purpose whatever to so reckless an egotist as this fellow Funston. But I do say that I have no doubt whatever that he has made ten times as much trouble with his mouth as he has ever cured with his sword. [Laughter.]

I could fill pages of the RECORD with such things as this. There is my distinguished friend from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE]—I am sorry he is not here, and I am always sorry when he is not here—but I have it from the highest authority that the speech made by that distinguished Senator in which he reviled and abused the people in the Philippines and held them up to scorn and contempt was circulated broadcast throughout the Philippines, and that it did more than almost any other cause to drive the people into insurrection. I say that with a good deal of respect for that speech, for it was an able speech and an honest one. It was a speech that truly interpreted the thoughts and wishes of his party. The Senator simply said boldly and bravely what other Senators mean, but dare not say.

And your acts have been in harmony with your utterances. The inevitable effect of the legislation enacted in this very Congress, of the very bill now before the Senate, must be to disappoint the just expectations of the Philippine people and to petrify their hatred and their opposition to American rule. The Philippine Commission made an earnest appeal to this Congress for a large reduction in the rates of duty on Philippine goods. This appeal was made not simply for economic reasons, but in the interest of peace, for the purpose of removing the distrust and hostility of the people. That appeal was treated with utter contempt. The bill which came here from the other House bore the full rates of the Dingley law, and this Senate made only a nominal reduction.

Governor Wright, the acting president of the Commission, cabled a message appealing to us to make a reduction of 75 per cent, and giving it as the opinion of the business interests there that a reduction of even 50 per cent would be absolutely prohibitive and do no good whatever. He based that appeal largely on political grounds—on the ground that it would have a happy and pacifying effect on the temper and disposition of the people. I say you dismissed that appeal with contempt; you served notice on those people that you would show no consideration whatever for their interests, where there was involved even the possibility of competition, no matter how trifling and inconsequential, with American products.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PATTERSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I voted, I think, for the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] proposing a 50 per cent reduction.

Mr. CARMACK. I did not.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator remember how many Democrats voted for and against that proposition?

Mr. CARMACK. There were a great many who voted against it. I know that. I know, furthermore, that every Democrat in this Chamber who cast his vote voted for absolute free trade with the people of the Philippine Islands. We believe that a duty of one single cent upon the products of the Philippine Islands is a flagrant violation of the Constitution. That is what we think about it. So far as I am concerned, I am not sure that I would have voted for the amendment of the Senator from Ohio even if I had thought it constitutional, because it was not worth the paper on which it was written.

Mr. GALLINGER. Just a word more, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. We recognize the fact that the Senator regarded any rate of duty as unconstitutional, but of course the Senator will admit that those of us who do not take that view of the matter are equally as sincere as is the Senator.

Mr. CARMACK. Of course; I have never questioned that in the least.

Believing that such a duty was unconstitutional, we could not consistently vote for it. I think that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio would have been worthless, anyway. That very message sent here by Governor Wright declared that a duty of 50 per cent would be absolutely prohibitory and do no good whatever. It was a reduction in form, but not a reduction in effect. It was like the witches' prophecy, which keeps the word of promise to the ear but breaks it to the hope.

The people of the Philippine Islands had asked for bread and the committee offered them a stone. The Senator from Ohio moved to amend by striking out "stone" and inserting "brickbat." [Laughter.] They had asked for a fish and the committee gave them a serpent. The Senator from Ohio was not willing to concede the fish, but, in the abounding generosity of his nature, he offered to compromise on a water dog. [Laughter.] That is just about the meaning of that amendment.

Mr. President, there is one other influence that has been a powerful obstacle to peace in the Philippine Islands, and that has been the eagerness to enter upon the exploitation of the country, the gluttonous hunger to devour the prey and divide the spoils. General MacArthur, in his report, shows us something of the exasperating effect upon the people, of the effect in prolonging their hostility and prolonging this war, of this indecent haste to treat those islands and the whole people as the spoils of war. The entire archipelago is swarming with needy and desperate adventurers, seeking to reap their inhuman harvest from the calamities of the people. American Congressmen and American officials have been forming syndicates and prowling over that country, seeking to make off with something that could be turned into a dollar. The whole pack of lean and famished carpetbaggers that once feasted upon the South seem to be howling upon the scent of another victim.

Why, Mr. President, when General Hughes was before our committee he presented at the conclusion of his testimony a newspaper article, written by one A. Burlingame Johnson, which he desired to have made part of his testimony. There was nothing in the article particularly, except a charge that the Democrats were responsible for all the trouble over there. I suppose that some Republican member of the committee had handed it to General Hughes and asked him to insert it as a part of his testimony. I questioned General Hughes about this A. Burlingame Johnson, and the fact was developed that he had been prowling around over the islands representing a syndicate seeking for something that could be made the basis of profit and speculation, and that he had been importuning General Hughes to grant him all manner of franchises and concessions, which he must have known General Hughes had no authority to do.

I want to say that I believe if the Philippine Commission would exercise some of its arbitrary power by taking every such fellow as A. Burlingame Johnson, and leading him to the uttermost verge of the archipelago, and kicking him thence into the midst of the sea, it would earn a year's salary for every kick. [Laughter.]

I will not stop to read, but I will insert in my remarks an extract from General MacArthur's testimony, telling of the trouble that is being made by this rush to exploit the country.

The matter referred to is as follows:

In this connection it may not be improper to state that one of the greatest difficulties attending military efforts to tranquilize the people of the archipelago arises from their dread of sudden and excessive exploitation, which they fear would defraud them of their natural patrimony, and at the same time relegate them to a status of social and political inferiority.

Again, he says:

If a spirit of Philippine speculation should seize the public mind in the United States and be emphasized by means of grants, concessions, and special franchises for the purpose of quick exploitation, the political situation and permanent interests of all concerned might be seriously jeopardized.

Mr. President, the whole spirit and purpose, the dominant idea of this whole Philippine policy, the dominant idea that has been proclaimed by Republican Senators again and again upon the floor of this Senate, the dominant idea of this very bill, is the very thing that General MacArthur condemns as the cause of so much trouble and so much strife and bloodshed in the Philippine Islands. It is proposed here to make a wholesale grant of franchises and concessions, a wholesale distribution of tracts of thousands and tens of thousands, and God only knows how many more, acres of the land of the Philippine people without giving the people themselves any voice whatever in the business.

You have stricken out of the bill that provision recommended by the Philippine Commission, and urgently recommended by General MacArthur, which provided for a legislative assembly, one branch of which should be elected by a limited number of the people—those educated to speak and write the Spanish language. You have provided in place of that for a census report upon the capacity of the people for self-government. The Commission had already reported that those at least who could read and write the Spanish language were a highly intelligent people; that they were entirely capable of such government as that proposed by the Commission. You knew that already without any census. Why not give to those people some power in the government before you proceed to give away the whole country?

Mr. President, I will now ask for the reading of an extract from the book written by Dr. Schurman, Philippine Affairs, beginning where I have marked on page 67 and ending on page 72.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Taft Commission has asked that authority be conferred upon it by Congress to issue bonds, to grant municipal franchises, to pass a general public-land law, to make laws and regulations in regard to mines and forests, to pass a general incorporation law, and to "issue charters to commercial railroads, with power to make donations of lands or guarantee the interest on the investments, or both." These objects are all desirable, and some of them indispensable, to the prosperity of the Filipinos. Whether any of them should be handled by Congress directly I shall not venture to discuss. But if they are turned over by Congress to the discretion of the Philippine government I submit that the delegation of power should be accompanied by a restriction, which, to my way of thinking, is all essential. Let me briefly explain.

The Taft Commission, as I have already said, concurs with the first Philippine Commission in recommending the establishment of a central government for the Philippine Islands, in which there shall be a legislature consisting of an upper house, in which the members (who are to be both Filipinos and Americans) shall be partly or wholly appointed by the President of the United States, and a lower house, whose members shall be elected by the Filipinos themselves. But in recommending Congress to enact a law for the establishment of this central government they request that it go into operation on January 1, 1904. Now, as the several grants of power for which the Commission petitions Congress, taken collectively, have to do with the weightiest and most far-reaching subjects which for many years to come can engage the attention of any government at Manila, I submit that these powers, if now delegated by Congress, should not be exercised till the Filipinos themselves enjoy through their popular assembly an equal share in the legislative deliberations and an equal voice in the legislative decisions.

I should indeed greatly regret the postponement of these beneficent economic measures till 1904; but, however grievously the delay, it would be infinitely better than to ignore, and by ignoring to belittle, the popular assembly of Filipinos, who, in 1904, are to become coordinate and coequal legislators with the members of the Commission. But another solution is at hand. Why not have the central government for the archipelago, which the first and second Philippine Commission agree in recommending, begin at an earlier date, say in 1902? As to the exact time, it might be on July 4; or, if the Filipinos prefer, on December 30, the anniversary of the martyrdom of their scholar patriot, Rizal.

At any rate, I am perfectly clear on the main point. Either the powers requested by the Commission should not (if granted) be exercised before January 1, 1904, when the Filipinos will be represented in a popular assembly, which is to be an organic part of the government, or if the powers are to be exercised earlier, the inauguration of the new government should be moved forward to the same date. The Philippines are for the Filipinos. We have no right to vote away their public property and franchises without their joint consent. If Filipinos, as legislators and administrators, are to join us in the government of the archipelago, why should the weightiest and most important business be disposed of before their admittance? And if we are to train them up in the ways of self-government, where shall we find more stimulating and more sobering tasks to set them for their first lessons?

There is still another reason why Americans should have the cooperation of Philippine legislators and administrators in dealing with Philippine public property and franchises. They would in this way avail themselves of popular sentiment, of local knowledge and circumstances, which it is impossible for Americans otherwise to ascertain. Take, for example, the subject of railroads. The Commission recommends the construction of 1,000 miles in Luzon and probably 500 in Mindanao. Yet, in that connection, they state, very truly, that "the island of Mindanao, with an area of something more than 36,000 square miles, except along its littoral, is practically terra incognita."

Now, the Christian Filipinos who live on the seacoast are likely to know more of the conditions which prevail among the Mohammedan and heathen tribes in the vast interior than anybody else. They, with the Jesuit missionaries, must instruct the Philippine government in regard to that "practically terra incognita." But, until they have been heard, until the subject has been thoroughly discussed by Filipinos in their popular assembly, who can tell whether 500 miles of railway in Mindanao would pay operating expenses in the next five or fifty years?

Now, can the American authorities afford to neglect the wisdom and the sentiment of the duly elected representatives of the Filipinos in the fields better known than Mindanao. The Commission recommends 1,000 miles of railway for the island of Luzon, which at present has one railway about 100 miles in length, extending northward from Manila to Dagupan. Now, in the great multiplication of railways contemplated by the Commission there is a line from Dagupan on the coast to Benguet in the mountains which, though only 55 miles in length, will, of necessity, be very difficult and expensive to construct.

Are there any communities of Filipinos who desire this railroad? So far as appears, it is for the sole benefit of Americans. This road would afford convenient access "to the highlands of Benguet, in which," says the Commission, "it is hoped and believed ultimately the sanitarium of the Philippines will be located." Sanitarium for whom? Of course for American officials, who find the climate of Manila and other Philippine towns oppressive and intolerable for certain portions of the year. And as a railroad can not be constructed in a day, the Commission has already started a highway.

"The only road," according to the report, "which has been put in course of construction under the immediate direction of the Commission is that extending from the town of Pozorubio to the town of Baguio, in the province of Benguet." Now a sanitarium for American officials in the mountains of Benguet is a very desirable object; if their stay is to be prolonged in the Philippines such a sanitarium might even be described as a hygienic necessity. And in that case who can doubt the expediency of railway extension to Benguet? But when all that is conceded—and I concede it fully—I hold that American authorities have no right to vote Philippine money or credit for this object without the consent of the representatives of the Philippine people.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I will suggest that my colleague [Mr. CARMACK] has spoken for two hours, and as it is now after 4 o'clock, I should like to know if it would be agreeable to him that we should now adjourn or whether he would rather proceed with his remarks?

Mr. CARMACK. I will say to my colleague that I believe I would prefer to go on to-morrow.

Mr. BATE. Then I suggest to the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], if it be agreeable to him, that we take an adjournment.

Mr. LODGE. I am glad to accommodate the Senator from Tennessee in any way I can, and I will move an executive session immediately after I present a conference report, which I ask permission to present at this time.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PROTECTION OF AMERICAN LABOR.

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Committee on Labor be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9053) for the necessary and better protection of American labor and enforcement of the law of domicile and the restriction of immigration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio moves the change of reference of the bill which the Clerk will report by its title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9053) for the necessary and better protection of American labor and enforcement of the law of domicile and the restriction of immigration.

The SPEAKER. This is a matter that is not debatable. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL ASSISTANT DRIVER.

Mr. BULL. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Accounts to report and ask for the consideration of the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 173.

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House be, and is hereby, authorized to employ an assistant driver for the folding-room team, at a compensation at the rate of $50 per month, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House until otherwise provided for.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman if this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Accounts?

Mr. BULL. I will say to the gentleman that it is a unanimous report from the Committee on Accounts. It is reported to the committee that it is absolutely necessary that there should be this additional assistant driver on account of the large amount of documents and speeches.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

PROVISION FOR FOLDING SPEECHES AND PAMPHLETS.

Mr. BULL. I now ask for the consideration of the other resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution No. 208.

Resolved, That the sum of not exceeding $3,000 is hereby authorized to be expended, under the direction of the Doorkeeper of the House, for the purpose of folding speeches and pamphlets, at a rate not exceeding $1 per thousand; and the Clerk of the House is authorized to make payment hereunder out of the contingent fund of the House upon vouchers approved by the Committee on Accounts.

The report (by Mr. BULL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred House resolution No. 208, authorizing the expenditure of not exceeding $3,000 for the purpose of folding speeches and pamphlets under the direction of the Doorkeeper of the House, have had the same under consideration and recommend its adoption.

This proposed expenditure is made necessary by reason of the large number of speeches to be delivered to the folding room during the coming summer. Already orders have been given for the printing of millions of copies of speeches recently delivered in the House, and with the speeches hereafter to be made and printed, the aggregate number of speeches to be folded will reach an exceedingly large figure. The regular force of the folding room is inadequate to handle this immense increase of work.

It has been the custom in the past in what are known as "Presidential" and "Congressional" years to employ an additional number of folders, but your committee believe the work can be done at much less expense than formerly, by the adoption of the accompanying resolution, providing for the folding of speeches at a sum not exceeding $1 per thousand, and by limiting the amount of the total expenditure for this purpose to not exceeding $3,000. In the long session of the Fifty-sixth Congress $7,000 was appropriated for the use of the Senate for the folding of speeches and pamphlets, in addition to the regular appropriation for the usual number of folders. It will be seen, therefore, that the expenditure of $3,000 for this purpose, contemplated by the resolution reported herewith, is a reasonable allowance and will effect a great saving by removing the necessity for the appointment of additional folders, as was the custom in past Congresses.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BULL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. GIBSON. I move to reconsider the various votes by which bills reported to-day from the Committee of the Whole House were passed, and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 13895) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13895, the Agricultural bill, with Mr. POWERS of Maine in the chair.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the floor to my colleague [Mr. LESSLER], and I yield it to him in his own right.

Mr. LESSLER. Mr. Chairman, the liberty of general debate under the bill gives me an opportunity to say a few words on the subject of the post-office in the city of New York. I will confess that it is rather a discouraging proposition for any man to get together with himself and study up a subject of any sort with the idea in his mind of trying to present a state of facts which he has studied and which the time, so much taken up by the other members, will not permit them to investigate. However, I suppose that the general proposition of each man is that he must do that which he thinks best, and if I can get one or two listeners from the far South or the far West and tell them some of the things about New York and about our post-office and what we do and what we need, I will have gained just so much by having one or two listeners.

The status of a new man in the House of Representatives is probably one of the most anomalous things that has ever, in the slang phrase, "come over the pike." He is not much of anything for a long time after he gets into the House, but there are a few things that he learns in a very short space of time. Now, I am not going along on the proposition of bucking up against the rule, because I see one or two of my fellow-members straightening out. In point of fact I have been impressed with the number of men in this House who unselfishly, I think, are making their life work the proposition of legislating for this great country. There is no denying that the men who have come here year in and year out, who are of influence in these great United States of America, whose voices when raised in this Hall are not confined to the limits of this Chamber, are deserving of great credit at the hands of their fellow-countrymen.

The wise statesmanship of long experience, hard application in committee, which men have to give year in and year out with a recompense that is inadequate compared to similar work in private life, with a lack of self-interest and devotion to the best interest of their land at large has impressed me very earnestly, and some of the men on this floor—my colleagues, I am very proud to say—seem to me to be deserving of great credit at the hands of their fellow-countrymen. It is, however, impossible for any one man or number of men to know everything. Time will not permit that, and so it is that, so far as I can see, men become in this House sort of specialists, and there are times when a special interest will come up which seems likely to be lost in the great subjects that present themselves to this body.

Were I able to command attention from the men I consider the leaders of this House of Representatives, I would try and address myself to the open mind that shows the absence of provincialism and marks men of high culture, of high standing, and of a high degree and order of statesmanship, because, while it may look to you that this is the plea of a man who wants a post-office building to make himself solid with his constituents, I want to say to you, and say it frankly, that my desire is to present to you some facts, knowing full well that many of you are not accustomed to sitting and listening to facts and figures, and to try and present them to you in such a way as will demonstrate that a man who talks for a new or additional post-office in New York is not conserving any private or local interests, but is addressing you in behalf of the best interests, not alone of his constituency, not alone of my great city, but of the great people of the United States, whom we all represent and the best interests of whom we have every desire to conserve.

In passing, it seems almost idle, Mr. Chairman, to say that whatever the feeling may be on the subject of New York there is not a man or woman in these United States who does not feel a proper pride in the empire city of the great Western Hemisphere, and who does not feel a particular sense of satisfaction when we come from the great city and preach to you the great living and throbbing force that is opening up, and is there incisively demonstrating the great features and output of our national life and existence. [Applause.] New York City has ceased to be the city of a State, and within the last few years, while all of us have been talking about the high tide of our national prosperity—its source, and whence it came—New York City began its great march on the way to be the financial center of the civilized world, and to take its place as the great mart of the world. With all its sizzling, bustling city life it is the great outlet of the country, and it is the great gate where are welcomed all who come to us. Now, let me try—to the few patient listeners that I have—to talk figures. Somewhere long ago I once read that figures can lie in any sort of fashion, dependent upon how clever the man is who uses them.

I am not going to weary you at all to tell you how much time it has taken to gather these figures and collate them and put them in front of you. I want to start you in the year 1875, two years more than a quarter of a century ago, a growth that has taken place within the lives of men in this House, except probably my young friend from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] who just about started his growth at the period to which I first recur.

In 1875 the great city—not the greater city but the great city—had 1,064,787 inhabitants. That figure I have been compelled to estimate. In 1902 the borough of Manhattan, which immediately concerns me, Manhattan Island proper and the Bronx, has 2,153,130 inhabitants. That figure is also estimated on the census of two years ago. That is a gain of about 107 per cent in population. Eighteen hundred and seventy-five was the year that New York blossomed out and had its great post-office building. It occupied historic ground which was ceded by the city. It was in the center of a hive of industry. This awe-inspiring building with its tremendous proportions looked down upon the old buildings erected by the Dutch forefathers in New York. It was not then, as it is to-day, surrounded by its 20-story giant neighbors. There was no 28-story building opposite. It had the old stage line; it had many of the things of the old régime, including Broadway with its cobblestones. In 1875 New York thought it a wonderful place, and some of you may remember that right in the rear of it is our city hall.

When that was built, some forty years before, so lightly did men think that New York would ever grow to Chambers street, that while the front of the building is marble, the rear was made of a brown stone, because people thought that nobody would ever live above Chambers street in New York City. Yet to-day I would remind you that we go 15 miles to the Yonkers line.

However, under the old order of architecture, the building was opened after six years during which it was under construction, in 1875. The halls of that building are tremendous and beautiful. Some of the rooms are like ballrooms. The court rooms are beautiful, and in many ways an ornament to the city; but there is another picture to which we will come later, of what the post-office has to put up with.

In 1875 the old post-office in New York did a business of $2,892,637.74. On June 30, 1902, based upon a proportionate calculation, New York City proper will have done a business of $11,596,040.70, a gain during the lifetime of my friend from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] of $8,703,402.96, or over 300 per cent; and I want to remind you that while that tremendous gain went on, the first-class postal rates were cut on the 1st of October, 1883, from 3 cents to 2 cents per half ounce, and that the second-class matter was reduced from 2 cents to 1 cent an ounce, and that since then the first-class rate has been changed by making it 2 cents an ounce instead of 2 cents per half ounce.

I have not the figures of the number of persons employed in the post-office in 1875, but in 1891 there were 1,209 persons who earned their living during the daytime in the part of that building devoted to the post-office in New York City, while in 1901 there were 1,575 people who labored there.

And while we are on that proposition let me say to you that the Federal courts in New York City are in the post-office building, that the district attorney is in the post-office building, and that the basement, the first floor, and part of the second floor are occupied by the post-office authorities only. The figures given me show that the ground floor has 23,158 square feet; that the basement has 30,770 square feet; that the gallery and second floor have 37,433 square feet, making a total of 91,361 square feet.

However, the wisdom of the architect made the hall space so magnificent and grand—and I think you could march a company file full through its halls—that there is a net floor space used of 23,158 square feet, and the office for 1,000,000 people in 1875 is the same office for two and one-half millions in 1902.

The office which took in $2,000,000 per year in 1875 is the same office that now takes in $11,000,000 a year—earns a profit of over $6,000,000 every year for the postal authorities to spend on other places where they have a great deficit. The force which probably was four or five hundred people in 1875, augmented to fifteen hundred in 1902, works in the same space, or a little less, because they put in a pneumatic affair which takes up some of their space, and then they were refused an appropriation to carry on the work, and that is so much being taken away from the rest of the building.

Just let me illustrate one day's work in the New York post-office in the space I speak of. The letter mail originating by the piece in New York, mailed and handled, as I understand it, at the post-office in one day, was 1,551,033 pieces, weighing 36,303 pounds. In addition to that there were received in the mail 252,169 letters on that day, weighing 5,864 pounds. The pouches sent out to 262 post-office centers from that place on 146 routes, each one weighing 19 pounds, were 1,692, with a total weight in all of 32,148 pounds.

Take the newspapers of the second, third, and fourth class matter: Sacks of matter, each weighing 60 pounds, numbered 2,870 and were in weight 172,200 pounds. There were dispatched, in addition, to 546 post-offices along 340 routes, 9,721 sacks, weighing the tremendous amount of 583,260 pounds. The total weight for one day handled there was 755,460 pounds, which would illustrate to us and allow us to draw the axiom that in the year 1901, at least, the famed city of New England was no longer "the center of the solar system and the hub of the universe," but that New York supplies most of reading matter to the United States and has clearly demonstrated the fact that at last it is a literary center of the United States of America. [Loud applause.]

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Is the literature as good as that sent from Boston?

Mr. LESSLER. I will come to that a little later on. The port of New York, the figures show, is the port to which come and from which go our foreign mails, and on this day there were received and dispatched in steamers in New York 120 bags of letters, weighing 1,570 pounds, and 165 bags of papers, weighing 7,102 pounds, which would lead me to infer and deduce that our culture and civilization are spreading to the heathen in foreign lands in addition to helping the rest of the United States and spreading enlightenment over our fellow-countrymen. [Loud applause.] The total number of letters on the day that I referred to was 2,459,668 letters, the number of bags was 11,705, and the weight 80,423 pounds. In one year the city of New York has handled 897,778,820 letters; the number of bags was 4,272,325, and their weight 293,514,680 pounds; rather an interesting array of figures on the actual horsepower lifting work done in the city of New York by the post-office authorities.

I want to talk now on the subject of receipts. I want to start by saying that the revenue of the office in 1901 was $6,991,790.40. The office is run at an expense of 37 per cent of the income. I give you the figure as estimated by the post-office of the receipts there up to June 30 next, based on the figures on June 30 last—$11,022,927.01. I want to present to you the relation of figures in the reports of the Postmaster-General and his Auditor in relation to the amount of money and work done in other parts of the United States.

In 1837 the entire income of the post-offices of the United States of America was $4,945,668.21, and it was not until 1862 that I can find a figure somewhere near the income for the post-office in New York in 1901; and in 1862 the postal service of the United States earned $11,163,789.59. New York in its receipts in 1901 was pretty near 10 per cent of the receipts of the entire United States of America that year, when they were $111,631,193.39.

But I want to present to you some little figures, and I do it with great kindness of heart and in the hope that the constituents that I am calling up here for your benefit will understand that I do not do this invidiously, but to show by way of contrast the actual working, living force that is to be deduced from the fact of the enormous receipts that are taken in and the enormous mail matter that comes in and goes out of the post-office at New York.

I have been a little interested in the State of Nebraska since the subject of the post-office bill has been agitated; and I find that the first, second, and third class post-offices in Nebraska, numbering 115, earned $1,125,851, or 10 per cent of the total of that New York earned. We hear a great deal about the force Iowa has in the United States about this time of the year, and especially while Congress is in session.

The great State of Iowa, with 251 offices, earned $2,247,160, or, to reverse the proposition, New York City earns 400 per cent more than Iowa. The great State of Ohio, which furnishes us with a number of Presidents, has 237 post-offices, and they earned $5,413,022, or New York earned 200 per cent more than the State of Ohio. Pennsylvania has 323 post-offices. Remember, gentlemen, each one of these offices means a Presidential appointment, with the Senate of the United States to pass upon the man who takes the office. Pennsylvania, all Pennsylvania, earned $8,062,093. Then Massachusetts, with 176 offices, earned $6,064,010—even if it has Boston in its ranks and in the heart of that great State. South Dakota, with 51 offices, earned $269,394. Tennessee, with 60 offices, earned $962,125; Kansas, with 138 offices, $1,164,481; Indiana, with 169 offices, $2,215,282, and Wisconsin, with 150 offices, $2,078,679.

I have taken the trouble to get together the figures for all the New England States, with 442 offices, with 27 Congressmen and 12 Senators, and all New England—containing Boston—earned $8,937,574. I also was curious on the subject of the Southern States, and taking everything below Washington, including Kentucky, and just throwing in Texas by way of balance, with 591 offices, with 97 Congressmen and 34 Senators, these States earned $8,318,753; and I think when I present that fact to my friends from New England and my friends from the South—and they are my friends—it ought to add a little to their feeling and desire to help New York get what it needs—a post-office, or, better, its addition.

I want to come to the money-order proposition. I have not been able to find out how it originated, but every money order, as I understand it, that is bought at any post-office in the United States eventually is handled in that post-office building in the city of New York, and last year—in 1901—the drafts on the post-office at New York City amounted to $20,927,594.71, and there was paid in that office the sum of $20,540,084.83. That is my first proposition, making New York not simply a city, but making New York absolutely the outlet and the active centering point of everyone who uses the mails for financial purposes in the United States of America.

Let us take, for instance, the subject of foreign mail. Suppose that some one in Omaha, Nebr., desires to send a letter to England, or Ireland, or France, or anywhere abroad; he buys his 5-cent stamp in Omaha, and the credit of that purchase is given to the post-office at Omaha. Where does it come? To New York. New York takes it from the train, puts it on the ship, and it is sent out and away from New York. New York gets no credit, but Omaha gets it for doing that work. When there is an answer sent to Omaha from England, 2½ cents is paid in England, and the English post-office gets the credit. New York handles, New York sorts, and New York transships to Omaha, Nebr.; but nowhere do the figures show that New York gets the credit for that work. The work of the loading and unloading is done in New York. New York does the work practically for the entire United States of America for everything that goes to Europe and the countries abroad.

What is the condition of the post-office in New York? The condition is practically that they are doing an enormously increased work there with the same facilities that they had in 1875. Do I need to demonstrate to any man that it requires more work to take care of the mail facilities for two million and a quarter of people than it does to take care of one million and sixty-four thousand? The actual working space in that post-office, as I saw it recently, is one that should be brought to the attention of this House. The carrier who is sorting his mail, as I was told in the post-office the other day, has an average space, for his nine deliveries during the day, 4 or 5 feet with its row of box-shelves. To-day five men are working in some poorly lighted place where only two men have room to work. But when I went into the cellar and saw white men, saw citizens, I thought of the many speeches I had heard on this floor—men crying out until I thought the room would flood with tears of pity for the Filipinos and for the Boers in the concentrated camps.

Instead of that, think of these men, citizens like yourself, who are working for the United States of America in the cellar of the post-office in New York. They require more attention and more sympathy and more tears than all the maudlin sentiment that we are going to hear on this floor until Congress adjourns. [Applause.] You will find men down there in semidarkness, bringing in these great sacks of mail covered with grime, the dust percolating thick through the air and stifling the atmosphere, in the temperature of 150° in summer and over 100° in winter. Oh, but you say they do not have to work. Yes; they have to work. It is not so easy in the condition of life in New York for a man to abandon a place that he has acquired by long good behavior, because maybe he is limited in his power to get another, and he may be cut off a few years earlier by getting some disease in the horrible condition of this post-office building.

Perhaps it is not of much concern to the gentlemen who have eulogized the Boers in South Africa and the Filipinos over at Manila whether these men suffer or they do not suffer. But I say to you that it is a great deal better to keep the oath that we have taken to protect the people at home and never mind so much about the problems that are staring us in the face nine or ten thousand miles away from home.

I have not so much concern for the camp at New Orleans or the British captains there as I have for the horrible condition of the men working for Uncle Sam, who are entitled to a decent place to work in the post-office in the Empire City of New York, among the civilized people of the United states, who cry their eyes out if they hear of the Black Hole of Calcutta and weep tears when they think of convicts in Sing Sing being put in a black hole or something done to them which they deserve. My idea is that we have a great deal to do at home, and with the due deference of a very young member in this Hall I present to you the condition of men in New York, only 286 miles away from Washington.

It seems to a great many men in New York that on the subject of public buildings, especially post-offices, the Government has been unwise—to put it moderately and temperately. We pay nearly $250,000 to-day in the city of New York for the rental of branch post-offices or substations. A wise policy would inaugurate to-day a system of purchase. It ought to have been inaugurated years and years ago, because land in New York City is not sold by the acre, but by the foot, and every foot means money. This Government would have saved millions of dollars if years ago it had purchased these branch stations and owned them to-day.

Two hundred and thirteen thousand dollars a year for branch post-offices, the sum spent in 1901, means, on a 5 per cent basis, $4,268,200; and with this amount appropriated for subsidiary stations the Government would probably own every station that it needs in the city of New York, the present number, I believe, being 28. Such an expenditure would very speedily, beyond all doubt, pay for itself.

What is needed in New York? There is required there, they tell me, 85,000 square feet of space in order to do properly the work of handling the mails of the United States. Eighty-five thousand square feet of ground in New York City means money. You can not consider it as an acreage problem. You must take into consideration the fact that this ground must be in some central part of that city.

I have no special judgment and no personal interest as to the location; I have no special judgment as to the style of building. I am willing, as I have said to the gentlemen of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to yield my judgment to any adequate measure which they may bring in on this subject. But they must bring in one that will help us out. They must give us that which we need—not so much a post-office for the city of New York as additional facilities for handling the mail of the United States.

If figures tell the truth, and if a truthful man presents a truthful array of truthful figures, it ought not to be a difficult task to understand our situation there. I undertake to say to this House that no measure coming before the House at this session, of which I have knowledge, is of such imperative necessity from the standpoint of doing the Government work well and decently—from the standpoint of taking care of the Government employees efficiently and with due regard to health and life—as to enact in some form a bill allowing us a new post-office, or, better, an additional post-office in the city of New York.

I have a great desire that members of this House who come from far-away constituencies should visit New York City, and I think this feeling of mine can be easily understood. That is the city of my birth, the city of my bringing up, the city of my education, the city of my life work, and, if it so pleases a wise providence, the city where I shall die and be buried. I feel, and feel sincerely and honestly, that every year Congress ought to adjourn for a season to the city of New York, that Representatives here may have an understanding of the great current of life that ebbs and flows in that tremendous maelstrom of men. Representatives here ought to understand that the great working world has its center in the city of New York. If members here understood the conditions in our great city, if they understood its great commercial importance, if they understood its great financial importance, if they understood the need and wishes of the great body of workers there, if they could visit the districts where our poor have their being, even where the wealthy are, they would realize that every possible thing which can be done by means of our legislation to make the work carried on there effective, contribute to the welfare and well-being of New York, the Empire city of the West, and through New York to the welfare and the well-being of the United States of America, is work efficiently and wisely done. [Loud and long-continued applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I yield twenty-five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

[Mr. COCHRAN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I yield forty minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FEELY].

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think, if the gentleman will allow me, some time ought now to be used on this side.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I beg the Chair's pardon. I had understood that the gentleman from New York did not wish to yield to anyone. Of course he has the right to consume a part of his time.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY C. SMITH].

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, as a member of this Committee on Agriculture, I desire to submit some observations upon this bill, and particularly upon one proposition in the bill, the proposition with reference to good roads. At the proper time I shall submit to the House an amendment to increase the appropriation for this purpose, as reported by the committee, to a sum somewhere within reason and somewhere within the estimate of the Secretary of Agriculture.

In this connection I wish to say that I believe from my experience with that officer, from the hearings before our committee, and from an observation of the results, that never, since I have had acquaintance with public affairs, have we had a Secretary of Agriculture who has administered that Department of our Government with more ability, more economy, and more justice than Secretary Wilson. [Applause.] And, Mr. Chairman, I believe that no Department in this Government has wasted so little money as the Department of Agriculture since it has been administered by the present Secretary, and I believe that he has kept closer track and observation of the details of the affairs of that Department than any other official, and I believe that his recommendations have been carefully studied, carefully pruned down, and that he has made recommendations which were honest and which should be carried out.

It seems unnecessary to discuss with gentlemen of intelligence the importance of having good roads throughout our country. Somehow or other I am a good deal in sympathy with the young man from New York [Mr. LESSLER], who made such an excellent speech this afternoon on the question of the New York post-office. He very justly urged that we are giving our time to the consideration of subjects that are far away and affect only a few of the great interests of our country, while we leave out of sight the things that touch everyone every day of all the year. We are perfectly willing to discuss propositions concerning the Philippines and the conduct of officers there. My friend from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] can not get on his feet here without opening up the question of the trusts. Gentlemen on that side can not discuss any topic without a consideration of our policy in the distant islands of the Philippines, overlooking at all times the things that are immediately before our eyes.

Now, on this question of good roads, our Secretary of Agriculture made, I think, a meager estimate. At a meeting of the Society of Good Roads held in Chicago last year resolutions were passed, which were at the time printed in all the papers of the country, calling upon the Congress of the United States to make an appropriation of $150,520 for good roads. A detailed statement was made of the several items. That is nearly a year ago. That proposition was made by a lot of men, of intelligent men, who had given the subject consideration, and was published throughout the country. It has been discussed in all the farmers' clubs, in all the organizations of this country. It has been a live subject before the people; and yet I have seen no word of criticism anywhere against the proposition and the resolutions of that body to appropriate that sum. The Director of this Bureau recommended about $54,000, and in the estimate he asked for an appropriation of $45,000, $1,000 to be used in each State of the Union to build an experimental road, so that people could see, could know how it was done, could be educated to the best manner of building roads.

Mr. VANDIVER. How much, may I ask, does the Secretary ask for?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I will get to that in a moment.

Mr. VANDIVER. I thought you just stated it.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. No; I said the Director of Good Roads asked for about $54,000, $45,000 of that to be used in the construction of examples or experimental roads, one in each State of the Union.

Mr. VANDIVER. All right; I agree with you; I wanted to understand it. I am for it.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. You agreed with it before you understood it and afterwards also. [Laughter.]

Mr. VANDIVER. The gentleman will permit me to say that I agree with it, but I did not know how much had been asked for. I agree with the plan, and I think more ought to be asked for.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. You saw it when afar off. Well, I am very glad to have the gentleman with me. Now, I will proceed to say that the Secretary of Agriculture, after studying the estimate made by this convention of those interested in good roads and after studying the estimates submitted by the Director of this Bureau, pruned down every item in that estimate, shaved it right down to the very bone, and in the submission to our committee he asked that this Congress appropriate $40,000, and that is all—a mere nothing in comparison with what we do for other things, as I shall show before I get through, in which the whole people have little if any direct interest; and let me say, while it is in my mind, that J. J. Hill—I do not know but I ought to apologize for referring to him, because my friend from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] will say he may be interested in a great railroad combine, but whatever else may be said of J. J. Hill, he certainly is a student of public affairs; he knows whereof he speaks—J. J. Hill said in a recent interview that the farmers of this country were in possession of more than one-half of the best business in this country, the best business in this world.

Now, I want to say that the farmer is left to the very last man to be considered. The railroads can come here with their lobbyists, and those interested in the river and harbor bill can get what they want. The farmer does not succeed in getting what he wants because he does not ask for it. How many people are interested in the $70,000,000 appropriated by this Congress to improve the rivers and harbors of this nation? A few large cities, a few large shipping interests; and yet the facts show that it costs the farmer more money to get his crop from the farm or the thrashing machine to the railroad station than it does to get it from the railroad station to the point of destination. It costs the farmer more in the Western States to draw his grain from the stack where it is thrashed to the railroad station than it does to ship the grain from Minneapolis to the city of New York; from Duluth to the city of New York.

Now, should we spend $70,000,000—a sum almost beyond the power of man to calculate—to build up these great waterways to benefit a few shipping interests, a few large cities, and absolutely neglect the highway upon which the farmer draws the crop to the place where it is loaded on the cars or on the boats, before the use of this vast sum appropriated in the river and harbor bill is available? I believe that it is our duty to fix up that highway, the highway that the farmer uses every day of his life. All the roads led to Rome. A country is prosperous in proportion to its means of transportation, its means of travel. The facility with which we get to a place, in brief, marks its distance away. A place is distant or near as it takes a long or a short time to go there. The Philippines may be a long distance away; they were a long distance away at one time; but with the means of communication and the means of travel, the Philippines to-day are right under our eyes, right within sight. Why, that good book to which I appeal at all times tells us—and it is an illustration of the rapidity with which communications pass—that the rich man down below asked of the poor man on the bosom of Abraham a drink of water and got an immediate reply. Now, that was not far off. [Laughter.]

They were within speaking distance, and so a place is near or far in proportion as it takes a long or a short time to communicate with it. There is another advantage and a great advantage in the repair of our public highways. How many millions and millions again have been wasted on the public highways of this country? It is not necessary to discuss the proposition. Every man who was brought up in the country, brought up on the farm—and I do not know a man on earth who is hardly worthy of consideration who did not start there——

Mr. MOODY of North Carolina. That is pretty hard on Mr. LESSLER.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Oh, Mr. LESSLER is a farm hand.

Mr. LESSLER. From the Bowery.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Well, he will get there, if he has not been there; there is no question about it; he is going to get there whether he goes on the farm or not; he is one of the exceptions. [Laughter.] We all know how roads are worked in the country—how they come on in the spring in the country and plow them up and make them a little worse—work them where they do not need working and neglect them where they should be worked. Indeed, in every part of the country with which I am acquainted the man is elected past master who has the best shade trees and the hardest cider. [Laughter.] To hold that position is to have a holiday; it is a mere rest. It is a farce the way the roads in this country are worked. Now, we ought to have a systematic method of working the highways, with an idea of permanence; and the Secretary of Agriculture recommended here—extolling this bureau, extolling the work that has already been done—that $40,000 be appropriated.

I should like gentlemen interested in this subject to go down to the Bureau of Good Roads, in the Department of Agriculture, and see how the subject is treated, how the Bureau is starved. Away up in an attic, climbing a winding stairway to get there, at the top of the building is a little bit of an office hole with one man and a girl in possession of it. If anything is asked of that Good Roads department, or an inquiry is made, the reply that you get back is, "We are out of funds." They have not even enough to pay the postage and for stationery to send out their pamphlets. Why, here is a statement of the pamphlets they issue, Bulletin No. 15, for instance, the Proceedings of a Convention of the National League of Good Roads, price 10 cents.

Bulletin No. 1, The State Laws Relating to the Management of Roads; price, 5 cents.

Bulletin No. 2, The Proceedings of the Good Roads Convention at St. Paul; price, 5 cents.

Bulletin No. 6, Information Regarding Good Roads, Road Material, and Freight Rates in Certain States North of the Ohio River; price, 5 cents.

Bulletin No. 7, Information Regarding Roads and Road-Making Material in Certain Eastern and Southern States; price, 5 cents.

Bulletin No. 8, Hints on Construction and Repair of Earth Roads; price, 5 cents.

Bulletin No. 10, Proceedings of National Road Conference Held at Asbury Park, N. J.; price, 5 cents.

Mr. WADSWORTH. What time of the year was that convention held at Asbury Park?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I do not know what time they went there. I suppose, being farmers, that perhaps they had to go there at such time as the rich men of this country did not want to occupy the sumptuous palaces there and they could get their accommodations cheap.

Then there is Bulletin No. 12, Laws of Certain States Relating to the Use of Wide-Tired Wagons, and Other Pertinent Information; price, 5 cents.

Bulletin No. 13, Kentucky Highways. History of the Old and New Systems; price, 5 cents.

Bulletin No. 14, Extracts from the Messages of Many Governors on Good Roads; price, 5 cents.

Bulletin No. 16, Employment of Convicts in Connection with Road Building; free.

Bulletin No. 17, Historical and Technical Papers on Road Building in the United States; price, 5 cents.

Bulletin No. 19, Progress of Road Construction in the United States; price, 5 cents.

Bulletin No. 21, Road Improvements, Recent Legislation and Some of the Results Accomplished Thereunder; also gives how much it would cost a ton to build 5 miles of highway, how much aid it would receive, and how much it would cost other towns in the country to give the aid; price, 5 cents.

Now, just think of that for a minute. Any railroad company in this country or any man who wants to know the freight rates from one place to another on railroad or ocean can apply to the Department of State or he can get the Interstate Commerce Reports—he can get the report from the Secretary of the Interior—absolutely free; but when a farmer wants to inquire as to the best method of building a road, describing his soil, or as to the progress that is being made, as to the use that the Department of Agriculture has made of the $20,000 appropriated by the last Congress, he is informed that he must pay for the information. They say, "We will forward you a pamphlet if you will send us 5 or 10 cents, the price of it."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does not the gentleman know that these bulletins are sent out free by all the members of this House; that they are a part of each member's quota, and that all the bulletins reserved for distribution by the Agricultural Department are charged for, and that no exception is made in regard to the road bulletins?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I want to say to the gentleman, if that is a fact, that I have been buncoed. [Laughter.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. Well, you have been buncoed, I think.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Why, I have asked and my constituents have asked me to send these bulletins to them—several of them.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The gentleman gets a certain proportion of them in his bulletin quota. He gets 15,000 bulletins under the present law, and a portion of them are road bulletins.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I should like to interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. One moment. I have asked for these bulletins myself, and I have been informed by the Department that I must pay this money, or my constituents have, and rather than submit them to the humiliation of paying 5 or 10 cents for a bulletin published at the public expense, I have gone down in my jeans and paid the money myself.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is simply because you have used up your quota.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. It is because, as somebody suggested to me, I have not been here long enough. [Laughter.] If the supply is exhausted, that is proof of a public demand.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; it is because you have got your quota, and the extras you want you have got to pay for.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I should like to ask if that applies to all bulletins—for instance, the bulletins of the Department of the Bureau of Animal Industry?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. You are mistaken about that.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I also think the gentleman is mistaken about this.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Some of these bulletins are free, and there are some we can not get at all.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I ask for order, Mr. Chairman. I have only thirty minutes. If I am wrong about this proposition somebody has got to make it up to me, but I do not think I am wrong. Well, now, in the same connection, I want the chairman of our committee, for whose opinion I have great respect in everything in this world except as to oleomargarine and good roads, to listen to it. It has been suggested and was suggested to our committee that it was not necessary for us to make a larger appropriation for good roads than $20,000, because it was argued that the men who have road machines to sell were glad to go with the representatives of this Government to show their machines, standing around like prize oxen on election day or town meeting, and showing them, and he says they will show this machinery and not charge the Government for the use of it.

I would like to know if this great nation, this history maker, this onward-marching nation of ours, is going to be so niggardly and penurious, is going to take the machinery of those who have it to sell to make roads with. The director of this Bureau asks for an appropriation to buy some road-making machinery that the Government might have its own and not depend upon those who have machinery for sale to exhibit it such a length of time as they see fit. That is one of the items this committee struck out of the estimates of the Secretary of Agriculture. Why, up at Port Huron, in my State—and it is a shame and a humiliation to make the statement, and the great State of Michigan would never have submitted to it had it been known—the thrashing-machine company up at Port Huron came out with a thrashing-machine engine and steamed around there four or five days and ran a road-building machine, with the idea of selling and making some money out of the thrasher engine that would run it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I do not know that I caught fully your intent. Is the gentleman in favor of the United States Government building roads?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. No, sir. In that connection I want to say this. I do not remember whether the gentleman was present when I submitted to the committee a bill which I have introduced, and I might not make these remarks here to-day if I was absolutely certain of getting it out of the committee, but sometimes we do not succeed. I am submitting here a proposition——

Mr. WADSWORTH. You are a member of the committee, and ought to get it out.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I still have an eye on it, and I am very glad the gentleman is with me and approves the measure. I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi my bill provides that there shall be established in the Department of Agriculture a permanent bureau of good roads. That is all. The bureau is there now. The same men are there. But it is to be of a permanent character, and the work it does is to be of a permanent nature. It should be determined that it has come to stay. Well, now, that is the proposition, and I can state it by reading it from this quicker than in any other way. The said bureau shall instruct in the building of public roads and highways in the United States in such States, counties, townships, and municipalities as shall determine to follow the plans and methods directed and determined upon by said director. The general policy of said bureau shall be to bring about, so far as may be, a uniform method of taxation for road and highway purposes, for road work and construction of highways throughout the United States.

Now, that is the general policy to-day, and that is the general policy of this Bureau now. The trouble with the Bureau is that it is starved to death; it is crippled; and the director says that he is unable to meet the demands of the public; he is unable with the $20,000 that this committee has recommended to carry on the correspondence with the people and the instruction which the people demand and desire.

Now, I believe that this proposition is worth consideration. If we put any appropriation at all in the bill, we should put in sufficient to enable the Bureau to maintain itself.

Now, let me call attention to this matter. As I was saying, we are very apt to talk about things away off in the Philippines and other large questions, and overlook the things that are right before us. In the crossroads school the teacher said that the average boy preferred to write an essay about the camel that he knew nothing about, that he had never seen, and only hoped to see, rather than to write an essay about the horse, that he had seen all his life and knew all about.

Now, this great road proposition is for the direct benefit especially of the smaller cities and villages. The great cities are fed by the great waterways; they are fed by the great railroads. In this connection I might say that the railroad companies of this country—and that was another argument used in the committee to cut down the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture—that the railroad companies carried this machinery, owned by men who wanted to sell it, from one State to another and from one place to another free of charge. That the great railroad companies, realizing the fact that their railroads would be fed in proportion to the facilities with which the farmers could reach the place of shipment, realizing that, proposed to carry the directors and carry the officers and road builders of this department all around the country—carry the machinery and the material free of charge.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask if the people of this country, if this Congress wants to put one of the departments of this Government looking toward the building of good roads in the position of kneeling down to the management of the railroads and asking them to carry the material and machinery and to carry the men free from one place to another? It is a humiliation in a sense, and there is a motive in it that ought not to be encouraged. I submit that this department either ought to be taken out entirely or supplied with sufficient funds to conduct its affairs in a reasonably respectable manner. Now, I was saying that this was a direct benefit to the smaller places, and in the development of the small city, in the development of the village, is the safety, I believe, of this great Republic. It goes hand in hand with rural free delivery, which it took some sixteen years of struggle before it became popular, and the future of that popular service of our Government depends largely on the construction of good roads.

Mr. BURK of Pennsylvania. Do I understand that the recommendation as it is now by the committee will weaken the service?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. There is no question about it. I want to read what the Secretary of Agriculture says in submitting it to us.

He asks for an increase from $20,000 to $40,000. It was $20,000 last year, and now he asks for $40,000. He says:

> This increase recommended is considered necessary because of the great increase in demands upon the Department from all sections of the country in construction and assistance. Even with the gratuitous assistance of the railroads and the road-machine companies, which necessity has required us to solicit during the present year, it has been impossible for the Department to adequately supply the assistance sought for. The Department has now succeeded in arousing the entire country to the necessity of better roads and does its best with its limited resources to give instructions in proper methods of road building. Of this increased amount asked for it is intended that $15,000 should be used in experimental roads.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I understood the gentleman to read that portion where the Secretary says it has aroused the whole country.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I read the language of the Secretary. The gentleman from New York is intelligent on all subjects except oleomargarine [laughter], and I am willing to take his construction of it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think in about two years the gentleman from Michigan will find his intelligence on that subject at fault. [Laughter.] Now, will the gentleman from Michigan kindly read that language again?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I have not my glasses here; I am older than I look. [Laughter.] Let the gentleman from New York read it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will read it:

> The Department has now succeeded in arousing the entire country to the necessity of better roads and has done its best with its limited resources.

Now, if the whole country is aroused as to the necessity of good roads, what further is there for the Department to do?

Mr. LESSLER. Get the money. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Yes; I am obliged to the gentleman from New York. These New Yorkers always think of the money. [Laughter.] Some one said to me at one time that in Boston they asked where you were educated; in Philadelphia, where you were born; in New York, what can I do for you; in Chicago, what can you do for me? [Laughter.]

Mr. LESSLER. And in Michigan, what can you do for the beet? [Laughter.]

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Now, Mr. Chairman, seriously, returning to the language used by the Secretary of Agriculture. Think for a moment, when you are voting for an appropriation of $20,000, that he says that with $20,000 last year they were humiliated by the necessity of getting the railroad companies and begging of those companies to carry our material, to carry our road machinery, and to carry our men, because this Government with an overflowing treasury was too penurious to appropriate sufficient to maintain the Bureau. That is the situation.

Now, if the gentleman has any doubt about the interest of the people being aroused on this subject I would be glad to have him read to the House a few extracts which have been sent to me on this proposition.

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is no question about that. The Secretary of Agriculture says that the interest of the people is aroused.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. And every influential newspaper in this country, from one end to the other, has approved of this proposition of conducting experiments at least, and building example roads throughout the country.

Mr. WADSWORTH. How many of those influential papers throughout the country have approved the gentleman's position on the beet-sugar question? [Laughter.]

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I will come to that in a minute.

Mr. BURK of Pennsylvania. Would not it follow that the Department really would require a great deal more money since the interest of the whole people has been aroused?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Certainly; I am obliged for the suggestion. There is no question about it. For years this Department has been worked up. They have had their experience, they have learned how to build roads, and now they ought to be permitted to conduct experiments and give the people the benefit of them or else the Department ought to be discontinued. The Secretary says that he is crippled in carrying on the affairs of the Department unless $40,000 is appropriated, and I am going to move that the bill be amended so as to cover that. [Applause.]

I believe that 90 per cent of the things provided for in this appropriation bill are for some experiments, and I will read a few of them. Just take them—Plant Industry, for instance, on page 15 of the bill: "Investigating the nature of the diseases injurious to fruit trees, cotton, grain, and vegetables and other useful plants. Experiments in the treatment of the same."

I am finding no fault about that, and since the gentleman has spoken about it, I will call his attention to what is said about beets:

> Study of the relation of the soil to climatic conditions and diseases of plants, particularly with reference to the California vine disease and the disease of the sugar beet.

[Laughter.]

I find in the bill an appropriation of $30,000 for—

> Pomological investigations: Investigating, collecting, and disseminating information relating to the fruit industry; the collection and distribution of seeds, shrubs, trees, and specimens; and for collecting and modeling fruits, vegetables, and other plants, and furnishing duplicate models to the experiment stations of the several States, as far as found practicable; the employment of investigators, local and special agents, clerks, assistants, student scientific aids at an annual salary of $480 each, and other labor required in conducting experiments in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and in collating, digesting, reporting, and illustrating the results of such experiments; for all necessary office fixtures and supplies and for traveling and other necessary expenses, to continue the investigations and experiments in the introduction of the culture of European table grapes and the study of the diseases that affect them, for the purpose of discovering remedies therefor, this work to be done in cooperation with the section of seed and plant introduction; to investigate in cooperation with the other divisions of the Department and experiment stations of the several States the market conditions affecting the fruit and vegetable trade in the United States and foreign countries, and the methods of harvesting, packing, storing, and shipping fruit and vegetables, and for experimental shipments of fruits and vegetables to foreign countries, for the purpose of increasing the exportation of American fruits and vegetables, and for all necessary expenses connected with the practical work of the same, and such fruits and vegetables as are needed for these experimental shipments may be bought in open market and disposed of at the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, and he is authorized to apply the moneys received from the sales of such fruits and vegetables toward the continuation and repetition of these experimental shipments; to investigate, map, and report upon the commercial fruit districts of the United States, for the purpose of determining the relative adaptability of the several important fruits thereto, by a study of the conditions of soil and climate, and of the prevalence of plant diseases existing therein as related to commercial fruit production, $30,000.

All this is not a bit more practical than the question of building good roads. Then we have this provision:

> Botanical investigations and experiments: Investigations relating to medicinal, poisonous, fiber, and other economic plants, seeds, and weeds, etc.

And how much is the appropriation for this purpose? Fifty-five thousand dollars—for maintaining a professorship of weeds! And yet when it comes to a question of good roads, which interests every individual in the country, you are willing to cut down the appropriation to a measly $20,000.

Next we have an appropriation for "grass and forage plant investigation." Let me read this appropriation, that gentlemen may compare it with the provision in this bill for good roads:

> To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct investigations of grasses, forage plants, and animal foods in cooperation with other divisions of the Department; to collect and purchase seeds, roots, and specimens of valuable economic grasses and forage plants for investigation; experimental cultivation and distribution, and for experiments and reports upon the best methods of extirpating Johnson and other noxious and destructive grasses, etc.

Now, let us see how much is to be appropriated for this purpose. Thirty thousand dollars.

Now I turn to another item in this bill—for "purchase and distribution of valuable seeds;" and for this purpose the appropriation is $270,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Would the gentleman vote to have that item stricken out?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I will vote to strike it from the bill if you will vote to appropriate the money for the investigation of the subject of good roads; and I think I can get a number of other gentlemen to vote with me on that. [Applause.] I do not mean that I shall persuade them to do so, otherwise than by showing them it is reasonable.

What else? I find on page 14 an appropriation of $61,780 for the Bureau of Plant Industry.

Mr. WADSWORTH. How about the Bureau of Animal Industry?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I am coming to that. I want to turn now to the Bureau of Forestry. Let us see now what this Bureau does and whom it benefits. The gentleman at the head of this Bureau is said to be a very fine man. I understand that he is so rich that he does not even draw his salary. I have nothing against him. He is a fine man, and one of long experience. He carries on this department, as I understand, because he is in love with the work. I do not say a single thing against him, because I think he is one of the most honorable men who appeared before the committee. But let us see what is the work of this Bureau. Possibly it may have been gotten up for this gentleman. Let me read a description of what it does:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to experiment and to make and continue investigations and report on forestry, forest reserves, forest fires, and lumbering; to advise the owners of woodlands as to the proper care of the same.

Is not that a large public affair? I suppose it is the business of this department to look after the forest reserves up in the Adirondacks, where the millionaires keep their deer, so that they may be able to fence them in and shoot them. I suppose this department will instruct those gentlemen how to preserve their forests. That is what this Bureau is to do among other things. We read further that this Bureau is—to seek, through investigations and the planting of native and foreign species, suitable trees for the treeless regions; to collect and distribute valuable economic forest tree seeds and plants.

And for this Bureau of Forestry we have an appropriation of $282,860. Yet there are gentlemen who find fault because the Secretary of Agriculture asks $40,000 to improve the highways of this country. I wish there might be spent for the improvement of the roads of this country some of this money that is spent for seed that are a nuisance to every statesman of this House and a nuisance to pretty nearly every man who receives them. [Laughter.] I have been criticised somewhat for my position on Porto Rico; I may be criticised somewhat for my position in reference to Cuba; but these criticisms sink into insignificance in comparison with those that I have brought upon myself by sending seeds to the wrong men. [Laughter.]

I have not studied this question sufficiently to know just what sort of seeds to send to the different men in my district. For instance, I have a lot of Frenchmen down there; and think of the position in which I put myself by sending to those Frenchmen cabbage seeds! [Laughter.] What else? "Bureau of Soils." Now, here is a fertile subject, here is a practical subject, right along next to the highway proposition. Now, the Director of this Bureau of Good Roads says they want a chemist to tell the man that builds a road what kind of material to use—if it is a sand road, how much clay to put with it; if it is a clay road, how much burnt clay to put with it. That is all they want, and the right kind of machinery to bake it and to build it, so that it will be permanent. Why, we build our public buildings here upon foundations that will last forever. We spend $25,000 for a building in a city of 10,000 inhabitants, and yet think of the untold millions spent in the United States for highways laid upon no foundation, built according to no plan whatever, built with no idea of permanency!

Now, what does this Bureau of Soils require? Thirty-eight thousand nine hundred dollars for the professors of soils—for the doctors of soils. [Laughter.] Next we find, "General expenses, Bureau of Soils." Now, what do they do? "Investigation of the relation of soils to climate and organic life." That is where the beet comes in again. [Laughter.] But I do not intend to make any post-mortem argument on the beet, however, unless the coroner's jury is present. "For the investigation of the texture and composition of soils in the field and laboratory; for the investigation of the cause and prevention of the rise of alkali"——

Mr. LESSLER. Alcohol?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Oh, is that you? I thought that remark came from the other side of the Chamber. [Laughter.]

For the investigation of the texture and composition of soils in the field and laboratory; for the investigation of the cause and prevention of the rise of alkali in the soils of the irrigated districts; the investigation of the relation of soils to drainage and seepage waters, and of methods for the prevention of the accumulation of and injury from seepage waters in irrigated districts; for investigations of soils in continental United States and for indicating upon maps or plats, by coloring or otherwise, the results of such investigations; to map the tobacco soils of the United States; to investigate the soils and conditions of tobacco growth, etc., $130,000.

Total for Bureau of Soils, $168,960. Now, let us strike another subject.

Biological investigations: For biological investigations, including the geographic distribution and migrations of animals, birds, and plants and for the promotion of economic ornithology and mammalogy, for an investigation of the food habits of North American birds and mammals in relation to agriculture, horticulture, and forestry—

And what do they ask for all that? Forty-five thousand six hundred dollars!

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman kindly tell us what is biology?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Oh, they all know but you. [Prolonged laughter.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will not the gentleman kindly tell me, then?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I will see you later on that proposition. Here is another proposition: "Division of Foreign Markets, $8,500." Now, what is the purpose of that?

General expenses, Division of Foreign Markets: Investigations concerning the feasibility of extending the demands of foreign markets for the agricultural products of the United States, and to secure, as far as may be, a change in the methods of supplying farm products to foreign countries; employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in making investigations in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and in collecting, digesting, reporting, and illustrating the results of such investigations; traveling expenses and freight and express charges; telephone and telegraph service; and all necessary supplies and apparatus; $6,500; in all, for the Division of Foreign Markets, $15,000.

That is within $5,000 as much as is expended in the bureau to take care of highways of this country.

Next, we have for agricultural experimentations, $15,000, to be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture, to investigate and report to Congress upon the agricultural resources and capabilities of Alaska. Think of it! Fifteen thousand dollars to investigate the agricultural situation in the ice fields of Alaska. [Laughter.]

Why, the chairman of the committee is as farsighted as our friends on the other side of the Chamber, looking away over the highways, right under our nose to the ice fields of Alaska—$15,000 absolutely wasted up there in that country. Then there are $12,000 appropriated to establish and maintain an agricultural station in the Hawaiian Islands, and the only thing I can remember as being shown before our committee in reference to the necessity for anything there was about a disease among the chickens, which the gentleman who appeared before us said was a disease that sometimes attacks politicians, known as the "sorehead." [Laughter.] Think of it—$12,000 for curing soreheads in the Hawaiian Islands. [Prolonged laughter and applause.]

I want to make further comparison with other departments, not for the purpose of criticising other services, for I appreciate the wonderful work and the splendid results accomplished by the Department of Agriculture under the able management of our efficient Secretary. And I want also to say that no department in the Government service is more entitled to encouragement than the Department of Agriculture. Something can be gathered from the report of our foreign trade in agricultural products. And I want to show this trade, from Bulletin No. 27, just issued. It is one of the marvels of our wonderful and prosperous times. During the year 1901 foreign countries purchased American farm produce to the value of $952,000,000, decidedly the largest agricultural export in our history, an increase of over $100,000,000 over the record of 1900.

On the other hand, our agricultural imports disclose a falling off. The various products of agriculture received from foreign sources during the year 1901 have an aggregate value of $392,000,000, $28,000,000 less than in 1900. This shows an excess of $560,000,000. This is the way to be successful, to sell more than we buy. The entire business output of this nation during the last year was $21,500,000,000, and of this wonderful business only $1,500,000,000 thereof was done with foreign countries. In other words, we did $20,000,000,000 worth of business with ourselves. And so it is the home market, the home trade, and the home business which should be protected and looked after.

And in this connection I want to urge that the mind of man can hardly calculate what has been saved by information furnished by the Weather Bureau—the storm signals warning boats upon the oceans, the lakes, the gulfs, the seas, and the rivers, laden with freight, carrying passengers, giving warning of approaching storms, the warnings to the people of cyclones and severe storms, the warnings to fruit growers, gardeners, and farmers of approaching storms and floods and frosts. This is also true of the wonderful work and progress made by the Bureau of Animal Industry, the Bureau of Chemistry, of Plant Industry, and the various other bureaus and divisions of this Department of Government.

But what I have in mind is this: That by making comparisons I may be able to persuade the House and the committee that this department of good roads has been overlooked or unfairly treated.

And I want to call attention, for instance, to the item of "cultivation and care of experimental gardens and grounds, including the keep of lawns, trees, roadways, and walks, etc., $25,000."

Also, Arlington experimental farm, to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to continue the necessary improvements, to establish and maintain a general experimental farm and agricultural station on the Arlington estate, etc., $15,000.

I also call attention to the appropriation for tea-culture investigation, for which the committee allowed $10,000. And yet about all that was suggested in this direction and to sustain the allowance of this item was the suggestion that experiments were being made to analyze the juices and the chemical elements thereof in the tea plant with a view of determining whether or not someway could not be found that the tea should preserve its natural color after it is cut without turning black. Not that I am finding fault with this, but if this one weak industry should be allowed $10,000, concerning which only a few tea raisers are affected, certainly fair play would require that more than $20,000 should be appropriated for good roads investigation throughout the States of the Union.

Then, again, work is being duplicated in some of the departments, and I especially call attention to the department of chemistry, concerning which I shall offer an amendment. I presented an amendment before the committee at the close of the appropriation for the department of chemistry in substance that all chemical work in the Department of Agriculture of every description should be done under the direction of the Bureau of Chemistry and in collaboration with the various bureaus, divisions, and officers requiring such investigation. The suggestion, however, was made at that time that it should not be pressed, because there were already chemical laboratories in other departments in operation, and that for that reason a general bill should be reported by the committee; but since that discussion I have reflected upon the proposition, and it seems to me that those things would not in any manner interfere with the enactment of this provision.

Now, what is the situation? A Bureau of Chemistry is established in the Department of Agriculture, and the inference is that that Bureau should have charge of everything of a chemical character in the way of chemical investigation that belonged to the Department of Agriculture, and the fact is that that Bureau today makes chemical analyses and does whatever is necessary in that direction for the Treasury Department, the War Department, the Department of Justice, and the Post-Office Department, and yet for the sole purpose of giving people jobs, for the sole purpose of having new bureaus and chiefs of new bureaus the chemical department in the Department of Agriculture has been duplicated five times, and three out of five of those chemical bureaus are as absolutely unnecessary and useless as it is possible for them to be.

Take, for instance, in the Bureau of Animal Industry. There has been established a bureau for the consideration of dairy products, and new apparatus, and new chemicals, and new appliances, absolute duplicates of the same department in the Bureau of Chemistry for the investigation of dairy products were installed. There are two, involving expenditure of large sums of money, and the Secretary of Agriculture admitted himself that he had no knowledge of the existence of at least one of them; it had got in there in the night—got in there without his knowledge—and that is the way these bureaus grow, and here they are. In the Department of Animal Industry there are the biochemical laboratory and the dairy products laboratory, both of them now existing in the Bureau of Chemistry proper, both of them in charge of competent men.

There is no reason in the world, the Secretary himself says, why the whole thing should not be done under the general bureau. And what next have we? Here is the Bureau of Soils, and in the general chemical bureau there is a man in charge of soil investigation, with assistants and with clerks. He does everything in the nature of soil investigation that the Department of Agriculture would like to have done or desires to have done; and yet this man at the head of the chemical department in the Bureau of Soils is not a chemist even. The chief of that bureau is not even a chemist, and yet he has a bureau there with some assistants.

Mr. CANNON. Does not my friend think it is desirable to carry on this bureau for the purpose of educating this man?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I will say, in answer to the gentleman from Illinois, that it is my opinion that that man can not be educated either at public or private expense. [Laughter.] He was before our committee, and the conduct of the man after he went back to the Department and reported who voted in favor of the bill and who voted against the Department of Agriculture, and the discussion that he wrought up there, is an indication that he is far from being in a position to be educated. In that connection I want to call the attention of the members of the House to another thing, and I am not saying anything against him. You have been furnished with a little card from the Chief of the Bureau of Soils, advising you where he is going this summer, where he is going to survey—a card published at Government expense.

Now, those cards are sent out for a lobby, to indicate to you and to me that he is going into our territory, and he wants our support for his entire department. What other bureau is there? In the Bureau of Soils there is a chemical laboratory. What else? In the Office of Experiment Stations they do chemical work. Then, there is another at Middletown, Conn., and another in Maine, and another at the State College in Pennsylvania. The Secretary of Agriculture said before our committee that every bit of this work ought to be done here in the city of Washington, and that it ought to be done by the Chemical Bureau at the Department of Agriculture; that the tendency of it would be to make the men in charge of the Bureau more proficient and would enable the Department of Agriculture to get better men.

And what else? In there is another chemical laboratory with appliances and material, and chiefs and assistant chiefs, and clerks and assistants and stenographers; and upon the proposition of consolidating these chemical bureaus the only answer that the chief of this Bureau could make, reduced to writing, and the only argument that he could make to sustain it, was that it would be just as reasonable to have all the stenographers and all the typewriters under one head, and if you wanted any typewriting done or any stenographic work done that you should go to that one department of stenography.

Now, I submit, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that it is absolutely useless to have these chemical bureaus in these various departments, and that the chemistry of this Government ought to be under one controlling and proficient head, and that we ought to put a stop to this increase of bureaus and this duplication of work.

That is all I care to say.

And there is a chemical laboratory, apparatus, chief, and work done in the Bureau of Plant Industry.

Now, take, for instance; the Bureau of Soils. The committee fully considered the work of that Bureau, together with all the evidence and statements brought before it. A few moments ago I desired to interrupt the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] for the purpose of referring to another item that was added to the appropriation of last year for that Bureau.

I desire to call the attention of the committee to the manner in which this Bureau has grown up, and how the appropriations have grown, and how, if that Bureau is permitted to continue in the way Dr. Whitney has mapped out it should be, it would absolutely swamp this Government. In his own statement that he filed with the committee he says that the "Division of Soils was organized in the Weather Bureau in 1894 by an Executive order; in 1895 it became an independent division in the Department, with an appropriation of $15,000; in 1899 the functions were enlarged to include the mapping of tobacco soil and other necessary tobacco investigation"—and if gentlemen will investigate they will find out that is about all of a practical nature that one can see that this Bureau has ever done—"with a total appropriation of $26,300."

See how it grows from year to year. "In 1900 the appropriation was increased to $31,300. In the act approved March 2, 1901, the division was reorganized into a bureau, with an appropriation of $109,140." What else? That was not sufficient to meet the average of this Department, and I wonder every day that any of these departments have ever survived, if the statements made on this floor since I have kept any track of public affairs are to be accepted as true, that if you shut off the appropriation a little they will be so crippled that they can not survive. After the appropriation bill passed the Fifty-sixth Congress they got a joint resolution for $20,000 more, and he says in his statement here:

> And in joint resolution No. 8, of the same Congress, provision was made for the printing annually of 17,000 copies of the field operations of the then division, at an estimated cost of $20,000.

Now, that is what that Bureau got. It used $129,000 in doing what? In mapping about 6,000,000 acres of land, just about what there is in my Congressional district, and that is what has been done, and now my friend here says they just want a little picayune appropriation. This committee has made an appropriation of $168,960, within $40 of $169,000, and that is the way it is picking up, and now my brother here, a member of the committee, proposes to double it and to increase it still further, and for what purpose? I would like gentlemen to read through the report found in the hearings here and see what this Bureau has ever done, if anything, of a practical nature. He says that in Connecticut they have succeeded in raising a few acres—that is the way he puts it, and he puts it just as strong as he could—a few acres of Sumatra wrapper tobacco.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. One thousand acres this year.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Forty-two acres, he says, they have a hope of raising this year.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Nearly a thousand this year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Michigan may be extended five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I want to correct the gentleman from Michigan. Just one moment——

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Does what you are about to say appear in your speech?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Not at all; I just want to correct the gentleman. In 1900 there was about half an acre of tent-grown tobacco, in 1901 there were 42 acres, and in 1902 there are to be nearly 1,000 acres—between 800 and 1,000 acres.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Conceding that to be true, I think that $169,000 spent by this Government to raise that amount of tobacco is quite sufficient.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. The Government does not raise it.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Well, to tell people how to raise it, and to tell people what kind of soil they must use.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. The Government has never raised any.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Why, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the farmers of this country by making a test and by actual experience know what kind of soil will raise this and what kind of soil will raise that, without a lot of professors of soils.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. That is just what they do not know.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. And doctors of chemistry and professors of weeds [laughter] to go around and instruct them as to how they shall raise their crops. The practical farmer is the farmer that ought to be encouraged and the farmer that will succeed in the end, not the farmer who spends his time attending institutes and reading these scientific discourses, but the farmer who gets out by daylight and closes at nighttime, who works no eight hours, but eight hours before dinner and eight hours after dinner; he is the man who will succeed on the farm.

Now, this man, the Chief of this Bureau, as I said last evening, at Government expense, has printed a circular, which he has sent to every member of Congress, indicating where he is going to work this summer and what he is going to do. Look it over and see what he is going to do for $169,000. Fifteen of these parties are to be sent out, and, as I figure it up, that gets into 17 different counties in the United States, and they map out a little soil here and there and tell the people how much soil in this county and that county can raise tobacco and how much can be raised in this and how much can be raised in that. It is absolutely without practicability, and I hope that the conclusion to which the committee came after hearing the evidence and all the statements and the statement of the Commissioner of Agriculture will be sustained. The appropriation is ample.

I want to especially call attention to this card which the Chief of the Bureau of Soils has had printed and distributed among Congressmen which, as I said, is for the purpose of a lobby, a suggestion to members of the House as to what he will do and where he will go.

Here is the way he puts it, here is the invitation, the suggestion as to what he will do for our districts if we will help him:

> The following assignments of field parties for the season of 1902 are made with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, with the understanding that such modifications and changes will be made as are called for by the exigencies of the public service and may be directed from time to time by Chief of the Bureau of Soils.

I would like to inquire what the Secretary of Agriculture has approved, and why this chief here claims the right to make the changes and modifications. Now, one other suggestion. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], a member of the committee, and a brighter and more able man is not on the floor of this House, candid and honest every day of his life, has heard every syllable of the testimony before this committee, every sentence of it, and he has heard every argument, and he knows all the facts, and he has put to gentlemen who are in favor of this amendment a proposition that is not answered and can not be answered, and that is, why does it require 90 per cent more of money to do 50 per cent more of work; and I want to make one other observation and then I will leave the subject.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Oh, I have only a minute, and I hope the gentleman will not insist upon it. As the chairman of this committee has shown, and shown conclusively, when you take it——

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Surely the gentleman does not want to misrepresent the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. No; the Secretary of Agriculture makes his reports in just this way——

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. He calls on the chiefs of these bureaus, and the chiefs of these bureaus make a report to him, and here it is, and the members of the House are familiar with it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What is the date of that report?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. And the Secretary of Agriculture simply transmits it just the same as any other head of a department does. Now, as I was about to say——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee rose.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. The gentleman from Tennessee has had twenty minutes, ten minutes more than I thought he had, and I decline to be interrupted any further. I want to suggest this, as the chairman of the committee has said and has shown, when you take investigations for Hawaii and investigations for Porto Rico, and this contingent fund, which is a dangerous fund, out of the estimates, they are as liberal as could be submitted, and the committee makes allowance for within $15,000 of what is asked, and I submit the conclusion of the committee should be followed.

This is not all. This card he sends out not only contains an invitation but also a threat—an intimation that he will change his course if the appropriation is not satisfactory.

Here is his statement: "The allotments for the periods previous to June 30 will be paid out of the appropriation for the current fiscal year." In other words, these 15 field parties have sufficient funds to keep them busy until June 30. And then he goes on to say that after that time the situation will be varied according to the appropriations made by this Congress.

Here again is his language: "The allotments for the periods subsequent to July 1 will be paid out of the appropriations for the Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903."

Here is the promise, so that the various Congressmen interested can see the benefit to them, and then follows the threat: "And are therefore subject to such appropriations as may be made by the Congress for that year." And now this Department asks for 90 per cent increase of appropriation to do 50 per cent increase of work, and no one is able to explain this paradox.

Now, Director Dodge is too modest and dignified to make a campaign of this character for his Bureau, and I am very glad to take up the fight for him, which is entirely without his knowledge, without a suggestion from him or anyone in his Department. No one has lobbied me by word or by letter upon the proposition. I was never at the Bureau but once, and shall hope not to be called there again until the Department shall have suitable quarters and be reasonably equipped, so that the pleasure of the visit shall not be marred by the sympathy for the shabby manner in which this important subject has been treated.

Why, for instance, the plans for the new Washington—beautiful, complete, attractive, valuable—over here in the Library, the plans alone, I venture to say, cost more than is asked for to maintain this Department of Good Roads.

Another thing: This Department has not sufficient means to make any kind of an exhibit at the St. Louis Exposition, to instruct the people in any manner whatever. The importance of the work and the interest of the people therein is also shown from the fact that nearly all the agricultural colleges, the universities, and leading places of learning give instruction along these lines. The States are becoming interested. In 1901 the legislature of New York made an appropriation of $420,000, $400,000 more than this committee is willing to appropriate, to carry on good-roads investigation and construction in that State. Another thing: Good roads will permit the weather reports and the market reports to be carried to the farmers with greater speed, and if the roads are better the rural mails may leave the office from which the service is supplied at a later hour. Indeed, good roads are the foundation of rural delivery. And 90 per cent of all the freight carried on all the railroads and carried on all the boats must first be hauled over the country roads, and so all industries are helped by the good-roads project. Nothing better marks the civilization of a neighborhood, a community, or a people than the condition in which the roads of such community are kept. Roads are a fair index to the civilization of a people.

The farmer is the last on the list to receive assistance. The city gets the improvements desired, the rivers and harbors are properly cared for, if a city is to build waterworks, it may receive plenty of information upon the subject, but the farmer is put at the foot of the list and largely, I believe, because of his modesty and failure to assert his demands which are fair and just. And yet it takes more skill, foresight, and ability to successfully carry on a farm than to conduct any other business with an equal investment. And it takes more skill to build a good road than to build a barn, or a house, or to fix a harbor, or to construct waterworks, or dig canals. This being true, those who have charge of the country highways should receive all needful instructions as to the proper and best methods of construction.

I believe that sentiment will yet compel that justice be done this Department. The American people are moved largely by sentiment, and are perfectly willing that their money shall be invested many times with but little knowledge of the real facts. With little care as to the highways the people travel every day, upon which they go to market, receive their mails, drive for pleasure, they are keen in their interest and uncontrollable in their desire for an isthmian canal connecting the great lines and waters of commerce, and yet how few, if any, have any conception as to whether or not such a project would be valuable, be worth anything like the investment likely to be made, or have any permanent duration. But it is some distance away, surrounded with some mystery, a child of sentiment in a sense, and popular. We will all vote for it, hurrah for it, and approve it because the people, our masters, want it, and we all hope that good will come from the investment, and yet the money required for the project would make every highway in the United States a delight, raise the value of farm lands, make life in the country more pleasant, would even light the highways with electric lights; and yet I would hardly expect a project of such extended character to be approved. And still in time it may come, and when it does come, it will come for the good of all. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, it is now eleven minutes of 5 o'clock, and I suggest that the committee rise and that we go on to-morrow. The next gentleman on my list has forty minutes' time, and, as the House will want to adjourn at 5 o'clock, if we go on now it would split his speech, and I prefer under the circumstances that the committee rise.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PALMER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13895) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and had come to no resolution thereon.

WAR CLAIMS IN LOYAL STATES.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I hold in my hand certain papers which I ask to have printed as a document. I will state what they are:

Decisions of the Court of Claims and of the Treasury Department in the cases of the rebellion war claims of the loyal States, arising under the act of Congress of July 27, 1861 (12 U. S. Stats., 276); resolution of Congress of March 8, 1862 (12 U. S. Stats., 615); an act of Congress of February 14, 1902, following and in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the New York case (16 U. S. Supreme Court Reports, 598).

The papers are not very lengthy, and I ask that they be printed as a document for use before the Treasury Department, and also before the committees of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. PETTUS. What are the documents which it is asked to have printed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon has just stated what they are.

Mr. PETTUS. But he stated it in such a low voice that we could not hear on this side.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator restate what the documents are? Or perhaps the Secretary will read the list.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Secretary will please read the list.

The Secretary read as follows:

Decisions of the Court of Claims and of the Treasury Department in the cases of the rebellion war claims of the loyal States, arising under the act of Congress of July 27, 1861 (12 U. S. Stats., 276). Resolution of Congress of March 8, 1862 (12 U. S. Stats., 615). An act of Congress of February 14, 1902, following and in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the New York case (16 U. S. Supreme Court Reports, 598).

Mr. PETTUS. I move that the papers be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator to let them be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will state to the Senator from Alabama that I simply ask for a reprint in the form of a Senate document of three decisions of the Court of Claims and a decision of the Treasury Department. They are papers that are needed before the committees of the Senate and also before the Treasury Department in adjudications there.

Mr. PETTUS. I did not understand that it is now a document.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, yes; it is a reprint of a document that is asked for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

CUBAN SUGAR INVESTIGATION.

Mr. JONES of Nevada. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution reported yesterday from the Committee on Relations with Cuba, to report it back favorably, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas it has been currently reported that nearly the entire crop of Cuban sugar has been purchased and is now held by what is generally known as the sugar trust, which is the principal consumer of raw sugar in the United States, and that any concessions given to the raisers of cane sugar in the island of Cuba, or any measures intended for their relief by admitting their sugar at reduced rates of duty into the United States, will only benefit the said sugar trust, and that the Cubans will receive no real benefit from such concession;

And whereas it is alleged that a large number of citizens of the United States have acquired large holdings of cane-producing lands in Cuba, and are now especially urging the reduction of duty on sugar, under the claim that such reduction will benefit the people of Cuba: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Relations with Cuba be, and is hereby, directed to make an investigation as to the truth of such charges and to report to the Senate.

That for the purpose of carrying out the above resolution the committee be, and hereby is, authorized to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, take testimony, employ a stenographer, and that the expenses of the investigation be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The committee is authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate, and also to print from time to time its hearings.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CULLOM. Is it a resolution just introduced?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was originally introduced and referred to the Committee on Relations with Cuba. It was reported from that committee and then referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and by that committee is now reported favorably.

Mr. CULLOM. It is the resolution of the Committee on Relations with Cuba?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the resolution reported yesterday from that committee by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. CULLOM. Then I have no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado rise to the resolution?

Mr. TELLER. I rose to say a word, not against its adoption, but about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the Senator.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to say that it is the resolution in part which I introduced. It is not what I wanted and what I think we are entitled to have, but it is all the committee were willing that we should have, and of course we have to accept what the majority of the committee said was proper.

I wish to refer to a matter a little personal to myself. My attention has been called this morning to a statement made by a witness before the Committee on Ways and Means in the House to the effect that I had stated that the beet-sugar producers of Colorado did not need any duty at all for their protection. I want to say most emphatically that I never have made any such statement. On the contrary, I contend that we are entitled to the present existing duty on sugar, although, speaking for myself, if those who profess to be anxious to reduce duties somewhat generally should go into a general reduction, as representing a sugar-producing country, I would not object to a proper reduction on that article when we could have a reduction on other things. What I object to is that there should be an attempt to take the duty off of one particular article unless it can be shown that that article is bearing a duty that it ought not to have. In this case no such pretense is made.

I wish to deny most emphatically that I have ever said anywhere that the Colorado beet-sugar producers do not want to have a duty on sugar.

WILLIAM P. KELLOGG.

Mr. JONES of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the following resolution, submitted by Mr. MCENERY February 3, 1902, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections; which was agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States of America, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to William P. Kellogg, formerly a Senator from the State of Louisiana, the sum of $6,543.38, due him as a Senator of the United States in the Fortieth Congress, from the 4th of March, 1867, to the 24th of June, 1868, to be paid from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

WILLIAM J. LANDRUM.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3319) for the relief of William J. Landrum, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 3319) for the relief of William J. Landrum, now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

Mr. STEWART submitted the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be, and is hereby, directed to make an inquiry into the expenditures and taxes within and for the District of Columbia since the system of taxation and expenditures went into operation prescribed by the act of June 11, 1878, which provided for a permanent form of government for the District; and to ascertain the appropriations made by Congress for the benefit of the District in accordance with said act; and said committee shall report the gross amount of said expenditures and taxes and the amounts so appropriated by Congress, and shall report whether or not Congress has appropriated as required by said act the amount of 50 per cent of the sums necessary to defray the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, and if such sum has not been fully appropriated said committee shall state the amount which ought now to be appropriated by Congress in order to make up the said 50 per cent accruing between the date of said act and December 31, 1901; and said committee is hereby further directed to report any and all legislation which may be necessary to carry out the aforesaid provision of the act of June 11, 1878, binding Congress to appropriate said amount of 50 per cent of the expenditures, leaving the remaining 50 per cent to be levied upon the property in the District other than public property.

CHINESE EXCLUSION.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13031) to prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese and persons of Chinese descent, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

O. H. PLATT,
W. P. DILLINGHAM,
A. S. CLAY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

ROBERT R. HITT,
J. B. PERKINS,
CHAMP CLARK,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think the bill has come from the House with the action of the House on the disagreement. Perhaps it ought to be read to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, announcing that the committee of conference had been unable to agree, insisting upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill, and requesting a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendment to the bill and agree to the further conference asked by the House.

Mr. LODGE. I should be very glad if the Senator from Connecticut would state to the Senate just what the point of difference between the two Houses now is, and how far the conferees have agreed.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The only point of difference between the conferees of the two Houses may be stated in general terms to be this: The House conferees ask that the Senate conferees shall agree to eliminate from the amendment passed by the Senate as a substitute for the House bill that portion of the amendment which provides that present laws shall be extended and continued while the treaty remains in force, and also the section which provides that if the treaty shall be terminated according to the provisions of the treaty such laws so extended shall be continued in force until another treaty shall have been negotiated and appropriate laws to carry it into effect shall have been passed.

The House committee ask us to eliminate that provision and to extend and continue present laws, reenacting them indefinitely without limit as to time. The Senate action eliminated the extension and continuation of present laws to the life of the treaty and provided that if the treaty should be terminated on the 7th day of October, 1904, those laws should continue in force until a new treaty was negotiated. The Senate conferees have not felt that they could do what the House conferees ask in this respect.

That is the only point of difference between us. The Senate conferees have conceded to the House conferees in their desire that there should be some specific statement so as to make sure that certain sections of what is called the "Geary Act" would be law, and some other smaller matters. There has been an agreement on a substitute for the amendment which was proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], which is, I think, satisfactory to the friends of the bill both in the House and in the Senate. So the only point of difference is the one which I have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves that the Senate further insist upon its amendment and agree to the further conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. PLATT of Connecticut, Mr. DILLINGHAM, and Mr. CLAY were appointed.

IMITATION DAIRY PRODUCTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives agreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9206) to make oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of any State, or Territory, or the District of Columbia, into which they are transported, and to change the tax on oleomargarine, and to amend an act entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exchange of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886, numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, and 11, and agreeing to amendment numbered 9 with the following amendments:

In lines 3 and 4, after "butter," strike out "shall be understood" and insert "is hereby defined;"

In line 8, after "adulterated butter," strike out "shall be understood" and insert "is hereby defined;"

In line 3, page 3, after "unmelted butter," strike out the comma and insert "or butter fat;"

In line 6, page 3, after "rancidity," strike out "and" and insert "or;"

In line 6, page 3, after "any butter," insert "or butter fat;"

In line 7, page 3, after "as herein," strike out "recognized or understood" and insert "defined;"

In line 8, page 3, strike out "in" where it occurs the second time and insert "or;"

In line 9, page 3, after "any" in line 8, strike out "way, either through cheaper or inferior ingredients, or" and insert "butter in the manufacture or manipulation of which any process or material is used;"

In line 11, page 3, after "cream," strike out ": Provided, That in case of the addition of animal fats or vegetable oils the product shall be known and treated as oleomargarine, as defined in the aforesaid act approved August 2, 1886," and insert "; that 'process butter' or 'renovated butter' is hereby defined to mean butter which has been subjected to any process by which it is melted, clarified, or refined and made to resemble genuine butter, always excepting 'adulterated butter' as defined by this act;"

In line 4, page 4, after "renovated butter," insert "shall pay $50 per year;"

In line 4, page 4, after "and," insert "manufacturers;"

In lines 5, 6, and 7, page 4, after "year," strike out "the payment of which shall cover the tax upon the manufacture of both articles;"

In line 13, page 4, after "annum," insert "Every person who sells adulterated butter in less quantities than 10 pounds at one time shall be regarded as a retail dealer in adulterated butter;"

In lines 14 and 15, page 4, strike out "Dealers in adulterated butter shall pay $48 per year;"

In line 18, page 8, insert before "All parts" a section number as follows: "Sec. 5;"

In line 18, page 8, strike out "meat" and insert "meats;"

In lines 8 and 9, page 9, after "same," strike out "for exportation or transmission from one State to another;"

In line 9, page 9, after "process," insert "or renovated;"

In line 10, page 9, after "marked with," amend the Senate amendment down to and including "manner," line 11, so as to read: "the words 'Renovated Butter' or 'Process Butter,' and by such other marks, labels, or brands, and in such manner;"

In line 2, page 10, after "States," insert " or in course of exportation or shipment;" and

Change "Sec. 5" to "Sec. 6," and "Sec. 6" to "Sec. 7."

Mr. PROCTOR. I am authorized by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to move that the Senate concur in the amendments made by the House to Senate amendment numbered 9. There were 11 amendments made in the Senate. The House agreed to 10 of them. On one amendment, numbered 9, which related entirely to process or renovated butter, they have adopted a good many minor amendments. I am also authorized by the minority members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to state that while they do not change their views in the least about the bill as a whole, they see no objection to these amendments.

Mr. COCKRELL. I see objections to them, if they are what I think they are, and I ask that they may be printed until we can see them for ourselves. If there has been any letting down on adulterated butter I want the country to know it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. What does the Senator from Missouri desire to have printed?

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to have the conference report printed, so that we can see what is the effect of the proposed amendments.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Ought not amendment 9 to be printed as the House has amended it, so that when we come to consider it we can have it before us in that shape?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be printed so as to show what has been agreed to in the House; that is, where they have agreed to our amendments and where they have not agreed to them, but propose amendments to them. Let us have it printed with the amendment as it passed the Senate and with the proposed amendments of the House to which the Senate conferees propose to agree.

Mr. PROCTOR. It has all been printed by the House.

Mr. COCKRELL. We will have it printed in the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. As one of the minority upon the committee, I desire to say to the Senator from Missouri that I made, this morning, not a very careful examination of the amendments placed on the bill by the House, but still an examination to satisfy me that so far as renovated and adulterated butter is concerned, the amendments made by the House perfect the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to see it in print, Mr. President.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is in better shape now than it was before.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that it be printed and lie on the table, and let it come up at the next session of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What does the Senator from Missouri desire to have printed?

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the report of the committee of conference be printed. That will show everything agreed to except the renovated-butter provision, as I understand it. It will show the Senate provision and the proposed provision of the conference committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There has been no conference report.

Mr. PROCTOR. There has been no conference.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to say to the Senator——

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, it is simply the bill reported back from the House?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then I ask that it be printed and laid on the table.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to say to the Senator from Missouri that the renovated-butter or adulterated-butter amendment I understand was put in as a sort of concession to the position of the minority, and the minority members would be as unwilling as he possibly can be to see those provisions impaired or weakened in any particular.

Mr. COCKRELL. I beg to say to the Senator that I think the most important amendment on adulterated butter was put in the bill on my motion in open Senate, and therefore I as well as the minority members of the committee want to see it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am sure from my examination of the bill that there is nothing there which weakens in the slightest the general supervision and control provided for in the bill for either renovated or adulterated butter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks that further action on the bill be suspended for the present and that the amendments be printed. Is there objection?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be printed as it comes from the House, showing what they have agreed to and showing what the motion of the Senator from Vermont covers that we agree to the House amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PATRICK J. MURPHY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3321) granting a pension to Patrick J. Murphy, which was, in line 7, to strike out all after the word "Navy" down to and including "month," in line 8.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment made by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 357) for the relief of Levi Maxted; and

A bill (H. R. 3691) for the relief of James McKenzie.

SOUTHERN APPALACHIAN FOREST RESERVE.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, I desire to briefly discuss the bill authorizing the purchase of certain mountain lands in the Southern Appalachian region to be used by the Government for the purpose of a national forest reserve. This bill at present appropriates $2,000,000, with a proviso that later on $8,000,000 additional are to be used for the purpose of purchasing the lands in question.

Mr. President, it is the well-settled policy of the Government to appropriate money whenever it becomes necessary to do so in order to facilitate commerce and transportation in those States along the coast, as well as those through which our large rivers flow. This policy has had the sanction of a majority of the people throughout the country, upon the ground that any expenditure which facilitates transportation and encourages the development of commerce is legitimate and proper.

The people of the section embraced within the Appalachian region have not in the past been the recipients of the benefits arising from legislation of this kind, and this is the first proposition which has been offered that has had the slightest bearing upon their welfare as a people.

The region embraced within the territory referred to in the pending measure comprises the highest mountain peaks east of the Rocky Mountains. The mountains and hillsides in this territory were originally covered with dense forests. The ruthless and indiscriminate cutting of timber by the lumberman, as well as the forest fires, have tended to denude many of these mountains of a great per cent of the original growth of timber. The cutting of timber by the lumbermen at first was confined to the more rare and valuable trees, such as walnut and cherry, but after the railroads rendered this region more accessible the cutting of birch, locust, poplar, oak, chestnut, and other valuable species began, and the operations of the lumbermen have to-day extended quite beyond the main lines of transportation by the construction of tramways, short railways, etc.

As a general rule, the lumberman who has operated in Tennessee and western Carolina has been a resident of other States. Such being the case, his interest in the region in question begins and ends with the hope of profit. The necessity for protecting these mountain forests from destruction has been recognized for a number of years, but until recently there has been no well-defined effort to secure the protection of this region against the wanton destruction of timber, which is having such a disastrous effect upon the welfare of the people of these sections, as well as those who live in the neighboring States.

In January, 1900, memorials from the Appalachian Mountain Club, of New England, and the Appalachian National Park Association, of the South Atlantic States, were presented before Congress, asking that the Government establish a national forest reserve embracing the steep mountain lands in the Southern Appalachian Mountains. During the years 1900 and 1901 resolutions favoring such action by the Government were passed by the leading scientific societies of the country, by the several forestry associations, by the National Board of Trade, and similar boards of trade and other commercial bodies in nearly all of the larger Southern and Eastern cities. The legislature in each of the several States which extend into the region of the proposed national forest reserve have, with remarkable unanimity of vote, passed resolutions favoring this measure, and they have also passed acts ceding to the United States the right to own and control the mountain lands which it is proposed to incorporate in this forest reserve.

The press of the country has recognized the importance of immediate and speedy action with respect to the question, and has uniformly advocated this measure as one the necessity for which ought not to be limited to any local region, but as extensive as the nation. This statement applies not simply to the local press, but to the important newspapers, journals, and magazines which represent the country as a whole. It also applies to the scientific journals, the trade and lumber journals, the engineering and mining journals, and other technical papers.

As a result of this agitation Congress incorporated in a bill making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, a provision which authorized the investigation of the conditions of the Southern Appalachian Mountain region, to be conducted under the supervision and direction of the Secretary of Agriculture. The Department of the Interior, through the Geological Survey, cooperated with the Department of Agriculture in this investigation, so as to have it include the condition of the streams, the topography and geology, as well as the forests of the region.

In January, 1901, the Secretary of Agriculture submitted a preliminary report of these investigations. His report was submitted to Congress by President McKinley in a message which recommended this measure to the favorable consideration of Congress. A bill was introduced in the Senate during the second session of the last Congress, which provided for the purchase of forest-covered mountains in the States of Virginia, the two Carolinas, Tennessee, Georgia, and Alabama. This bill was reported favorably to the Senate by the Committee on Forest Reservations.

Since that date investigations of this subject have been continued by the Department of Agriculture through another year. The Secretary of Agriculture in his final report, submitted December 19, 1901, again recommends that the forest lands in question be purchased by the Government and incorporated into a national forest reserve, and this recommendation by the Secretary is heartily indorsed by the President in his message transmitting the report to Congress.

The interest manifested in behalf of this measure furnishes evidence of the fact that the American people are becoming thoroughly aroused to the importance of preserving their forests, and we are now brought face to face with the problem as to the best method of accomplishing this result.

It may be contended by some that this measure involves a new policy on the part of the Government, but such is not the case. There have been a number of forest reservations established out of the public domain in Western States and Territories, which during the past ten years have aggregated more than 70,000 square miles. The following table will show the number of square miles of public domain that have been incorporated into national forest reserves in the Western States and Territories:

State.	Area reserved (square miles).	Per cent of total area.
Arizona	6,825	6
California	13,509	9
Colorado	4,848	5
Idaho	6,264	7
Montana	7,885	5
New Mexico	4,273	3
Oregon	7,271	8
Utah	1,474	2
Washington	12,672	19
Wyoming	4,994	5
Total	72,139

There are 38 of these separate reserves, ranging in area from 10,000 acres (at Prescott, Ariz.) to 4,500,000 acres—the area of the Cascade Reserve in Oregon—making the total area of all these reserves 72,139 square miles, or a little more than 46,000,000 acres.

Mr. BATE. I wish to inquire of the Senator whether the Government bought the land contained in the forest reservations to which he has just referred?

Mr. PRITCHARD. I will give the Senator some information on that subject later on. In part, those lands were originally owned by the Government, but in one instance, as in the Flathead Reservation, as I remember, the Government purchased the land outright and converted it into a forest reserve.

Immense sums of money are expended annually for the purpose of dredging the principal harbors of the country. The lodgment of sediment which is removed from these harbors by the process of dredging is due to the washing of the adjacent lands from the hill country into the various rivers tributary thereto, and the proximate cause of this accumulation is the unnatural flow of water produced by the destruction of the forests in the mountains where these rivers have their sources. If it is legitimate to appropriate money to remove the sediment resulting from the causes which I have mentioned, it necessarily follows that it is right and proper and much less expensive, as a precautionary measure, to appropriate money to preserve the forests, in order that this unnatural flow of water may not occur.

That the setting aside of portions of the national domain as forest reserves about the mountains and the sources of important streams in the Western States and Territories has been a wise policy is now generally admitted throughout all portions of the country. A portion of these lands were purchased (as in the Louisiana purchase); other portions came by right of discovery (Oregon and Washington), while still other portions were ceded by Mexico as the result of war (California, Utah, Nevada, and Arizona). Had these various lands been sold by our Government, the proceeds of such sale would have gone into the Treasury of the United States, but instead they have been withdrawn from sale and set aside as national forest reserves for the general benefit of the nation, and for the special benefit of the States and Territories within which these various reservations are located.

The measure under consideration involves a purchase by the Government of the forest lands which are to be incorporated into a forest reservation instead of, as in most of the former cases, a withdrawal from sale of forest lands formerly purchased. The principle, as well as the purpose, is much the same in both cases, and if judged simply on a question of finance, the Government's investment would prove a good one.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Will it interrupt the Senator if I ask him a question?

Mr. PRITCHARD. No; it will not.

Mr. SPOONER. I am in sympathy with the purpose the Senator has in view, but I should like to inquire of the Senator as to who own these forests?

Mr. PRITCHARD. They are owned by various individuals. There are some tracts comprising 10,000 acres and some tracts of only 200 or 300 acres, and so on, which are owned by different persons.

Mr. SPOONER. A great number of people?

Mr. PRITCHARD. I do not think there are more than a thousand people embraced within the territory that will be included in this reserve; that is, people who would be inclined to sell their tracts of land.

Mr. SPOONER. Is there any State ownership in it?

Mr. PRITCHARD. No; I do not think there is an acre of State land in the western portion of the State; but in eastern North Carolina there are a thousand acres which are still owned by the State, and this land constitutes our school fund.

Mr. SPOONER. Is it proposed by the bill that these settlers or owners shall be bought out by the Government for cash?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Yes; that is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. BATE. May I ask the Senator what is the amount involved?

Mr. PRITCHARD. The amount eventually contemplated to be appropriated is $10,000,000. The present bill authorizes an appropriation for present purposes of only $2,000,000, to be used by the Secretary of Agriculture in his discretion for the purchase of this land.

Mr. SPOONER. Is not this a new departure?

Mr. PRITCHARD. I do not think it is. In so far as the purchase of the land is concerned, to be used as a forest reserve, it is not a new departure, as I shall be able to show the Senator a little later on in the course of my speech.

Mr. SPOONER. I know that the forest reserves heretofore created have been created from practically Government lands, and the Government made provision, by an exchange for other public lands, for taking care of the settlers, and there were not a great many of them. This proposition would seem, as I understand it, to be the taking of private property for public purposes.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Yes; that is the purpose.

Mr. SPOONER. And in so far is it not a new departure?

Mr. PRITCHARD. In that respect it is a new departure.

Mr. BATE. Do I understand that it is proposed to condemn the land by the courts, or that it is to be purchased from private parties?

Mr. PRITCHARD. It is not proposed to condemn the lands in any section. The bill provides where persons desire to remain within the territory of the proposed reservation and will still reserve the original forest according to the rules of good husbandry that they shall not be disturbed. But, of course, if anybody residing within that territory persists in the ruthless destruction of the timber, so as to produce an unusual flow of water and the freshets from which we suffer in that region, then there is a provision to condemn the lands, and in order that we may have that authority the States of North Carolina, Georgia, South Carolina, Alabama, and Tennessee have all passed acts of cession, reserving the right of jurisdiction as to process, both criminal and civil, that may run within the territory.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will my colleague permit me?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to say, in reply to the inquiry of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], that the $2,000,000 which the bill presently appropriates is to be used by the Secretary of Agriculture not at once, but to be spread out in the purchase of these lands during the next two years. As I understand the bill there is to be no further appropriation—that is the present purpose—until that $2,000,000 has been expended; and there is a two-year limit in which it is to be expended.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Mr. President, in answer to my distinguished friend from Tennessee [Mr. BATE], as to whether or not there is a precedent for purchasing land by the Government for the purpose of being used for a forest reserve, I will call his attention to the fact that the proposed purchase of mountain lands for the Appalachian Forest Reserve will not be without precedent on the part of the Government. Numerous tracts of land have been purchased from time to time for military tracts and reservations by the Government, as well as the purchase from the Blackfeet Indians in 1896 of a body of forest land at a cost of $1,500,000, which lands were subsequently added to the Flathead Forest Reserve in Montana. It will be seen that this precedent is on all fours with the proposition now before the Senate.

Mr. President, this policy is not confined to our own Government, as it will be found upon investigation that other governments have deemed it necessary to perpetuate their supply of timber and to protect the forests about their mountain streams and rivers. In some cases, like that of France, where the governments have too long neglected to protect their mountain streams, they have found it necessary to expend many millions of dollars in trying to restore the forests on the mountain slopes, from which the forests had been destroyed by their original owners.

The Southern Appalachian Mountains extend from the southern half of Virginia and West Virginia southward into Georgia, and there are some low and somewhat isolated regions still farther southwest in Alabama. On the east, crossing Virginia, the Carolinas, and Georgia, lies the Piedmont, or hill country of the South Atlantic; on the west, the valleys of Virginia and of East Tennessee. The main body of these mountains is within a belt which averages some 40 miles in width and 200 miles in length. Along its eastern border is the Blue Ridge and along its western border are the Great Smoky or Unaka Mountains. Between these are innumerable shorter, irregular mountain ridges and mountain peaks. This is distinctively a region of mountains and of steep mountain slopes. It has 46 peaks a mile or more apart and 41 miles of dividing ridges, all of which rise over 6,000 feet. It has nearly 300 additional peaks and 300 miles of dividing ridges which rise more than 5,000 feet above the sea.

In referring to this region, the Secretary of Agriculture says:

> These are not only the greatest mass of mountains east of the Rockies, they are the highest mountains covered with hard-wood forests in America. This region, thus unique in its position, in its mountain peaks, in its forests, and in its climate, stands grandly out as the greatest physiographic feature in the eastern half of the continent. Between these groups of mountains, and far below them, though still at an elevation of 2,000 feet or more above the sea, are the numerous narrow valleys of this region. They border the numberless streams, and are generally more extensive near the source of these streams, and hence nearer to the Blue Ridge than to the Unakas.
> As a rule, they vary in width from a few hundred feet to as many yards. Some of the most notable of these valleys, reaching a width of from 2 to 5 miles in places, are those on New River in Virginia, on the French Broad above Asheville, on the Tennessee River in southwestern North Carolina, and about the head waters of the Coosa and other rivers in Georgia. As these streams approach and cut through the mountain borders of this region they run in deep gorges, the full width of which is often occupied by the streams.

For centuries past these mountain slopes and valleys have everywhere been covered with dense forest growths, and there was in general a freedom from floods and no waste on land surface.

The hard-wood or broad-leaved forests had their beginning in this region, and owing to the great variety of soil and topographic and climatic features in this region we have there to-day the greatest variety of all forms of vegetation, and the most extensive remnants of the aboriginal or primeval hard-wood forests now left in North America. Here is to be found the mingling of the varieties which extend northward from the Gulf States with those which have extended south from New England and Canada.

The valleys of this region have nearly all been cleared of their forests and are now under cultivation. The ever-increasing demands for land to cultivate has resulted in clearings being made higher and higher up the mountain slopes, which in most instances have a pitch of from 20 to 30 or even more than 40 degrees. In many sections these clearings have actually reached the top of the mountains. It is estimated that about 24 per cent of the area of this mountain region has been cleared, and the destruction of the mountain forests is increasing rapidly every year. The rapid increase in this clearing for agricultural purposes is due to the fact that these mountain fields are short lived, and unless sown in grass are usually limited to seven or eight crops at most.

In discussing this phase of the question, the Secretary says:

> They are cleared, cultivated, and abandoned in rapid succession.

If something is not done to check the rate at which these clearings are being made by the lumbermen and farmers, a few decades more will witness the complete destruction of all the timber on the mountain slopes in the region in question. If the effects of the destruction of timber in this region were confined to the immediate vicinity it would not present as serious a problem as the one which confronts us when we come to consider the many disastrous results flowing therefrom.

The destruction of the forests of the mountain slopes has already resulted in increasing the frequency and violence of the mountain floods, and these are not only carrying away the soil on the hillsides, but at the same time are rapidly destroying the flat lands which lie in the narrow mountain valleys. During the past few years many thousand acres of these valleys have been actually washed away, and it is only a question of time, if this process continues, when all of the valley lands will have been damaged to such an extent as to render them valueless.

Of the Southern Appalachian Mountain region, as a whole, about 24 per cent of area has been cleared of its forests and is now either being used for agricultural purposes or has been abandoned. Leaving out the valleys and border lands, which have gentle slopes and which can safely be continued in a cleared condition and used for agricultural purposes, the remainder of the area is still to a much larger extent covered with forests, probably not more than 5 to 10 per cent of the same having been cleared.

On many of the larger tracts of land in this region still held under one ownership, and consisting of from 10,000 to 70,000 acres, the proportion of cleared lands does not exceed 5 per cent; but under the present arrangement the annually recurring fires by the destruction of the humus and undergrowth has greatly diminished the capacity of these forest-covered areas for the storage of water, and thus for the regulation of its flow in the neighboring streams. The humus and undergrowth constitute nature's great sponge, which absorbs and holds until it can percolate into the soils and rock fissures below the excessive flow which always results in any mountainous region wherein the provisions of nature have, by negligence or otherwise, been destroyed.

The population in this region is confined principally to the valleys and bordering lands with gentle slopes. In the region of the Great Smokies, the Nantahala, the Balsam, and Cowee mountains, laying partly in Tennessee, but mainly in western North Carolina, in areas embracing one and a quarter million acres exclusive of the valleys, the population does not exceed 1,000 people, and should these settlers desire to continue to live in this region after it has been acquired by the Government under the provisions of this act, such continuance on their part would in no wise interfere with the purpose and operations of the forest reserve.

Indeed, it is not the purpose of the Secretary of Agriculture, in the event that this forest reserve is established, to undertake to control or interfere with the valleys, it being the policy of the Government to purchase the higher mountains and only such mountain farms as may be voluntarily offered for sale by the owners.

The damage from these floods is not now limited to the mountain region itself, but extends along these mountain streams from 100 to 200 miles across the adjacent States. The rivers rising in this region are many and important. The nine largest are as follows: The James and the Roanoke, flowing eastward from its northern end into the Chesapeake Bay and the Albemarle Sound, respectively.

The Pee Dee, the Congaree, and the Savannah, flowing from the North Carolina mountains across South Carolina into the Atlantic.

The Chattahoochee and the Alabama, flowing from the southern end of these mountains directly into the Gulf of Mexico.

The French Broad and other tributaries of the Tennessee flowing westward into the Mississippi.

The Kanawha, which flows northwestward from the northern end of these mountains into the Ohio.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, in order that his enumeration of these rivers may be complete, I will suggest to him a very important river, the name of which he omitted.

Mr. PRITCHARD. To what river does the Senator refer?

Mr. BACON. The Altamaha, with its tributaries.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I did not name that.

Mr. BACON. The Altamaha River and its tributaries drain a large part of central Georgia, and have their headwaters in that range of mountains.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I am very much obliged to the Senator for the suggestion.

The damages from floods to the agricultural lands and other properties along the streams during the spring and summer of the year 1900 were estimated by the Secretary of Agriculture to have aggregated not less than $10,000,000. The damages along one river in North Carolina—the Catawba—from the storms in the Blue Ridge Mountains during May and August, 1901, amounted to $1,500,000. Most of the bridges, the mills, the crops, and the farm lands for nearly 200 miles were swept away in the course of a few hours.

A single storm last year in one small valley in Mitchell County, N. C., a valley which had been largely cleared of its forests, wrought damages to the amount of more than half a million dollars. Still more recent damages from storms along these streams during December, January, and February have been almost as great as those during the spring and summer of 1901; among other things, at least one-third of the little town of Marshall, N. C., being completely swept away during the month of February.

The following statement will give some idea as to the extent of damages along streams rising in the proposed Appalachian Forest Reserve since April 1, 1901:

Kanawha, adjacent streams (in Virginia and West Virginia)	$1,000,000
Roanoke, James, etc. (in Virginia)	1,000,000
Watauga (in North Carolina and Tennessee)	2,000,000
Nolichucky (in North Carolina and Tennessee)	2,000,000
French Broad (in North Carolina and Tennessee)	1,500,000
Tuckaseegee and Hiawassee	1,500,000
Broad, Saluda, and Catawba (in South Carolina)	1,000,000
Yadkin and Dan and Roanoke (in North Carolina)	1,000,000
Catawba (in North Carolina)	2,000,000
Savannah and Chattahoochee (in Georgia)	2,000,000
Coosa (in Georgia and Alabama)	2,000,000
Tennessee and other tributaries	1,000,000
Total	18,000,000

It may be safely estimated that the damages from storms during the past twelve months along the rivers which rise in the Southern Appalachian mountain region have aggregated nearly $20,000,000, and it is perfectly safe to assume that if we are to continue the destruction of these mountain forests these floods in the future will also continue to increase both in their frequency and in their destructiveness.

As a result of the clearing of the forest in the hill country of the South Atlantic States, the frequency and violence of the floods have increased to such an extent that a great portion of the lowlands bordering them, from the Potomac to the Alabama (lands which fifty years ago produced bread for these States), have been abandoned. If the forest destruction in this region is continued it is certain that the increasing floods will, in a few decades more, completely destroy the lowlands bordering these streams in the hill country and throughout their entire courses, in the Virginias, the Carolinas, Georgia, Alabama, and Tennessee.

Indeed, these floods are already destroying the lands which produce much of the corn grown in these States. Along the great rivers to which I have referred, which rise in the Southern Appalachian Mountains, have been developed the greatest manufacturing interests to be found in the Southern States, and water powers along these streams are being utilized at intervals between their sources in the mountains down to the heads of navigation, as at Richmond, Weldon, Columbia, Augusta, Columbus, etc., and in addition to the many valuable water powers already developed it is estimated that more than 1,000,000 horsepower is easily available; but the future value of this large additional power will depend largely upon the forests of this mountain region being perpetuated.

The proper utilization of this water power would result in a yearly saving of fuel to the amount of at least $20,000,000 in these States. Other things being equal, the flow of water in nearly level country is more uniform and regular than in one of steep mountain slopes, but careful measurements made during the past five years show that in the South Atlantic region the flow of the streams in the lowland region, where more than 50 per cent has been cleared of its forests, is far more variable than is that in the mountain counties, where more than 75 per cent of the surface is still covered with forests.

Indeed, in the lowland region in North Carolina, where more than one-half of the land surface has been cleared and is now under cultivation, many of the streams which rise in that region have become so irregular in their flow that the use of water powers on these streams for manufacturing purposes has to a considerable extent been abandoned. The primary object of the proposed forest reserve is to perpetuate the forest on the steep mountain slopes of this Southern Appalachian region, with a view to regulating the water supply of the region in such a way as to prevent or minimize the floods on the streams rising in this mountain region and to perpetuate their value as a source of power for the development of manufacturing interests.

Of the many secondary purposes which will be accomplished it may be mentioned that the establishment of such a forest reserve, under the efficient management of the practical foresters now being trained in the Department of Agriculture, will serve as a demonstration of the wisdom and success of practical forest operations in the hard-wood regions of this country on a large scale, and this will encourage both individuals and States to adopt such methods of forest management on their own lands as will not only protect the forests already in existence, but will also restore them on lands which should never have been cleared.

The purpose of the proposed forest reserve will be the best accomplished—

First. By having the Government purchase, as far as may be possible, the existing forest-covered slopes in this region.

Second. The lands on the mountain slopes in this region from which the forests have already been cleared must be reforested under Government supervision as soon as practicable.

In considering this question the inquiry naturally arises as to why the Government should be asked to establish the Appalachian Forest Reserve. In reply it can be truly said that the preservation of the forests of these mountains is absolutely necessary for the public good. This is emphasized by the excessively heavy rainfall in this region, ranging from 60 to 100 inches during the year and often from 5 to 8 inches during a single day, and being heavier than any other portion of the continent except on the northern Pacific coast. Under such a rainfall, without a forest cover the land surface on the mountain slopes is rapidly removed.

It is also necessary to protect the many water powers which are now distributed along the course of the streams rising in this region. The following table will give some idea as to the extent and value of the same:

Water power on streams rising in the proposed Appalachian forest reserve.

River.	Developed horse-power.	Undeveloped available horse-power.
Kanawha (Virginia and West Virginia)	4,000	----
James (Virginia)	8,700	38,000
Roanoke (Virginia and North Carolina)	5,000	41,000
Catawba (North Carolina and South Carolina)	2,000	57,000
Broad and Saluda (North Carolina and South Carolina)	18,000	43,000
Savannah (North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia)	12,000	75,000
Chattahoochee (Georgia)	4,300	290,000
Coosa (Alabama; Georgia and Alabama)	3,700	140,000
Miscellaneous	2,300	----
Total developed power	*60,000	----

*Equivalent to 3,000,000 spindles.

Total available water power, 1,000,000 horsepower; if developed, equivalent to 50,000,000 spindles. Placing the value of these water powers at $20 per horsepower per annum gives, approximately, value of utilized power, $1,200,000 yearly; value of total available power, when developed, $20,000,000 yearly.

The French Broad River is not included in the foregoing. However, I call attention to the following statement prepared by by Prof. H. A. Pressey, of the Geological Survey:

In accordance with a request of Prof. J. A. Holmes, I send herewith a brief statement of the water power on French Broad River, North Carolina. The fall of the river from Asheville to the State line is a little over 700 feet. This is distributed as follows:

The fall from Hot Springs to Newport is 10 feet per mile, with decided shoals and falls at several points. Above Hot Springs in 7.7 miles the fall is 201 feet, being almost one continuous shoal, with a fall of 26.1 feet per mile. In this distance the most concentrated fall is at Mountain Shoal, with a fall of 15 feet, which could be increased by a dam. Two miles above Mountain Island, just below the mouth of Big Laurel Creek, there is another fall of 15 feet. Without any additional fall, by the construction of a dam each of these shoals would give, at the time of low-water flow, 1,700 gross horsepower.

Above the mouth of Brush Creek to Asheville, a distance of 29.3 miles, the fall is 15 feet per mile, and there are many shoals with direct falls of 10 feet. Four and one-half miles below Asheville a fall of 12 feet is now being developed to supply electric power for Asheville. Estimating the total fall of the river from Asheville to the State line to be 700 feet, and using the low-water flow of the river as represented by measurements of the United States Geological Survey, the gross horsepower in this stretch would be 80,000. This power, you will understand, could not all be developed, but 80,000 horsepower represents the theoretical limit of the development of power on this stream from Asheville to the State line.

Above Asheville the fall is very small, so that the power could not be developed with economy.

The three sites most interesting on the French Broad River from the water-power standpoint are at Marshall, where there is a flour mill utilizing a fall of 13 feet; the Shoals just below Asheville, which is now being developed for electric power, and Mountain Island Shoal, for which plans are being made for future development.

On Big Ivy Creek, a tributary of the French Broad, a dam 90 feet in height has been started for the development of water power.

These water powers will lose their value unless something is done to prevent the increasing irregularity in the flow of these streams, which can only be remedied by doing that which will prevent the further destruction of the mountain forests.

The foregoing table is within itself sufficient reason to justify us in adopting the pending measure. We appropriate millions of dollars annually for the purpose of rendering our rivers and harbors navigable upon the ground that it will facilitate and develop the commerce of the country. This is a proposition which has for its object the establishment of industrial enterprises in a region in which the resources are as a general rule in an undeveloped state.

This measure is also intended to protect the soils and other agricultural interests in the valleys and the mountain region itself along the course of these numerous streams as they cross the adjacent States; to protect the mountains themselves, including the beauty, healthfulness, and general attractiveness of this region as a pleasure and health resort for people from all sections of the country during all seasons of the year.

The Federal Government is not only the proper agency for the accomplishment of these great purposes, but it is the only agency which can be expected to do so for the reasons that—

Private individuals now owning these mountain lands can not be expected to perpetuate the forests thereon for the public good. They need and are seeking immediate financial returns. Their practice has been in the past the selling of their timber and the clearing of their lands as rapidly as circumstances would permit. These owners, however much they may regret the damages from floods and the diminished flow of water powers along the streams which rise in their vicinity, will not and can not be expected to change their present policy for the sake of the public good in their regions or in other States unless it can be made to their interest to do so.

The individual States whose territory extends into the region of the proposed forest reserve can not be expected to purchase lands for this purpose. The problem is an interstate or national one, and should be treated as such. The streams whose sources are now to be protected cross the territory of other States. The Kanawha, which rises in northwestern North Carolina, crosses portions of Virginia, West Virginia, and, in joining the Ohio, borders the territory of Kentucky, Indiana, and Illinois. Its floods are doing damage and its water powers are of value mainly not in North Carolina, but in these other States. The Alabama River has its headwaters in Tennessee, but its flood damage and water powers lie mainly in the States of Georgia and Alabama.

Similar statements apply with equal force to the other important streams rising within this region.

The revenues of the States within which the forest reserves should be located are not such as to encourage the belief that they could easily afford to make the investment, even should their respective legislatures express a willingness to do so. The only case in which States have purchased lands for the establishment of a forest reserve are those of New York and Pennsylvania, two of the wealthiest States, and the streams to be protected in these States lie wholly or largely within the limits of the individual States.

Forests under the control and management of the government in European countries have proved highly profitable investments, yielding under different conditions net proceeds from $1 to nearly $5 per acre. Owing to existing conditions in this country, the proposed Government forest reserve would not yield so large a profit as that of European forests, but it is fair to assume that the sales of timber and other forest products from the proposed forest reserve would soon be sufficient to make it self-sustaining, and even yield a net return to the Government, the profit increasing in the future.

In view of the recent storms and freshets throughout the region in question, it is highly important that the Government should take prompt action with respect to this question, to say nothing about the fact that the price of the forest-covered lands is rapidly increasing, and they are being purchased and entered upon by large lumber companies, which will make it all the more difficult for the Government to secure them at a later date at a reasonable price. In the meantime their value for the purpose of a national forest reserve will have diminished because of the reckless manner in which the timber will be cut.

There still remain in this region mountain tracts which have never been invaded by the lumbermen, where are to be found remnants of the splendid hard-wood forests in their virgin state. It is a matter of great interest and importance, not only to men of science, but to the American public, that examples of such forests should remain on the slopes of our greatest mountains in the eastern half of the continent and in a territory in which is to be found the greatest variety of hard-wood trees and associated vegetation to be found anywhere on the continent.

The necessity for prompt action on the part of Congress is urgent, and I trust that the bill now under consideration may become a law during the present session.

In the consideration of this question, among other things the question of the cost of the proposed forest reserve naturally arises, and I desire to briefly call attention to this phase of the question. The cost of mountain lands, such as are desirable for the proposed forest reserve, will, under the provisions of this bill, range generally from $1 to $3 dollars per acre; but for occasional tracts, where the timber is exceptionally fine, the price may reach $5 per acre. Much of the land is held in bodies ranging from 5,000 to 60,000 acres. It is believed that under the conditions of the bill now under consideration the average price of this forest land will be between $2 and $2.50 per acre; so that the cost of the 4,000,000 acres proposed as the maximum will not exceed $10,000,000.

The methods of procedure in the purchase of these lands under the provisions of this bill are left entirely to the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture. In addition to the confidence which that fact within itself inspires, it may also be added that in the bill itself the mode of procedure is safeguarded in every possible way. The bill authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase for the purpose of this reserve mountain lands in each of seven different States, and it wisely leaves the matter largely in his discretion, which will enable him to guard against obstructions which may appear through speculators and others.

We advocate this measure because we believe it is one of public utility. We say that the reasons for the passage of this measure are as great as those which prompt us to vote money to dredge the harbors and rivers of the country. It is exactly on the same idea, to say nothing about the other benefits which would naturally accrue to the public as the result of the passage of such legislation.

Mr. President, my colleague is not prepared, I understand, to discuss this matter to-day, but I hope he may call it up some time next week in order that we may have a vote on the measure at as early a date as possible.

IMITATION DAIRY PRODUCTS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SIMON in the chair). The Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have examined the oleomargarine bill, and I ask that it may now be taken up and acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill indicated by the Senator from Missouri, which will be read by its title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 9206) to make oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia into which they are transported, and to change the tax on oleomargarine, and to amend an act entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments of the House of Representatives to amendment of the Senate No. 9.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to offer an amendment to the bill, which I believe is in order. It is an additional section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Colorado to the fact that it is too late to offer an amendment to the bill.

Mr. TELLER. I am sure the Chair is in error. The bill is now before the Senate and open to amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as a new section the following:

That every agreement, contract, or combination between persons or corporations which has for its object and purpose, in whole or in part, the creation of a monopoly in butter, or which tend to create a monopoly by preventing full and free competition in the importation, manufacture, or transportation of butter, or which shall have for its object and purpose the advancing of the cost of butter to the consumers, is hereby declared to be a trust; and there shall be levied and collected annually, upon the capital and assets, and also upon the products of every such butter trust as defined by this section, a tax of 10 per cent, and no drawback for such taxes when they have been paid shall be allowed for exports. All the provisions of law in reference to internal-revenue taxes, so far as the same are applicable, shall apply to this tax and to the persons, partnerships, corporations, trusts, and combinations upon which it is imposed.

Mr. SPOONER. I believe the Chair is not in error in holding that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. TELLER. I will state the parliamentary situation, and then we will see whether the Senator from Wisconsin will insist upon his objection. The bill, which is a House bill, was amended in the Senate. It went back to the House of Representatives. The House accepted some of our amendments and added some amendments, I understand. The measure comes back here and goes to the Committee on Agriculture. The Committee on Agriculture reported it to the Senate, and instead of putting it on the Calendar, as they might have done, allowed it to lie on the table. It is strictly parliamentary to amend it if you have votes enough to do it. I do not know that we have.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was about to make the same inquiry that the Senator from Wisconsin did. Once or twice I have been troubled as to the parliamentary status of bills in a somewhat similar situation. Very likely it is because I do not understand the parliamentary law. But I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado a question. Suppose we amend the bill and send it to the House, will it be competent for the House to amend it and send it back to us and thus keep the bill going between the two Houses indefinitely? I confess I do not quite understand it, and I ask for information.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not profess to be much of a parliamentarian, but the bill came to us from the House. We concurred in the bill with certain amendments. We sent it back to the House and they concurred in nearly all our amendments, but in one or two instances amended our amendments. It seems to me the bill is not open to amendment by the addition of a new section, although I am not certain about it.

Mr. BACON. I do not think there is any possible question about the fact that whenever the House amends a bill and sends it back to the Senate, the Senate has a right to amend the amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. That is a different proposition.

Mr. BACON. I am coming to that. I think it equally clear that the power of the Senate is limited to an amendment of such an amendment as the House may put upon the bill. Now, the question what shall be an amendment to an amendment is rather indefinite, and it is for the Senate to say, when an amendment is offered, whether or not it is germane or whether it passes beyond the limit. It seems to me, without being accurately informed, that the latitude is pretty broad. I am not prepared to say that the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado is within the limit. It must be, however, an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I do not think the suggestion that this bill is beyond amendment is correct. I can offer an additional section, if I choose. I certainly can offer an amendment to the amendment of the House, if I choose. I can do both, in my opinion. I will suggest this as an independent section, for the purpose of getting a ruling.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the ruling is made, I wish simply to state that, as I understand the parliamentary situation, the question is on concurring in the amendment made by the House of Representatives, and that proposition is amendable.

Referring to Jefferson's Manual, which is a part of our rules, I read from page 136:

But the House can not recede from or insist on its own amendment with an amendment, for the same reason that it can not send to the other House an amendment to its own act after it has passed the act. They may modify an amendment from the other House by ingrafting an amendment on it, because they have never assented to it; but they can not amend their own amendment because they have, on the question, passed it in that form.

I think the introduction of a new section, entirely new matter——

Mr. TELLER. It is not entirely new matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a new section, and I understand it has no direct reference to the amendment put on the bill by the House of Representatives.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator from Colorado is right, we have authority to strike out all after the enacting clause and substitute.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. It can not be.

Mr. LODGE. As I understand, the House of Representatives concurred in our amendments with an amendment to one of them. On the 10 amendments there has been a meeting of the minds of the two Houses.

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. And those are passed beyond the stage of amendment. The only thing open to amendment is our amendment as amended by the House.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is correct. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. TELLER. I am not quite prepared to admit that. I wish the Chair would rule on the proposition. If the Chair rules that I can not offer it as an independent proposition, then I wish to offer it as an amendment to the amendment of the House. I ask the Chair to rule for the benefit of future action; that is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair was not in the chair when the amendment was proposed. Will the Secretary again read the amendment?

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as a new section the following:

That every agreement, contract, or combination between persons or corporations which has for its object and purpose, in whole or in part, the creation of a monopoly in butter, or which tend to create a monopoly by preventing full and free competition in the importation, manufacture, or transportation of butter, or which shall have for its object and purpose the advancing of the cost of butter to the consumers, is hereby declared to be a trust; and there shall be levied and collected annually, upon the capital and assets, and also upon the products of every such butter trust as defined by this section, a tax of 10 per cent, and no drawback for such taxes when they have been paid shall be allowed for exports. All the provisions of law in reference to internal-revenue taxes, so far as the same are applicable, shall apply to this tax and to the persons, partnerships, corporations, trusts, and combinations upon which it is imposed.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I wish to suggest that the only thing open here now is the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate. The proposed new section seems to me to be in no sense an amendment of the House amendment which has been made to the Senate amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the Chair understands it, this amendment is offered to the bill which has already passed the Senate. The bill has been engrossed and read a third time. That puts it beyond the power of amendment. On the contrary, the House provisions have not been acted upon by the Senate. They have not been passed, and have not been engrossed and passed to a third reading. Therefore the House amendments are open to amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I think that probably is correct. Now, I offer my amendment as an amendment to the House amendment.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the House amendments and ask for a committee of conference.

Mr. TELLER. You can not do that until my amendment is disposed of.

Mr. SPOONER. The amendment has been disposed of.

Mr. TELLER. I made a motion before the Senator from Vermont made his.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Colorado in his right to offer the amendment to the amendment. To which amendment of the House does the Senator from Colorado offer his amendment?

Mr. TELLER. The one which has not been concurred in by the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendment be read in connection with the text.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not understand that any of the amendments have been concurred in.

Mr. TELLER. I will offer it to the last amendment. It does not make any difference to which one.

Mr. LODGE. The motion is to concur with an amendment.

Mr. TELLER. Not necessarily.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado offers an amendment to the last House amendment.

Mr. TELLER. To amendment No. 9. It does not make any difference to which amendment it is offered, but I am particularly interested in the settlement of the question of parliamentary law.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the Senate provision as amended by the House be read and then the proposed amendment to the House amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to obtain a parliamentary ruling on this question, and I want, if possible, to secure the adoption of the amendment. If it will expedite matters, I might move to concur with an amendment to amendment No. 9.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Amendment No. 9 has ten or fifteen House amendments.

Mr. TELLER. We are entitled to have the bill before us, and if we can not have it before us we can postpone action on it until we can see what can be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will entertain the Senator's motion now if he will indicate where he will have the amendment inserted.

Mr. TELLER. I have not been able to see the bill. It is entirely irregular for the committee to bring in a bill in this way and then object to any amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think under the circumstances I had better adhere to my objection made a while ago, and let the bill go over and be printed.

Mr. CULLOM. That is what ought to be done.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then we can see it and act upon it intelligently.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent was given that the bill should be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL. It was. Let it be printed to show exactly what has been done, and let the amendment of the Senator from Colorado be printed as an amendment which he proposes, and then he can offer it at the particular place he wants to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that order will be made.

EDWARD R. STACKABLE.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 966) for the relief of Edward R. Stackable, collector of customs for the district of Hawaii, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask that the bill be read, and, if there be no objection, I will ask for its present consideration. I think there will be no objection after the bill is read.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to issue to Edward R. Stackable, collector of customs for the district of Hawaii, duplicates in lieu of three United States gold certificates for $10,000 each, the certificates having been lost on the Pacific mail steamer Rio de Janeiro, which was wrecked in or near the harbor of San Francisco, Cal.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the first case on the Calendar.

The bill (S. 2992) to ratify an agreement with the Sioux tribe of Indians of the Rosebud Reservation, in South Dakota, and making appropriation to carry the same into effect, was announced as the first business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That has been made the subject of an agreement. It will therefore go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over, retaining its place.

The bill (S. 1792) to amend an act entitled "An act relating to navigation of vessels, bills of lading, and to certain obligations, duties, and rights in connection with the carriage of property," was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota ask that this bill go over, too?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over without prejudice.

The bill (H. R. 6847) to correct the record of Michael Hayes was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

R. 52) authorizing the President of the United States to invite the government of Canada to join in the formation of an international commission to examine and report upon the diversion of the waters that are the boundaries of the two countries was announced as the next business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. KEAN. Let the joint resolution go over. I think it has gone to the other Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It might as well go to the Calendar under Rule IX, for it never will be acted upon. Provision in the river and harbor bill is made for the purpose covered by the joint resolution.

The bill (S. 4861) to regulate the assessment and collection of personal taxes in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEAN. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

Mr. SPOONER. Let that go over.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It goes, then, to Rule IX.

Mr. SPOONER. Let it go over without losing its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over without losing its place.

CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS.

The bill (S. 312) providing that the circuit court of appeals of the eighth judicial circuit of the United States shall hold at least one term of said court annually in the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado, or in the city of Cheyenne, in the State of Wyoming, on the first Monday in September in each year, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FEES OF JURORS.

The bill (S. 4769) to fix the fees of jurors in the United States courts was announced as next in order.

Mr. SPOONER. Does that apply only to Wyoming?

Mr. WARREN. This is a general bill.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without prejudice?

Mr. SPOONER. Without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over, retaining its place.

ANNE DOWERY.

The bill (S. 4642) granting an increase of pension to Annie Dowery was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Anne Dowery, widow of Edward Dowery, late of Company L, Tenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a written report in that case?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a report.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not understand why the bill has not heretofore been passed. Pension bills placed on the Calendar subsequent to it have been passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It had not been returned from the Printing Office when pension bills were last under consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. DEBOE on the 23d instant, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4642) granting an increase of pension to Annie Dowery, have examined the same and report:

This bill as amended proposes to increase from $8 to $20 per month the pension of Anne Dowery, widow of Edward Dowery, late of Company L, Tenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, who served from August 8, 1862, to September 17, 1863, and who died December 19, 1879.

Mrs. Dowery lives at Mount Sterling, Ky. She is 73 years of age, and is now receiving a pension of $8 per month under the act of June 27, 1890. She made claim under the general law, but abandoned it over ten years ago, being unable to prove that her husband's death was the result of his military service.

Mrs. Dowery has no property of any kind and no means of support except her pension. She is totally blind, and is compelled to have some one to wait on her all the time. This is shown by evidence accompanying the bill. In view of her advanced age, her destitution, and total blindness, your committee are of opinion that an increase of her pension would be eminently proper.

The bill is reported back favorably with a recommendation that it pass when amended as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Anne Dowery, widow of Edward Dowery, late of Company L, Tenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving."

Also amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Anne Dowery."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Anne Dowery."

HOWARD LODGE, I. O. O. F., OF GALLATIN, TENN.

The bill (S. 92) for the relief of Howard Lodge, No. 13, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Gallatin, Tenn., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SPOONER. Let the bill go over without losing its place.

Mr. KEAN. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin object?

Mr. KEAN. I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. SPOONER. I object to the bill being considered at this time.

Mr. BATE. What do I understand the Senator to say?

Mr. SPOONER. I objected to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. BATE. The Senator has that right. I do not think he will find the slightest objection to it when he looks at it and after reading the report.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to read it and to read the report.

Mr. BATE. Oh, certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over without prejudice.

DEVISEES OF JAMES W. SCHAUMBURG.

The bill (S. 1191) for the relief of the legal devisees of James W. Schaumburg was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the legal devisees of James W. Schaumburg, deceased, the amount of the pay and allowance of a first lieutenant of dragoons, from July 1, 1836, to March 24, 1845, as heretofore found to be due to him by the United States circuit court for the eastern district of Pennsylvania on the 23d day of November, 1875, and appropriates $11,165.31 for such payment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. WARREN on the 23d instant, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1191) for the relief of the legal devisees of James W. Schaumburg, having had the same under consideration, beg to submit the following report:

This claim has been pending since the Forty-seventh Congress, at which time it was first introduced, and it has been favorably reported by both House and Senate nearly every Congress during that period. It has passed the Senate seven times, but has never succeeded in reaching final consideration in the House. The merits of the claim have been repeatedly set forth in the many reports made from this committee, but as the salient points have been presented by the House Committee on Claims during this present session, your committee adopt the House report and report back the bill and recommend its passage with the following amendment:

Strike out the words "eleven thousand one hundred and sixty-five," in the twelfth line of said bill, and insert in lieu thereof the words "ten thousand eight hundred and sixty-five."

The report referred to is as follows:

"The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2218) for the relief of the legal devisees of James W. Schaumberg, beg leave to submit the following report and recommend that said bill do pass with an amendment as follows:

"Strike out the words 'eleven thousand one hundred and sixty-five,' in the eleventh and twelfth lines of said bill and insert in lieu thereof the words 'ten thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.'

"The facts on which this bill is based are fully stated in prior reports of committees made to the House. Sufficient of these to give an understanding of the bill are here restated as follows:

"From a report of the Committee on War Claims made to the House in the Fifty-second Congress:

"'This bill provides for the payment of an amount found due the claimant by the courts of the United States.

"'The service was rendered by the claimant as first lieutenant of United States Dragoons from July, 1836, to March 24, 1845.

"'The United States circuit court for the eastern district of Pennsylvania found this amount to be due in an action between the United States and the claimant in 1874.

"'The judgment was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States. The case is reported in the 103 United States Supreme Court Reports, page 667.'

"This was in 1880.

"'On the 11th of July, 1882, the Secretary of the Treasury transmitted the claim to Congress, asking for an appropriation, as follows:

"'TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
"'Washington, D. C., July 11, 1882.

"'SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith copies of papers in the claim of James W. Schaumburg for pay and allowance as lieutenant of dragoons from July 1, 1836, to March 24, 1845, and to recommend that authority be given to the accounting officers of the Treasury to audit and allow the same, and that an appropriation of $11,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be provided for its payment.

"'Very respectfully, "'CHARLES J. FOLGER,
"'Secretary.

"'Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
"'Chairman Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

"'The Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. C. S. Fairchild, again recommended the payment of the claim to the Appropriation Committee under date of February 15, 1889.

"'It was referred to the Committee on Claims in the Senate, and passed the Senate March 19, 1888.

"'The bill again passed the Senate April 19, 1890.

"'It again passed the Senate at the present session of Congress, April 12, 1892.'" (Senate bill 251.)

"A similar bill to the one now under consideration has been before Congress since 1882, and has been reported favorably many times by committees of the House and Senate, but has never reached a final vote in both Houses.

"The following statement is contained in a report of the Committee on Claims to the House in the Forty-ninth Congress:

"'That said Schaumburg was commissioned a first lieutenant of the First Regiment of Dragoons on the 1st day of July, 1836, but, notwithstanding, the military officials of the War Department refused to assign him to duty. Against this decision he appealed to President Tyler, who, on the 11th day of January, 1844, ordered him to be recognized and his name printed at the head of the list of first lieutenants in the Army Register for 1845.

"'On the 15th of March, 1845, the Senate passed a resolution that such recognition was illegal and void and that Lieutenant Schaumburg's name ought not to be continued on the roll of the Army.

"'In pursuance of this resolution the Secretary of War announced, March 24, 1845, that the President directed that Lieutenant Schaumburg's name should be erased from the Army Register.

"'On the 2d of March, 1849, the Senate repealed and rescinded said resolution, and resolved that the order of the President made by reason of said resolution should be revoked, and declared that Schaumburg had been improperly dismissed from the Army and was entitled to a commission as captain in the First Regiment Dragoons. This resolution was followed by a memorial signed by 36 of the most distinguished members of the Senate recommending Lieutenant Schaumburg for promotion. This, however, was not done, and Lieutenant Schaumburg was not reinstated.

"'Mr. Schaumburg claims that he is entitled to recover from the United States his salary as first lieutenant of dragoons from the time he was commissioned, on the 1st day of July, 1836, to the time he was removed by the order of President Tyler, on the 24th of March, 1845.

"'Your committee further find that Lieutenant Schaumburg, in the year 1860, was appointed a paymaster in the United States Army; that he continued as such until he resigned in 1863.

"'Subsequently, and in the year 1874, suit was brought by the United States in the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Philadelphia against the said James W. Schaumburg and his sureties upon his bond executed by him and such sureties for the faithful performance of his duties as such paymaster, in which suit it was claimed that said Schaumburg and his sureties were indebted to the United States for default in the performance of the conditions of said bond in the sum of $306.30.

"'To this claim the said Schaumburg interposed a plea that the United States was indebted to him in the sum of $68,140.70 for undrawn pay and emoluments due him as first lieutenant in the First Regiment of Dragoons from the time he was commissioned as such as aforesaid to the commencement of said action.

"'Thereupon issue was duly joined, and afterwards, at a session of said court held at the city of Philadelphia before the Hon. John Cadwalder, judge of the district court of the United States for said district, on the 23d day of November, A. D. 1875, the said issue came on to be tried by a jury of said district, and having been so tried the court instructed the jury as follows:

* * * * * * *

"'"That the defendant was from the 1st of July, 1836, until the 24th of March, 1845, in the military service of the United States as a first lieutenant of dragoons or cavalry, and that he is entitled as such to credit for the pay and emoluments accrued during this period.

"'"That as this credit was admitted to exceed the whole of the plaintiff's demand, the verdict should be for the defendant."'

"In this action was adjudged that there was due the claimant on the claim presented by him the sum of $11,165.31, which being reduced by the amount of $300, recognized as due the Government, left a balance due the claimant of $10,865.31, as carried by the bill as amended.

"President Tyler recognized the justice of Mr. Schaumburg's claim, and in 1843 General Jackson wrote a letter explaining the status of this claim and completely vindicating the claim made by Mr. Schaumburg.

"On the foregoing statement of facts your committee are of opinion that the bill ought to be amended as hereinbefore indicated, and as amended it ought to pass."

Mr. SPOONER. I wish to say to the Senator from Missouri that this bill has been many times reported by the Committee on Claims, and it has many times passed the Senate. This man's claim was the subject of adjudication in the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Pennsylvania. The amount stated was found due him by the court. An appeal was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States by the Government, which affirmed the judgment in his favor. The payment of this claim has been recommended by several Secretaries of the Treasury.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to see the decision of the Supreme Court in the case. It is not in the report.

Mr. SPOONER. It says:

The judgment was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States. The case is reported in the 103 United States Court Reports, page 667.

On the 11th of July, 1882, Secretary Folger recommended the payment of the claim. It was again recommended by Secretary Fairchild. I remember a very strong letter——

Mr. COCKRELL. From what report does the Senator read? I have the report which accompanies the bill, and on page 3 there are stars left after the words, in the fifth line, "the court instructed the jury as follows."

Mr. SPOONER. I was reading from the top of page 2 of the report. I remember, I think, a letter from General Jackson on the claim, which was a very searching and drastic letter. It appeared to him that the man had been outrageously treated.

Mr. COCKRELL. I had occasion many years ago, when a member of the Committee on Claims, to go through this whole case, and it was not my judgment at that time, from the facts placed before me, that it was a just claim. However, I think that was before 1880. I have been keeping my eye on it ever since. I should like to have the bill go over. I should like to see the decision of the Supreme Court.

There was a trial in Pennsylvania, where this man had been sued on his bond twenty-odd years after he pretended to be a lieutenant and had been made a paymaster in the Army. He was sued on his bond for a defalcation amounting to some $303 or something.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now he comes into court with a counterclaim that the United States was indebted to him in an enormous sum of money for services as a lieutenant fifteen, twenty, or thirty years before.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. The question of limitation was never raised there. In any other court I think he would have been barred from attempting to set up any such claim as being entitled to a salary that had accrued away back in 1830 or 1835 or 1840.

Mr. SPOONER. He and his sureties were sued for $306 on a paymaster's bond. He set up this claim against the Government. The Government was represented by its counsel. The court allowed $306 to be taken from the judgment and rendered judgment in his favor on the merits.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The whole amount of the claim was $68,000.

Mr. SPOONER. It allowed him eleven thousand and some odd hundred dollars. The $306 was taken from the judgment.

Mr. COCKRELL. He put in a counterclaim for $68,000.

Mr. SPOONER. Very well. I think the Government is not in a very good position to repudiate the decision of its own tribunals. I went through this claim, I remember, with a good deal of care years ago; I went through it carefully, and I came to the conclusion that the man had been the subject of a grievous and absolutely indefensible outrage on the part of the Government and that he was entitled to this money. He died while trying to get it. The bill has been considered in the Senate a number of times and has passed the Senate a number of times.

Mr. COCKRELL. There have been adverse reports on it, too.

Mr. SPOONER. I know; but the judgment of the Senate is in favor of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. It has seesawed in one way and another here ever since the transaction occurred.

Mr. SPOONER. Many a just claim has seesawed between the two Houses until the man went to the poorhouse or down to the grave broken-hearted.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. SPOONER. Where the case has been decided in his favor upon a contest in the United States court of Pennsylvania and then taken to the Supreme Court of the United States and affirmed, it has always seemed to me that the Government was not in a very good position to contest it; I mean in Congress.

Mr. COCKRELL. But as it has seesawed for about half a century, I do not think it will hurt to seesaw a day or two longer. Therefore I must ask that the bill go over. I want to see the report.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly; I was not objecting to that course.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, in the course of my remarks yesterday I dealt somewhat with the question of responsibility for existing conditions in the Philippine Islands. I believe I demonstrated from the official record that this frightful war against the Filipinos was the inevitable result of the policy adopted by the Administration; that this Government itself had helped to arm a nation burning with enthusiasm for independence, and after doing so had undertaken to destroy their independence.

General MacArthur in his testimony before the Committee on the Philippines testified that the spirit of freedom has been steadily growing for years among the people of the Philippine Islands. This spirit had blazed out in insurrection before we had ever set foot in the islands.

The idea of independence, which had already taken root in the minds of the Filipinos, sprang up and blossomed into a great national uprising when we entered the islands to support the aspirations of the people. So far as the Filipinos were concerned, that war, in which they participated in cooperation with the United States, was an organized struggle for national independence, and it was distinctly understood by us to be so when we sought their aid and cooperation. When, therefore, it was demanded of the Filipinos that they should yield themselves subject vassals to our sovereignty, the Government of the United States must have known and did know that this was the beginning of a bloody and destructive war.

General Otis, in his testimony before the committee, spoke of the intense zeal and enthusiasm that permeated the whole army of Filipinos and the whole people in favor of independence, and he said that independence was the only alternative to war.

The Government of the United States deliberately chose war rather than independence. If we had chosen to prosecute our war with Spain without the aid of the Filipinos, the end of that war might not have found them ready to submit to our sovereignty and dominion, but it might have found them without an army and an organized force to resist us, and it would have found them without that deep and rankling sense of injustice that comes from violated obligations.

Therefore we were not only guilty of a violation of an obligation binding upon the nation's honor, but we were guilty of the monumental and almost incredible stupidity of arming a nation which we intended to destroy.

I also referred to the utterances of some who have dealt so freely with the utterances of those who have opposed this policy, and showed, I believe, that the friends of this Administration and the Administration itself have been diligently fanning the flames of insurrection with one hand while seeking to quench them with the other. Generations will not wipe out the memory of the words of cold-blooded insult and opprobrium, of cold-blooded greed and rapacity, to say nothing of the awful horrors with which we have visited that desolate and unhappy country.

You may say that we have filled the people of the Philippines with the hope of independence. You have filled them with a deep and bitter and inextinguishable hatred of American rule—a hatred that will be transmitted from sire to son through generations yet to be born.

I also discussed the effect of the legislation we have enacted at the present session of Congress and of the bill that is now pending before the Senate, and I closed with an extract from a recent work of Dr. Schurman, appointed by President McKinley as the head of the first Philippine Commission, in which he condemned in the strongest terms the proposition to make a wholesale disposition of franchises and concessions and of the lands of the people, as is proposed in this bill, without giving the people themselves any voice whatever in their government.

I call the attention of the Senate to the fact referred to in Dr. Schurman's book that the very first railroad projected in the Philippine Islands is a railroad to be built up into the mountains that will be of no economic or industrial advantage whatever to the people of the Philippine Islands, but is to be built solely for the pleasure and recreation of American officials—a road to be built at immense cost and out of the taxes of the people of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. President, I hope that this extract which I have read from Dr. Schurman's book will be read by every citizen of the United States. Where is there a man with a heart in his bosom who does not feel the force of Dr. Schurman's temperate but powerful protest against the provisions of this very bill? Where is there a man of intelligence who does not see the wisdom of this policy he proposes with a view to its effect upon the temper and disposition of the people as well as from the standpoint of an honest and intelligent administration of the government? Who does not see the gross outrage and wrong in excluding even the most cultured and intelligent of the Filipinos from any real participation in the government of their country while it is being divided and parceled out among American syndicates and American adventurers? Why not give at least the educated and intelligent part of the people some share in their government before you proceed to give their country away to foreigners?

But, no; you do not want to be disturbed by Filipino protests or Filipino objections until every American syndicate has been gorged to the gullet and until there is nothing left in the country that even a carpetbagger would care to take home.

Dr. Schurman, good, easy man, says that the Philippines are for the Filipinos. Under this Government they are for the Filipinos in the same sense that the pasture is for the sheep. The sheep live there and browse there in order that they may raise wool for somebody else to wear and mutton for somebody else to eat.

Mr. President, this bill is a pitiful evasion of the promises you have made alike to the Filipinos and to the American people. We have a right to demand that the Administration and the party in power shall at last define its policy in the Philippine Islands.

You asked us to wait until the treaty had been ratified, and we waited. Then you asked us to wait until the insurrection had been suppressed, and we have waited for that. You have exhausted the last pretext, and no other excuse stands between you and the performance of your plain duty. The American people and the people of the Philippine Islands alike demand that you shall frankly declare your intentions in this matter, and both have a right to know. They are not willing to trust blindly in the wisdom of your secret designs. You are trying to lead two peoples blindfold, one into a policy of imperialism, contrary to all its history and traditions, the other into a condition of political servitude, contrary to all its just hopes and expectations.

You have objected that you would make no answer to men who came to you with guns in their hands; but, sir, the people who have been knocking at your door, the people whose memorial lies upon your table, did not come with guns in their hands. They came with nothing but a peaceful petition, and they came as the accredited friends of your Government and the supporters of your sovereignty in the Philippine Islands. They are the men by whose help, as Governor Taft testified, more has been done to pacify the Philippine Islands than has been accomplished by all your armies in the field. By their long, faithful, and effective service they have a right to be heard and a right to be answered. They will not patiently submit to your acts of sheer despotism and trust in your vain and delusive promises forever.

In the memorial that lies upon the table of this Senate they have fairly forwarned you that they would not yield a peaceful submission to the kind of government you have established in this bill; and that, if it is continued, it will end in riot and chaos and insurrection. These words, let me say, have not come from armed insurgents; they are not the threats of your enemies; they come from the only friends you have in the Philippine Islands; and let me say to Senators upon the other side of the Chamber, when the time comes that your most trusted friends in the Philippines become your bitterest and most implacable foes, when, in the passion of despair, they rise up in armed and bloody insurrection against your authority, do not say that they have dealt treacherously with you; do not say that they have deceived and betrayed you.

They have dealt with you in the utmost candor and good faith. They have fairly forewarned you that they would not submit to the government imposed by this bill; and I say when the time comes, as it will come, when your best friends in the Philippines rise up in insurrection against you, it will not be against them, but against you, that the charge of double-dealing will be made.

Or do you suppose that your carpetbag government in the Philippines will be so pleasant to the eye and so sweet to the taste that the people will forget their love of freedom? What makes you think so? What fact or experience in your own history induces this belief in the ineffable sweetness and purity of carpetbag rule?

Mr. President, if the government we are about to establish in the Philippines is not ten thousand times better than the carpetbag government you established and maintained with the bayonet here in your own country, over your own people, may the Lord God have mercy upon the people of the Philippine Islands. And yet, sir, all the horrors of reconstruction were perpetrated plainly in your own sight; every cry of anguish fell distinctly upon your ear; but you were so intent on fastening your grasp upon the government, you were so absorbed in your revel of spoils, that you could not heed the cry of an oppressed and plundered people, though they were your own people, of your own blood, in your own country. What right have we to suppose that you will be any more just or gentle or compassionate in dealing with the people of the Philippine Archipelago, 10,000 miles from your seat of government?

Our dealings with the American Indians have been aptly characterized as a century of dishonor; our treaties with them have been shamelessly violated; we have delivered them over to the tender mercies of thieving Indian agents; we have inflamed them with injustice and mean whisky; and when in sheer desperation they have risen in revolt, we have made them "good Indians" with powder and ball.

Alaska was ceded to us by despotic Russia and came under the benign rule of this great Republic. For thirty-five years our continuous misgovernment of that country has been a shame and a disgrace to the nation. Two or three years ago Governor Brady, of Alaska, said: "Sixty men are in charge of the government of this Territory; they have no interest in Alaska, except to grab what they can and get away; they are like a lot of hungry codfish. Seven of these—11 per cent of the whole number—are now under indictment for malfeasance in office." And when Mr. Roosevelt was governor of New York he delivered an address in which he referred to the fact that an Alaskan town wished to be transferred to Canada. "They want to get out from under our flag," said he, "because no one has thought proper to give Alaska good government;" and he added, "If we govern the Philippines as we have governed Alaska we shall have the same result."

Who dares to say that we shall govern the Philippines any better than we have governed Alaska, any better than we have governed the Western Indians, any better than you governed the Southern people in the hideous days of reconstruction?

I ask Senators upon the other side of the Chamber if they have considered the enormous difficulties in the way of perfecting a system of government for the Philippine Islands and the still more enormous difficulties of securing an honest administration of that government? Governor Taft, in his testimony before the committee, told us something of these difficulties. He said there must be a constant vigilance, a constant and most vigilant supervision on the part of the Government at Washington; he said that the American officials appointed to the Philippines must be men of the highest character and integrity, that they must be men who could enter into a sympathetic understanding of the character, the wants, and the needs of the Filipinos, and must be unselfishly devoted to their interests. He frankly admitted that it would be extremely difficult to secure good men for the Philippine service; that it would be very difficult to get good men from the United States to leave this country and go and live in the Philippine Islands. He said, furthermore, that the opportunities and the temptations for plunder and oppression in the Philippines would be very great.

Now, Mr. President, while this task is new and while it appeals to the imagination, it will be attractive to some men of real talent and ability, like the gentlemen who now compose the Philippine Commission; but when the gloss has worn off, when the syndicated boomers have appropriated the cream of the spoils, when the Government sinks into the dull routine of administration, it will be in the Philippines precisely as it has been in Alaska. We know what kind of men, as a rule, will be sent to serve in the Philippine Islands. Needy and desperate adventurers, broken-down politicians looking for a job, the sons, nephews, and cousins of American politicians, the Rathbones and Neelys; men who have qualified themselves for service abroad by the dirty and villainous work they have done at home, these are the men who, as a rule, will find service in the Philippine Islands, as they did in Cuba, as my friend from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] suggests.

Mr. President, how much time will be abstracted from the weighty and multitudinous affairs of our own Government for that sleepless vigilance which Governor Taft tells us will be absolutely necessary to secure a tolerable government in the Philippine Islands? How much time will the Congress of the United States be willing to spare from the consideration of a pension bill, or a river and harbor bill, or a ship-subsidy scheme, or a tariff bill, or anything of that sort in order to devote it to the affairs of the Philippine Islands? What sort of government will you have under such conditions? What sort of protection will the people of the Philippine Islands have against wrong and oppression? How much zeal and energy will be expended in uncovering and punishing the rascalities of men whose only crime is that of plundering and oppressing 10,000,000 people who are nobody's constituents and who have no votes?

Mr. President, the course of the Administration, and especially of the War Department, has given us a foretaste of the kind of zeal and energy that will be expended in protecting the people of the Philippine Islands. For months and years detailed and circumstantial stories of the horrible atrocities being enacted in the Philippine Islands have poured in upon us, and have been published broadcast throughout the country by its newspapers. These stories have come from actual eyewitnesses and from actual participants, and they have come from writers of established character and standing who have personally visited the scenes of those horrors.

Nearly two years ago the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], a man who is always careful of his words, a man whose utterances always command the respect of the country, brought these charges of torture and of other infamies and outrages practiced in the Philippines to the attention of the American Senate. He repeated them at a later date. Two years ago Mr. George Kennan, a writer of high repute, published a magazine article concerning these outrages, and a number of other writers have done the same. Torture—a regulated system of torture, the wholesale burning of large towns and villages, the wasting of large tracts of populous territory—ruin and desolation and famine and massacre, such are the methods and instruments of our war in the Philippines. We are bloodily exterminating a people for no other crime than that of wishing to be free.

It is a war waged with indiscriminate ferocity against a whole people—men, women, and children. And these barbarities, sir, have not been perpetrated, as has been weakly suggested, by way of retaliation; they have not been perpetrated for punishment or even for revenge. It is a cold-blooded, calculated cruelty. It is simply part of a war waged upon the principle of making its horrors so vast and so universal that the whole people will cry for peace or else there will be no man left to prosecute the war. Make the land a howling wilderness! Put everybody above ten years of age to the edge of the sword. Leave no human creature to nurse a memory of the inhuman wickedness perpetrated in the name of this enlightened Republic. Let the torch go with the sword; let famine tread upon the heels of slaughter. When you have made it a land without a home, a country without a people, then the work of benevolent assimilation will be complete and you may write "pacified" upon the tombstone of a buried race.

Major Waller justified the murder of 11 natives under circumstances of exceptional cruelty by the order he had received from General Smith instructing him to kill every person he met of 10 years old and upwards whether armed or unarmed. And General Smith admits and justifies this infamous order, and I am waiting to hear it condemned by Senators on the other side of the Chamber. To what an awful depth of brutality and depravity have we descended in this war to which we were called by the voice of mercy! How long will it be, in this process of degradation and brutalization, before the American Army shall furnish a fit companion to relieve King Herod of the solitude of his infamy? Another slaughter of the innocents—the cold-blooded butchery of mere children; and the cry goes up from that stricken country, the voice that was heard in Ramah, "lamentation, and weeping and great mourning; Rachel weeping for her children and will not be comforted, because they are not." And this war had its origin in a horror of just such scenes.

Ah, Mr. President, Spain has her revenge. We, who started out to punish her, have become servile imitators of her most infamous cruelties, and if the American people do not rise up and put an end to these horrors the brand of infamy will be stamped upon the nation's brow forever and forever.

Mr. President, I will not dwell upon these horrors. They have been pictured with a ghastly and pitiless fidelity in the great speech of the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], a speech which, if I do not misunderstand the temper and the character of the American people, will send a thrill of horror and indignation from one end of this country to the other, however lightly it may affect Senators on the other side of the Chamber.

The point to which I wish now to direct the attention of the Senate is the fact that while all these horrors have been steadily going on for months and years, while the story of them has been pouring in upon this country all the time, there has been absolutely no effort on the part of the Administration or of the War Department to put an end to them, but every effort to conceal or deny them.

Mr. President, from the very first outbreak of hostilities in the Philippine Islands there has been a conspiracy for the suppression of truth and for the dissemination of falsehood in regard to affairs in that country. There has been a deliberate and systematic effort to whitewash every crime and every outrage and every villainy perpetrated in that country and to blackwash the character of their victims.

How much vigilance, how much zeal, for the protection of the Filipinos may you expect from an Administration which has suppressed the fact that 100,000 people have perished in a single province where there were only 300,000 at the beginning? If large towns and villages and populous tracts of territory may be made an absolute desert, the houses burned to the ground, with the food, the provisions, and the household goods of the inhabitants—if all that can be done and the fact be concealed from the American people, if a policy of wholesale massacre and butchery and murder may be prosecuted in that country, and the people of the United States not know it, how much of mere misgovernment, how much mere plunder and tyranny and oppression, may be enacted there under carpetbag rule and never be known to the people of the United States?

Mr. President, the outcome of the government we are attempting to establish in the Philippine Islands will be constant, ever-recurring insurrection, to be suppressed by the blood and treasure of the American people; and all this for no other purpose than that a few carpetbag rapscallions may have unlimited license to thieve and plunder. The maintenance of friendly and peaceful relations with the people of the Philippine Islands is utterly inconsistent with the very purpose and spirit of this policy. You are intent upon exploitation, upon quick commercial profit. You wish by a forced development of the resources of the islands to reap an immediate harvest for your corporations and your syndicates. This you can not do with native labor. It will not be immediately available for your purposes.

It is a demonstrated fact that no tropical colony has ever been made a commercial success except where a system of forced labor or of imported contract or indentured labor has been employed. All the syndicates, all the corporations, all the so-called business interests represented by the Manila Chamber of Commerce, are clamoring for unrestricted Chinese immigration to the Philippine Islands. The people of California and the Pacific slope, as Governor Taft admits, are no more bitter in their hostility to Chinese immigration than are the people of the Philippine Islands.

You will have to choose between the American adventurer in the Philippines and the Filipino himself. You must forego your hope of rapid exploitation, or else you must incur the inextinguishable hatred of all the people in the Philippine Islands. In the one case your Philippine investment falls a dead burden upon your hands. In the other it becomes a volcano of riot and insurrection. You will be compelled to choose between them.

Mr. President, the end of this insurrection will simply be the beginning of our troubles in the Philippine Islands. The natural and inevitable result of the government of the country you are going to establish there and the purposes for which you are going to establish it will be misgovernment, and constantly recurring insurrections will be the inevitable result of such government.

You will have to deal with the question of slavery in the Philippines, which is being permitted and tolerated by this Government in defiance of the Constitution of the United States. I know, sir, there has been an effort to idealize and make beautiful the institution of slavery in the Philippines. Men who could not think of a Christian slaveholder in Tennessee, Alabama, or Mississippi, except as a monster of wickedness and depravity, have found nothing but gentleness and tender mercy among the Mohammedan slave drivers of the Sulu Archipelago. They say slavery there is mere nominal slavery, and the real trouble about getting rid of slavery is on the part of the slaves themselves.

It is true, as the Commission tells us, that in some parts of the islands they have the habit of sacrificing their slaves or burning them alive as a sacrifice to some of their heathen gods, but the Commission seems to think that the slaves rather like that and that they would resent it if you should try to abolish the practice. They say we must not now try to abolish slavery over there, because the slaveholders will fight, and it is not to be thought of that the American Republic shall fight to get rid of slavery. Men who did not hesitate to plunge into a bloody, sanguinary, and destructive war to deprive the Christian Filipinos of their liberty stand aghast at the very thought of shedding one drop of blood to deprive the Mohammedan masters of their slaves.

Mr. President, we have already got into some trouble with these Mohammedan slaveholders, but the trouble had hardly begun before the aggressive movement of our troops was checked by orders from Washington and instructions given to exhaust every effort for a peaceable adjustment before proceeding to actual hostilities. What a pity sir, that something of this humane and considerate temper could not have been shown toward the Christian Filipinos. The first battle between the latter and the American forces was precipitated by the shooting down of Filipinos by American soldiers.

As General Otis himself admits, the battle was not intended by the Filipino leaders. The result of that battle thus precipitated was a terrible slaughter of the Filipinos; and yet when Aguinaldo applied for a cessation of hostilities and a conference, General Otis says in his report of the battle, "I declined to answer." As General Reeve reports him, he said: "The war having begun, it must go on to the grim end." And the hero of San Juan, the President of the United States, declared that the war must be pressed with relentless vigor, and that there must be no parleying with the Filipinos. Why does the undaunted warrior pause now? Why does he stop to "parley" with the Mohammedan Moros? It is said that they have murdered our soldiers; that they have fired on our flag; that they have raised their own red flag in open insult and defiance to the flag of the United States. For the poor Christian Filipinos there was to be no "parley." There was to be nothing but the "grim end" for them. The honor and dignity of the nation could be satisfied with nothing but butchery and massacre, and the "insult to the flag" must be avenged in the blood of men, women, and children. That was the policy when we were dealing with the Filipinos. But this sensitiveness to indignity, this jealous regard for the national honor, is not very much in evidence when it comes to dealing with the slaveholding and polygamous Mohammedans. The warrior of San Juan condescends to "parley!" He appeals for a truce! He sues for peace! He is not half so eager to protect the nation's honor when he goes up against the red flag of those fighting devils, the Mohammedan Moros!

How many of these horrors enacted in the Philippine Islands might have been spared if the proud warrior could have so far stooped his haughty crest as to consent to a little parleying with the Christian Filipinos!

It is with these Moros, sir, that we must deal in this matter of slavery.

The idea has been given out that our republican free institutions, which will never get within 7,000 miles of the Philippine Islands, are in some way to bring euthanasia to slavery in the Philippine Islands. Mr. President, all the indications are that the institution of slavery will be immensely strengthened and invigorated by our advent into the islands. Some days ago there was a gentleman in the city of Washington, representing a great and powerful syndicate, seeking to have the Committee on the Philippines give permission, which, as I understand the bill, the committee has done, for syndicates to acquire 20,000 acres of land. This syndicate wanted to acquire 20,000 acres at least in Mindanao for the purpose of cultivating rubber trees, and he said that they had already made arrangements with the Moro chiefs to procure labor, slave labor, for the purpose of his syndicate.

Mr. President, the sure effect of such a transaction will be immensely to increase the importance of slavery and to increase the value of slave labor in that country. The cultivation of rubber trees by American syndicates will have the same effect as the invention of the cotton gin on slavery in the Southern States. For that purpose I have proposed an amendment which I should like to have read and inserted as a part of my remarks, and I hope I may have the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed that it shall be unlawful for any corporation organized under this act, or for any person, company, or corporation receiving any grant, franchise, or concession from the government of the Philippine Islands, to hold persons in slavery or involuntary servitude, or to use, employ, or contract for the labor of persons so held in slavery or involuntary servitude; and any person, company, or corporation so violating the provisions of this act shall forfeit all charters, grants, franchises, and concessions for doing business in the said Philippine Islands, and in addition shall be deemed guilty of an offense, and shall be punished by a fine of not less than $10,000.

Mr. CARMACK. I should be glad to know now, to save me possibly from further discussion in the future, whether or not the amendment is agreeable to the Senator from Massachusetts, the chairman of the committee.

Mr. LODGE. I can not answer for the committee. It is perfectly agreeable to me personally.

Mr. CARMACK. I will then ask for a vote on it very soon.

Mr. President, there is one other aspect of this question, one possible, I think I may say probable, outcome of our colonial adventure which presents a question of the utmost gravity to the American people. Until the first fury of exploitation shall have spent its force, until the process of dividing the spoils is finished and completed the syndicated adventurers in the Philippines will ask for no other and no better form of government than the sheer despotism provided in this bill. But when they once feel that their clutches have been firmly fastened upon the country, then they will begin to clamor, as they have already begun to clamor, for free access to this the greatest market in the world, and for that purpose to demand statehood in the American Union.

Already agitation has begun in the Philippines upon this very question. The native members of the Commission, with at least the tacit sanction and encouragement of the American members, have formulated a plan which embraces statehood in the American Union. With the full knowledge and consent of Governor Taft and of his American colleagues their native associates on the Commission are actively agitating this programme and calling upon their countrymen to rally around it. Governor Taft himself brought to this country and laid before Congress the memorial of the Federal party, headed by three of his associates on the Commission, asking for admission into the Union.

I can not believe and I do not believe that the American members of the Commission, either by act or word or silent assent, have been perpetrating a deliberate fraud upon the people, or that they have been attempting to mislead them with false and delusive hopes. It must be that the American members of the Commission are giving serious consideration to this programme outlined by three of their own members and adopted by the Federal party, representing the only friends we have in the Philippine Islands.

Sir, if two years ago the question had been proposed as to whether or not we should incorporate into the body of our citizenship a Malay population of eight or ten million people, and whether we should admit to statehood in the Union a Malay Archipelago 7,000 miles from our shore, there is not a man in the United States who would not have uttered his indignant protest against it.

Yet, sir, I put this very question in these very words to Governor Taft, and his reply was that at this time it was a question he was not ready to answer either yes or no. He had not made up his mind. He was in a state of doubt and uncertainty as to whether or not we should admit as a State a Malay archipelago, whether we should add 50 or 60 Malay members of Congress from the other side of the world and as many Malay votes in the electoral college. He had not made up his mind whether or not this should be done; and when we reflect that Governor Taft in this imperial business stands to the Administration in the relation of a viceroy to the king, when we remember the close and confidential relations between his Commission and the Administration or the party in power, it raises the very pertinent question as to how many more Republicans, how many more leaders of that party are giving serious consideration to the question, and how many are doubtful and undecided as to whether the Philippines should be admitted to statehood in this Union?

I have been amazed at the toleration, not to say the favor, with which this scheme has been received; and yet, sir, why should it be thought a thing impossible with the Republican party? When we remember its efforts to Africanize a large section of our own country; how it rejoiced when African negroes rioted in the government of some of the proudest and most historic Commonwealths in this country; how it hailed with acclamation the presence upon this floor of ignorant negroes; how it raged in its bitterness when they were displaced by the ablest and most cultured men of the South; how it sorrowed and cursed when States of this Union came again under the rule of a Caucasian people, of their own blood—when we remember this conduct and that it was inspired simply by a desire to strengthen their hold on the Government, why should we doubt, why should we hesitate to believe that the Republican party would seize upon any opportunity to admit the Malay archipelago to statehood in this Union and their inhabitants to full citizenship in the United States if they believed it would add fifty or sixty votes to their power in Congress and in the electoral-college?

Senators upon the other side of the Chamber may refuse to declare their policy with reference to the Philippine Islands, but they owe it to the American people at least to declare that this one thing they will not do.

I wish to have read as a part of my remarks an amendment which I have offered in order that Senators upon the other side of the Chamber may have an opportunity to vote their sentiments upon this question. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will listen to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following:

That the United States regard with extreme disfavor any movement having for its object the early or ultimate admission of the Philippine Islands as a State or States of the Union; and any action on the part of persons holding office under the authority of the United States that gives sanction or encouragement to such movement is hereby condemned.

That to confer the rights and privileges of citizens upon the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands would tend to destroy the integrity of the citizenship and to degrade the character of the Government of the United States.

That to maintain the relation of sovereign and subject between the Government of the United States and a people under its dominion would be repugnant to the principles of the Constitution.

Mr. CARMACK. I should be glad to know of the Senator from Massachusetts whether or not the amendment is agreeable to him?

Mr. LODGE. I should like to examine the amendment. It seems to contain a great number of propositions.

Mr. CARMACK. If there is any separate proposition there which the Senator approves or any separate proposition he disapproves I should be glad for him to indicate it.

Mr. LODGE. I will point it out in my own time and in my own way.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Will the Senator from Tennessee allow me?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I desire to ask the Senator which of these two things he really fears—that we are going to perpetuate a despotism or that we are going to admit these islands as a State into the Union? He has condemned both.

Mr. CARMACK. Let the Senator repeat his question and I will attempt to answer it.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I will say to the Senator that I have been very much confused in listening to these speeches. The Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] denounced us for beginning the war with the Moros. The Senator from Tennessee has denounced us for putting an end to it.

Mr. CARMACK. I hope the Senator will not ask me with respect to anything the Senator from Utah said. The Senator from Utah can answer for himself. I hope he will confine his question to matters pertaining to my own speech.

Mr. DOLLIVER. The Senator has condemned the efforts to fasten an unlimited despotism upon those islands, and now he appeals to our fears that we are going to introduce the archipelago as a State in this Union. I should like to have him state which it is that he fears.

Mr. CARMACK. I said very distinctly that until the work of dividing out the country among the spoilsmen had been completed, until the carpetbaggers had grabbed everything they wanted, they would want just the kind of government provided in this bill, and they will want to keep that government just as long as the process of spoliation and plunder and thievery is incomplete. When they feel that they have firmly fixed their clutches upon the country and have got everything in their own hands, then they will begin to clamor for free access to the American markets and for statehood in the American Union.

I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that one part of the amendment proposed by me is a declaration against statehood in the American Union for the Philippine Islands. I should like to know of the Senator from Massachusetts if he will vote for that proposition?

Mr. LODGE. I have said to the Senator that I would answer in my own time and in my own way, which I presume is my right.

Mr. CARMACK. Of course, Mr. President, I am not attempting to trespass upon the right of the Senator from Massachusetts, and I suppose I have a right to ask the Senator the question, which he has a right to decline to answer. I am not in the least degree trespassing upon his rights. It is a question which might have been answered "yes" or "no." If the Senator chooses to answer it in some other words, which do not mean either "yes" or "no," of course that is entirely satisfactory to me. [Laughter.]

With this, Mr. President, I have about completed all that I care to say at this stage of the discussion. So far as I am concerned, I have not been influenced in my course by party considerations. If I know my own heart, I would cheerfully forego every hope of party profit or advantage, as I know I would cheerfully surrender every political hope and aspiration of my own, if I could see this country called back from the bloody doctrines of bloody men and plant its feet once more in the shining path by which it has ascended, in peace and security, to glory and power. I long to see this Republic turn away from the bloody gospel of the strenuous life, whose words are interpreted in the roar and shock and carnage of battle, and find its hope and its inspiration in that high wisdom of which it is written: "Her ways are ways of pleasantness and all her paths are peace."

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that at 2 o'clock on Monday I shall address the Senate on the pending bill.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. KEAN. I trust the Senator will allow a brief executive session.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 28 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 28, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HON. JOHN HAY.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House concurrent resolution 39, which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a House concurrent resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the thanks of Congress be presented to Hon. John Hay for the appropriate memorial address delivered by him on the life and services of William McKinley, late President of the United States, in the Representatives' Hall, before both Houses of Congress and their invited guests, on the 27th day of February, 1902, and that he be requested to furnish a copy for publication.

Resolved, That the chairman of the joint committee appointed to make the necessary arrangements to carry into effect the resolutions of this Congress in relation to the memorial exercises in honor of William McKinley be requested to communicate to Mr. Hay the foregoing resolution, receive his answer thereto, and present the same to both Houses of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, when this resolution was presented some weeks ago I objected to its immediate consideration, and it was referred to the committee. I desire to ask the gentleman if that committee has considered the resolution?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. And if so, whether they have unanimously agreed to it?

Mr. GROSVENOR. In the first place, the resolution was considered by the committee, and a report in writing is presented with the resolution.

There was a suggestion from one member of the committee that he might desire to file a minority report. Upon the vote agreeing to the resolution there was no negative vote. I may say that the suggestion I have referred to was made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. Since that time he has informed me that he does not desire to make any minority report.

The resolution is in the usual form, and the report refers to the fact that this is the third time that Congress has passed a similar resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DE ARMOND. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Missouri.

GOVERNORS ISLAND, BOSTON HARBOR.

Mr. CONRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution No. 113, reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following House joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That permission be, and is hereby, granted to the city of Boston, in the State of Massachusetts, through its mayor, to improve and beautify Governors Island, situated in said city and belonging to the United States, in connection with mooring berths to be built adjoining said island, with the right to said city of Boston to make such excavations and fillings and erect and maintain such structures as the Secretary of War may from time to time approve: Provided, That this resolution shall not be construed to pass any title in said island, but the ownership of the said island shall remain entirely in the United States, and it shall be subject to such uses for military or other purposes as the Secretary of War may direct.

The following committee amendment was read:

Strike out all after the word "That," the first word in line 3 of the resolution, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to permit the city of Boston, in the State of Massachusetts, through its mayor, to improve and beautify Governors Island, or a portion thereof, situated in said city and belonging to the United States, in connection with mooring berths to be built adjoining said island, and to make such excavations and fillings and erect and maintain such structures as may be considered proper for the purpose; all upon plans to be previously approved by him: Provided, That the permission given pursuant to this resolution shall not pass any right or title in said island, but shall be revocable at will by the Secretary of War, and the ownership of said island shall remain entirely in the United States, and it shall be subject to such uses for military or other purposes as the Secretary of War may at any time direct."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

LIGHT-HOUSE KEEPER'S DWELLING, ECORSE RANGE-LIGHT STATION, DETROIT RIVER, MICHIGAN.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 1964.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1964) to provide for a light-house keeper's dwelling, Ecorse range-light station, Detroit River, in the State of Michigan.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to cause to be erected on the site now owned by the United States a building to be used as and for a light-house keeper's dwelling, Ecorse range-light station, in the Detroit River, in the State of Michigan, which shall cost not to exceed $5,000. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be made and approved, according to law, before work on said building shall be commenced, and a valid title vested in the United States, over which exclusive jurisdiction shall be ceded to said United States during ownership for all purposes except the administration of the criminal law and the service of civil process of said State of Michigan. Until this is done none of the money so appropriated shall be used except such part as may be required for the ordinary preliminary expenses for examination, investigation, and report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman if this bill has been considered by any committee.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Yes, sir; it is reported unanimously by the committee; it passed the Fifty-sixth Congress, and has been reported favorably and recommended for the past seven years.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. How much does the bill carry?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. It carries $5,000.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Is that the limit in the bill that can be expended under it?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Yes, sir; it is for a light-house keeper's dwelling. The nearest point at which the keeper can now live is a mile away, and he must row through the water; and in the spring and fall ice forms there when the channel is open. There is no question about the necessity of the house, and by reason of the condition of the ground there will be a large expense for the foundation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HENRY C. SMITH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JAMES G. FIELD.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following Senate bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 1321) to restore to the active list of the Navy the name of James G. Field.

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of United States be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint James G. Field, assistant surgeon, United States Navy, retired, to the active list of the Navy as a surgeon (with rank of lieutenant) not in line of promotion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RIXEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ESTABLISHING TERM OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT AT ROANOKE CITY, VA.

Mr. OTEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 12648.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12648) establishing a regular term of United States district court in Roanoke City.

Be it enacted, etc., That a regular term of the district court of the United States for the western district of Virginia shall be held in each year in the city of Roanoke, Va., on the second Monday in February.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OTEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TERMS OF SENATORS IN HAWAII.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 13076.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13076) to apportion the term of office of senators elected at the first general election in the Territory of Hawaii.

Be it enacted, etc., That the several senators elected in the First, Second, Third, and Fourth senatorial districts at the first general election held in the Territory of Hawaii shall, except as hereinafter provided, each hold office for the term of four years from the date of such election.

SEC. 2. That for the First senatorial district N. Russel and J. D. Paris shall each hold office as a senator for such district for the term of two years.

That for the Second senatorial district William White shall hold office as a senator for such district for the term of two years.

That for the Third senatorial district D. Kanuha, George R. Carter, and William Achi shall each hold office as a senator for such district for the term of two years.

That for the Fourth senatorial district I. H. Kahilina shall hold office as a senator for such district for the term of two years.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to object to the consideration of the bill; but I would like to ask the gentleman if it is usual for Congress to designate in cases like this the members who shall have one-year, two-year, three-year, and four-year terms?

Mr. POWERS of Maine. I will state to the gentleman from Tennessee what has induced this action. By the organic act it was provided that 15 senators should be elected, and that when the senate assembled they should agree upon 7 to hold for two years and the remaining 8 for four years.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That is what I supposed; and that is the reason I ask the gentleman why the change.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. They got together and failed to do this. The Secretary of the Interior called attention to it, and made this statement about it, which I will read from the report:

It is very important, especially in a new Territory like Hawaii, that a matter such as this should not remain in a state of uncertainty or confusion. Unless it is adjusted before that time it is likely to cause much confusion at the election in the approaching November, and may lead to serious difficulty in the organization of the next succeeding Territorial legislature.

Our attention was called to it by the Secretary, and he was asked to name those who should be senators for two years and those who should be for four. A short time ago, when President Dole was before the committee, on being asked what was the most important matter necessary to be considered for the best interests of Hawaii, he stated that one of the urgent things that should be attended to, if we would avoid confusion, for them to have legislation, to have an election in November, was for Congress to comply with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior and determine, as they had failed to do, who should hold office for two years and who for four years. I have here the report of his testimony.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. If I may interrupt the gentleman, I will state that the bill has received the consideration of the Committee on Territories, and I heartily concur in the statement of the gentleman. Certainly no objection ought to be made to the consideration.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. This matter has received the consideration of the entire committee and has the indorsement of the entire committee after having investigated it, as the gentleman from Indiana has stated.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The only trouble in my mind was I was quite sure the organic act had prescribed a method of choosing the senators and providing for their terms, and I could not understand why we should be called upon by an act of Congress to designate senators and fix their terms.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. Simply because the legislature failed to do it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. POWERS of Maine, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. J. WILLIAM STOKES, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of South Carolina.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his eminent abilities as a distinguished public servant, the House, at the conclusion of these memorial proceedings, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The question was taken, and the resolutions agreed to.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, to-day the ordinary functions of the greatest legislative body on earth are suspended in order that members of this House desiring the privilege may each add his sincere tribute to the memory of our departed friend. The right to add a single flower to the chaplet which garlands the brow of goodness and greatness is esteemed a high prerogative.

For the time all else is merged into the desire to do full duty to the dead, and, at the same time, leave to posterity a correct record of the life and character of the subject of our eulogy. The universality and sincerity of our sorrow buries all differences, harmonizes all discords, obliterates all partisan or sectional lines, and each of us is glad to add his testimony of the sterling worth of the great dead.

To me the sorrow is intensified by the deep, personal loss I feel. His wise counsel, personal and sympathetic interest in my welfare, and his almost paternal guidance made whatever success I have attained in life a possibility, and the reverence I feel for his memory can not find expression. To me he was the ideal Christian statesman and truth-loving gentleman, and I can pay him no higher eulogy than to recite the unvarnished story of his life—its struggles, its hopes, its triumphs, its virtues.

J. WILLIAM STOKES, the first son of James Stokes, was born near Orangeburg City, S. C., on December 12, 1853.

He came of an ancestry of planters, his immediate progenitor being a sussessful farmer and mill man. His intense love for farming as an occupation and his interest in the farmer as a class are the intensified and crystallized feelings of his ancestry, an exemplification of the predilections of generations of his family. To him the farm was the nursery of greatness and goodness, the farmer the ideal of independence, morality, and civic virtue, most nearly combining in correct proportion the elements entering into the compositions of active Christian citizenship. The philosophy of his public efforts was that the happiness and prosperity of the American farmer meant the contentment and well-being of the American people.

As a boy he was industrious and intelligent in his work, obedient to his parents—doing the odds and ends of farm work with that readiness and system afterwards so characteristic of the man.

In the country and village schools he showed a quick and investigating mind, given more to searching for reasons than to accepting conclusions it did not understand. Mathematics was his favorite study, though he loved the mysteries of logic and reasoned with great clearness and precision. This prejudice in favor of the more strenuous branches marked his entire course in college and university, and showed its full development in the winning of the Taylor scholarship in mathematics, a prize much coveted, both in point of honor and money value, at Washington and Lee University, which institution he entered at the age of 19, graduating therefrom with the honors of his class—a rare distinction.

By earnest application to work, faithfulness to friends and the precepts of right and truth, by his unassuming, though dignified deportment, the strength of intellect and character, he won the confidence and esteem alike of his fellow-students and the faculty. He was an enthusiastic college man, filled with the college spirit, and took an active part in its athletics, society, and class work, and in the work of the Young Men's Christian Association and Bible classes. In none of these did he take second place.

His diploma meant more to him than an evidence of his having completed certain prescribed studies; it meant his victory over almost insurmountable obstacles. The South lay stunned, her future uncertain, her labor demoralized, her governments unstable and unsatisfactory, the life and property of her citizens insecure, and investments apprehensive and development at a standstill. The social and political status of millions of former slaves had been changed; society was in chaos; opulence found itself reduced to poverty; money was scarcely to be had at all, and never except at the most exorbitant rates of interest.

No State suffered more of these horrors than South Carolina, and the devastations overtook all, and fell especially heavy upon the father of young STOKES, leaving him entirely unable to aid his son in getting a college training. No young man ever faced a darker future, nor did anyone ever meet it with more self-reliance and Christian fortitude. Possessed of that pluck that snaps its finger at difficulty, he managed to effect a loan, paying 12 per cent interest, and with this borrowed money completed his education, repaying it after his graduation. Thus early the indomitable courage of the man showed itself in the invincible spirit of the boy.

Leaving the university with most convincing testimonials of merit from president and professors, he easily secured the first position he sought—associate principal, afterwards president of a fine school in Tennessee. During this first work his trials were enough to overcome a less brave man. The president of the school died, leaving unpaid the salaries of all his assistants, Mr. STOKES included. Upon his accession to the principalship of the school, he assumed its obligations, giving his individual notes and meeting them as early as possible out of his next year's salary. Without a murmur he bore these struggles, a most beautiful consideration for the feelings of his loved ones causing him to keep the knowledge of their hardships from his home folk. But they were not without compensation both to him and his fellow-man.

Adversity is not without its blessings. It brings men in close encounter with the rough edges of the world, awakening in them a consciousness of their power, a confidence in their ability to cope with its complex and difficult problems, and emphasizes the most valuable of all lessons to the young man—the lesson of economy. Lord Bacon says:

Self-reliance and self-denial—

And they are both the legitimate offspring of poverty—

will teach a man to drink out of his own cistern, and eat his own sweet bread, and to learn and labor truly to get his own living, and carefully to expend the good things committed to his trust.

This philosophy was most completely embodied in the life of Congressman STOKES. Early and forced economy gave him a most distinct and sharp idea of value. To him economy in everything was a virtue, though he was by no means parsimonious, being, on the contrary, generous to a fault. To him life was a trust-estate, the conditions being that every moment of time should be given in an effort to better the condition of his fellow-man and to add some worthy deed to the sum total of human achievement. To frit the moments away in idleness and vain endeavor was to violate a sacred trust. Work was a duty, a sacred command.

While the number of persons who owe their education to his generosity, largely increased, no doubt, by his own early struggles, can not at this time be accurately determined, it is sufficient to say that all over his own and several other States many "rise up to call him blessed." In his charity he was liberal to the full extent of his ability, adopting a system which is now being followed by his devoted widow, by which he was able to discriminate between the worthy and unworthy applicants for his help.

He continued teaching in Tennessee and Mississippi for many years, in the meantime graduating in medicine at Vanderbilt University while teaching near Nashville, and though hampered by the duties of the schoolroom, taking a beautiful gold medal for a thesis on a given subject over a large number of competitors.

He seemed, however, to have little fancy for the medical profession, practicing it only a short time, the quiet work of the schoolroom being more in keeping with his character and the bent of his mind.

As a teacher he was eminently successful, many of the best equipped and thoroughly disciplined schools of Tennessee and Mississippi standing, even now, as monuments to his ability and systematic organization. His students loved him for his gentle firmness and patent sincerity. His kindly sympathy and his inherent knowledge of the subtle influences entering into and shaping every life touched a responsive chord in the breast of the student body, as a result of which teacher and student worked together in perfect harmony, disciplined by mutual love and sympathy.

Doubtless his experience in organizing, disciplining, and controlling children was of great value to him in the organization of men. The same tact and knowledge of human nature are essential in each instance, for men are but grown up children plus experience and age.

In 1881, while teaching in Tennessee, he married Miss Ella Landes, of Fayetteville, a most refined and highly educated lady, whose tact, thoughtfulness, and sympathy in his work contributed in no small measure to his ultimate success and universal popularity. In everything she was his helpful companion, resourceful, practical, and in thorough accord with the noble purposes of his life. Their mutual devotion was most beautiful and touching, and their married life of twenty years one beautiful dream of happiness, a moon-lit evening on the seashore.

He was preeminently of a religious turn of mind, and in early life connected himself with the Methodist Church, giving to it his most earnest support. He was a Methodist both by choice and heredity, his entire name being among the most influential members of that church in the State. There are not less than a half dozen consecrated men of his name serving the ministry in the Methodist conference of his State at this time. He was more than a mere passive church member; he was an active worker in the cause of the Master, a working Christian. He saw in the church the appointed way to the higher and better ideals taught by Holy Writ, and neither the glamour of political life nor its burdens caused him to neglect his Sunday school and church work. During all of his life he was one of the strong stakes in the Sunday school, and while in Washington regularly taught a large Bible class.

It was while thus equipped with a strong, Christian character, a classic education, a wide knowledge of human affairs, and a keen and cultivated insight into human nature that his father died, necessitating his return home to take charge of the estate.

This event, sad as it was to him, was the crisis point in his political career. The political storm which broke with the fury of a hurricane in 1890, arousing the most intense excitement, was gathering rapidly. At Bennettsville, Captain Tillman, now

Senator TILLMAN, thundered forth the demands of the farmer, and called upon him to assert his rights.

The Farmers' Alliance, which had taken deep root in many of the Western States, was beginning to find favor among the farmers of South Carolina, who were chafing under then existing conditions and dissatisfied with the management of State and national affairs. It was at this point that Dr. STOKES became a factor in the great movement that must ever remain one of the most interesting chapters in the history of South Carolina. He saw in the purposes of the Alliance great possibilities for the agricultural interest of the country, and it was but natural that his love for and belief in the rights of the people should find expression in a zealous advocacy of the party which he believed promised the most ultimate good to all the people, and, like most of the great Alliance leaders, gravitated inevitably into what was known as the reform movement.

His comprehensive mind took in the situation in all its aspects. The people were dissatisfied, restless, and demanding a change; but they were in a state of chaos, without organization and systematic leadership. These conditions had to be met, and he set himself at once to the work of organizing the farmers of his county into Alliances, having for their purpose social and industrial improvement. Into this work he entered with all his mind and soul, bringing to it his wide experience in dealing with men and his vast accumulation of economic knowledge.

His enthusiasm was not of the kind born of ulterior motives. He was fighting for principle. In this work he met with remarkable success and his great ability as an organizer found ready recognition throughout the State. About this time he bought The Cotton Plant, making it the official organ of the Alliance. As its editor he showed his full acquaintance with the great issues then agitating public thought and his intense love for the people. His style was clear, logical, and plain, his statements fair and honest, appealing always to the reason of his readers.

His promotion continued. He was elected State organizer of the Alliance, the most prominent place on the fighting line; and later became its president, holding the latter position for several terms. He was the great leader of the Alliance, a fearless and aggressive fighter, a cautious and conservative counselor, armed at all points with facts and authorities and the equal in point of equipment to any foeman or occasion. He applied the cold steel of argument to the position of his adversaries and met their assaults in kind. His prominence drew upon him the full fire of the opposition; but no amount of criticism, sarcasm, or ridicule could diminish his zeal for the cause, or induce him to modify to the extent of a "jot or tittle" the demands of his organization.

He stood steady through it all and directed his forces with a judgment almost unerring. He was calm, calculating, judgmatic—quick to seize a strategic point or profit by a tactical blunder, neither allowing his judgment to become befogged by enthusiasm nor permitting an infatuation with an idea to warp his reason or entrap his conscience. His ultimate and complete leadership in the organization was assured, and from this time on he became the loved oracle of the farmers' organization.

It is not in place at this time to discuss the merits of that controversy nor the fruits of that movement. It is sufficient for the generations who may wish to study his life to "point a lesson or adorn a tale" to know that he won the complete confidence and esteem of his followers by a fearless and faithful adherence to his conception of right and merited the respect and admiration of his opponents by the fairness and catholicity characterizing his attitude toward them.

It is a most distinct testimonial of the purity of his character that at this period of extreme bitterness no word was ever uttered in assault upon it, or the integrity of his purposes. His most bitter political enemy conceded his high moral character and patriotic sincerity. His partisanship was so tempered with conservatism and a proper regard for the opinions of others that when the smoke of that bitter conflict had cleared away there was no one unwilling to testify to his ability, fairness, and manly conduct.

He was elected to the State senate in 1890, after a thorough canvass of his county, defeating one of its most brilliant and honored sons. In the senate he was generally recognized as a strong, thoughtful, and conservative man, possessing well-defined convictions on public questions and in most thorough accord with the dominant thought of the State. His eminent services in the senate made him the logical candidate of the farmers for the Democratic nomination for Congress in 1892.

He was opposed by Hon. W. H. Brawley, at present a district judge, and was declared defeated by a small majority. In this campaign his great powers as a debater first showed themselves to advantage. His opponent was a past master in the art of disputation, eloquent, resourceful, and adroit, while he wa untried and untrained. But when the clash came, before great popular audiences, where the pulse beat is high and true, the great ability and tremendous earnestness of the farmers' champion supplied his lack of prior training, and he proved himself the full equal of his opponent in every respect.

Congressman Brawley having been appointed district judge by President Cleveland, resigned his seat.

Undaunted by defeat, confident of the correctness of his conclusions and of their ultimate triumph, loved as he was by his followers, he again became their standard bearer for the unexpired term, and was again defeated for the nomination by a decreased majority by Judge James F. Izlar, an able jurist, an impelling orator, and a most popular man with the masses.

These reverses did not diminish his optimism nor lessen his faith in the final success of the principles he advocated; and though thus defeated, his ability and sincerity had so impressed the leadership of the State that the State convention of 1892 elected him a delegate at large to the national Democratic convention, and the same year he was an elector on the Democratic ticket.

In 1894 he received the Democratic nomination for Congress without opposition, being opposed in the general election by T. B. Johnson, a white Republican, who, failing of a majority in the election, appealed his case to the House of Representatives, which, in the final determination of the issue, declared the seat vacant. In 1896 he was again awarded the certificate of election for both the unexpired term of the Fifty-fourth Congress and the full term of the Fifty-fifth, and again Mr. Johnson contested his seat, though the case abated upon the death of the contestee.

He was a member of the constitutional convention in 1895, and was one of the leaders of that body, contributing largely to the high character of its debates and serving with distinction on its most important committees. Feeling the immense responsibility of this position and the necessary permanency of the work. he spared neither mental nor physical effort to inform himself to the end that he might act wisely and for the best interest of the State.

He was elected to the Fifty-sixth Congress without opposition, though his nomination by his party was contested by Hon. Thomas F. Brantley. He received the unanimous nomination of his party in 1900—the most convincing testimonial of his good service and the confidence of his people—and in the general election had only a farcical opposition, which met little encouragement from the more respectable element of the Republican party in the district.

As a Congressman he gave his entire time to his duties. Regular in attendance upon the sessions of his committees and the House; attentive to the work of the Departments; prompt in answering the demands, however trivial, of his constituents, however humble; alert to the needs of his district, he was at the same time a close student of economic conditions, an original thinker, and an honest and elaborate investigator, in full sympathy with the conservative ideas of the age and intensely devoted to the cause of the people.

His intimate and accurate knowledge of the needs of his people convinced him that he could serve them in no more practical and material way than by giving better mail facilities to rural communities, and he resurrected the idea of rural free delivery. The system had been getting a desultory support from several preceding Congresses, but was languishing for lack of earnest and aggressive sympathizers. In a carefully prepared and exhaustive speech, he called attention to the needs of the farmer in this respect and pointed out the great and beneficent possibility of a perfected system of rural feee delivery.

The effect is known and appreciated by the 10,000,000 farmers daily served by the system. It is his greatest work, his most lasting triumph, his best legacy to the generations that must ever and ever receive its increasing and multiplied benefits. This, together with his authorship of the idea of free delivery on star routes, and his fight against gambling in cotton futures, gave him a reputation unbounded by district and State lines, and it even went beyond the seas.

He was intensely patriotic in his work, his vote at all times representing the concurrence of his reason and conscience. No command of partisanship could ever drive him into committing the national conscience to an ethical wrong.

He was greatly loved by the membership of the House for his purity of character and faithfulness to every obligation, and the spontaneous and sincere expressions of regret for his taking off were eloquent tributes to his worth.

He was neither a genius nor an orator in the ordinary acceptation of those terms. He was a powerful and effective debater, a strong controversialist, quick to detect a weak point in a line of defense, and as alert to marshal his forces against it, though he lacked the rich imagination, the nervous energy, the command of soul-stirring language, and the personal presence which give the orator the power to touch the hidden chords of the emotions and for the moment still the voice of reason.

His intellect was of the steady, substantial kind, without the meteoric brilliancy which enchains the emotions momentarily and then goes out in darkness. He was a most able man, both by natural endowment and judicious training, conservative in his opinion, safe in his judgment, and content to take a practical and human view of things. In his extraordinary capacity for work he was most undoubtedly a genius. His well-stored, well-poised mind was the effect of his zeal and perseverance in equipping, cultivating, enriching, and expanding it. He made the very best use of his natural endowments, and this constituted whatever genius he possessed; and it is this kind of genius that is in the reach of everyone who will pay its price—conscientious, honest labor.

He was a good man, an accommodating neighbor, a devoted son, a tender husband, a thoughtful friend and Christian citizen, and an able statesman, whose influence upon every community in which he lived was most salutary. To touch the circle of his influence was to have the soul raised heavenward. He bound his friends to him with hooks of steel, and their loyalty to him alive and to his memory dead is the highest tribute to his unselfish and generous character. The Golden Rule was his rule of conduct toward his fellow-man.

To the young man struggling against the tide, baffled, discouraged, and despairing, his life is a hope, an inspiration, and an exemplification of the maxim: "The gods sell everything for labor." Preferments came to him as victories; fortune never smiled upon him. Each higher position in the public esteem was but a natural evolution, a just recognition of his faithfulness and ability in the discharge of less responsible duties. He literally won success.

'Tis not in mortals to command success,
But we'll do more, Sempronius, we'll deserve it.

His death was pathetically sad, coming at a time when he had reached the prime development of mental and moral manhood, the full embodiment of civic virtue and Christian character. The difficulties of young manhood had ceased to be an unpleasant memory in the grand triumphs and honors of full maturity; partisan and factional bitterness had yielded to the nobler feeling of reconciliation, and he had found solid lodgment in the affections of all his people, being stronger in their love at the time of his death than at any time during his career.

The full stature of the man was beginning to break upon the people of his State, and the fondest dream of his ambition—the honor of representing his great State in the Senate of the United States—in all probability would have found an early realization in the expressed will of his people. But how uncertain are human calculations.

For several years prior to his death his health had been failing, and for months immediately preceding it he was confined to his room, where tender and intelligent care did all in its power for him. He continued to sink despite the efforts of the best physicians in the State. The worry, confinement, and constant mental and physical strain incident to public life had mad irreparable inroads upon his constitution and it was too weak to withstand the assaults of disease.

He had literally worn himself out in the service of his people, and on July 6, 1901, at 5 o'clock in the morning, the hour when darkness salutes the dawn and bids her welcome to her place, death came. With a calmness and serenity born of Christian fortitude and hope and faith he faced the ordeal of his dissolution, and even in this dread hour the old familiar smile, so dear to those who knew him, rested on his face, giving an assurance that the bright star of earthly existence had only sunk into the more brilliant dawn of a new and better life.

It is a sweet thought—the thought of immortality—the belief that death is only the beginning of a brighter and more joyous life, the faith in the promise that those who keep his commandments shall meet again in the "house of many mansions." Such a kind philosophy dispels the gloom of the grave and brings a solace and an assurance to the broken-hearted and disconsolate.

A great statesmen has gone; and his greatest monument will be the heritage he has left posterity in the example of a faithful, Christian life.

As said he, in eulogizing the late Senator Earle, so can I with equal appropriateness say of him: "If I were to attempt to sum up in one term the quality which lay at the foundation of his character, I could find no fitter term than the single word 'faithful'—faithful to social obligations, to political obligations, to public obligations, to private obligations, to family obligations, and, back of all, faithful to his obligations to his God."

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, friendships made during a service in this House are often very close, and the ties here contracted last for years, but the dearest friendships are those made in college; there we come to know intimately all the good and all the bad about our fellows, and when once we learn to love and honor a college mate no time nor distance can efface the impressions then formed. I knew Mr. STOKES at Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Va., and was closely associated with him while there. We roomed in the same house, were coeditors of the college magazine, and were thrown constantly together. I learned to admire, honor, and love him in those days. He was gentle, yet firm. His was a character which commanded the respect of all with whom he came in contact. He had the undivided confidence of faculty and students, and was one of the most popular students in college.

He took a high stand as a student, and left college with the high regard of all. While I, at times, heard of him and from him, I did not see him again until I met him in the extra session of the Fifty-fifth Congress. It was a delight to find him the same in character and in standing here as he had been at college—conscientious, hard working—representing with fidelity his constituents, having the confidence of his associates on this floor, and playing his part here with distinguished merit, he had the profound regard of all the members of this House. His death was most untimely. In the flower of his age, at the height of his usefulness, in the fullness of experience he was taken from that sphere of action in which he was displaying the sound common sense, the graceful tact which were his characteristics. We can but deplore his taking off and mingle our tears with those of his people who honored him and whom he honored.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, the proud State of South Carolina has furnished to the country many distinguished men and made a great deal of history. Among those whom she sent to public life perhaps no one deserves to stand higher as a modest gentleman and faithful representative than our departed friend, to whose memory we pay tribute to-day.

It is common in eulogies to exaggerate; indeed, it is common to deny to people while living credit for the good qualities which they possess, and common after they have departed from life to attribute to them good qualities which they did not possess. Thus we often do injustice to the living and do more than justice to the memory of the dead, withhold the kindly word and generous commendation when they might be of value, and spout fulsome praise when praise is useless.

What has been said to-day, touching and appropriately, by the young member from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] who succeeded our departed friend has also been said truthfully, and therefore it is really a fitting tribute, full and just, to the good man who has gone hence. Dr. STOKES possessed in a marked degree the amiable and excellent qualities of manhood. He was modest and firm; he was true and faithful. It has been said of him very justly that in this House he had not a foe and that every man who knew him was his friend. He gave offense to no one, he did wrong to no one, he spoke harshly of no one, he felt ill toward no one. He was singularly free from malevolence and envy and jealousy and all disposition to harm any of God's creation. He possessed in a notable degree, upon the contrary, the inclination to help, to treat kindly, to advance, to build up.

I did not know Dr. STOKES until he came to this body as a member of it. I saw all sides of him and learned to know a good deal of his character during the time when the contest over his seat was pending in this House. No one who has not had the experience of a contest can fully understand or properly appreciate what care and anxiety and vexation it may bring. The mere observer can only judge of it partially and imperfectly. When the contest is on, when bitterness frequently is aroused, when often unfair things are attempted and unkind things are frequently said, it is not remarkable to find one engaged in such a contest giving the rein to his malevolent feelings, if he have any, and suppressing his kindly and more generous sentiments. As a member of the committee which considered and reported upon the election contest of Johnston against Stokes I was most favorably impressed, as I think every member of the committee was, by the honorable bearing of Dr. STOKES.

Not a solitary thing, in private conversation or publicly, in committee or in the House, ever escaped his lips calculated to show the least feeling against the contestant or the least desire for anything but a fair consideration of his case. He was calm, good-humored and fair, generous and kindly, through it all. He had no doubt about the fact of his election, and he had a confidence that fair play would be done him in the House. When the decision was finally reached, which denied to the contestant the seat and, removing the contestee from it, vacated the seat, he left for his South Carolina home without exhibiting any evidence of the least bitterness or disappointment, and, I am sure, without an unkind feeling toward anybody in the House, anybody in his own State, or anybody in the wide world.

Dr. STOKES was a singularly modest and diffident man, wonderfully considerate of the feelings and the rights of all others; one who would rather suffer the deprivation of some of his own rights and privileges than, by any chance or any accident, trench upon those of others. He passed in and out of the House pursuing his duties quietly, unostentatiously, and faithfully.

South Carolina may have had—doubtless has had—more brilliant Representatives, but she never had a more faithful one or one better disposed to the performance of every duty. She has sent to this body and into public life many men of high qualities and chivalrous bearing, but never, I think, did she have in public life a man more faithful to her interests, more blameless throughout his whole public and private life, than the man to whose memory we pay tribute to-day.

A good man has gone; a faithful servant has been removed from a service valuable to his constituents. He has left a good record at home, a good record here, and I verily believe that every man, woman, and child who knew him remembers him kindly. I am sure that not one with whom he came in contact has a bitter, revengeful, or unkind feeling toward him. He earned a good name and left it a legacy.

Passing through life thus kind and gentle, doing good upon every occasion and according to the full measure of every opportunity, doing harm to none and wishing harm to none, and finally, full of honor, crowned with the glory of a well-spent and useful life, passing, when the sun was at meridian, to the great life beyond, few have left and few can leave, according to their opportunities in the spheres in which they move, a better record—one which can be looked upon with more pride and more pleasure by friend and fellow-citizen, by relatives and by those unrelated—than that of the gentleman who lately represented a district of the old Palmetto State that gave him birth, honored him, and was served by him and finally laid his mortal remains away in historic soil, enriched by the ashes of the immortal dead.

I am glad on this occasion to pay my tribute to the worth of the modest gentleman, faithful Representative, kind friend of gentle ways and blameless life, our friend J. WILLIAM STOKES.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I should not feel as though I was properly discharging my duty if I allowed this opportunity to pass without adding my tribute to the life and memory of the Hon. J. W. STOKES.

It was my pleasure and good fortune to meet him at the opening of the Fifty-fourth Congress, and I had every opportunity to familiarize myself with every phase of his nature.

His right to his seat was contested, and the case came before a committee of which I was a member. This relationship brought me in close contact with him. The hearing was of great interest to him. He was not only personally interested, but he felt a deep interest in the result as affecting the State which he in part so honorably and ably represented.

To his credit it can be said that he simply relied upon the law and the fact to entitle him to succeed, and he scorned any attempt to have influence exerted in his behalf, at the same time fully appreciating the earnestness and kindness of his many friends.

In the discharge of my duty I was compelled to ask him a great many questions, to more fully develop his case. His answers were always prompt, candid, and full, without regard as to how they affected him. While opposed to me in politics, I appreciated the care with which he investigated all public questions, and he tried to and did represent his people, his State, and his country, in a strong, able, and dignified manner.

He was rapidly developing as a close student and an able and just legislator. His utterances were always manly, pure, and elevating, showing the nobleness of genuine Christian character.

I was greatly pained and surprised to learn of his sudden and untimely death.

In mid life, a man of splendid habits, I thought he had a great future before him, and did not realize that grim-visaged death was hovering so near to summon him to eternal life.

Mr. STOKES came from a section of the country that needed just such characters in public life as he was. His broad, manly way in treating public questions, and greeting those he came in contact with so cordially and so pleasant, naturally made him loved and respected by all who knew him, and did much for the State which he in part represented.

Knowing him as I did, I know that he lived a good life.

Appreciating his manliness, I know that the country met with a great loss in his death. His manner was so quiet, personally unobtrusive, thoughtful and reflective in his nature, that he endeared himself to all who had associations with him, and it is perfectly proper that we pause in the discharge of public business to fitly honor his memory by paying the last tribute of respect to the honored and lamented dead.

Verily, a good and patriotic man has fallen!

> His life was gentle, and the elements
> So mix'd in him, that Nature might stand up
> And say to all the world, "This is a man!"

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, philosophy has been defined to be "the contemplation of death." Whether this be true or not it is certain that all of man's philosophizing about other things sinks into insignificance in the contemplation of the dread incomprehensibility.

To what an exact equality of nothingness, when viewed from an earthly standpoint, does it bring us all—rich and poor, wise and foolish, great and obscure, studious and idle, virtuous and vicious, king and lackey, emperor and bootblack! At the end the ants have swarmed and fought, worked hard to store up for a winter's day, begotten their kind, died, and given way to other ants.

The flies on the spokes of the wheel of the universe have gone round with the wheel, fondly imagining that they had something to do with its evolutions, have some day unexpectedly dropped off, and other flies have settled there. If it were all of life to live and all of death to die, if the race only were immoral and the individual sank, body and mind, into the hideous rottenness of death, who could find a rational cause to prefer one course of life to another, except only to prefer pleasure to pain, ease to labor, soft places to hardships?

"Eat, drink, and be merry, for to-morrow you die," would be the only philosophy taught by "the contemplation of death," except, perhaps, this: When life becomes misery, seek the "quietus" of "a bare bodkin," congratulating beforehand the lesser worms upon the feast you are preparing for them.

The very fact that mankind does not act and has never acted on that theory is proof that they do not believe, have never believed, and will never believe that the body is the man, the tenement the tenant, or the destruction of the tenement the annihilation of the tenant—in a word, that body-death stops soul-growth. "There's a divinity that shapes our ends, roughhew them how we will."

There can, of course, be no physical proof of a spiritual fact, and yet the spiritual instinct of mankind has led them "at all times and in all places" to the great central truth on which depends even earthly progress, development, virtue, civilization—the only possible "working hypothesis" of life, viz, that the real man, the breath of the Infinite within the tenement of clay, can not die. Revelation only confirmed it, making a live faith of that which was a philosophic as well as an instinctive belief. It is this faith which keeps hope in the human breast, and with hope, the work-motive.

No man in Congress known to me ever lived a life or possessed a character more entirely molded in the mold of that faith than WILLIAM STOKES, of South Carolina. I served with him in the Fifty-fourth and Fifty-fifth and Fifty-sixth Congresses. We were not only fellow-members, but fellow-committeemen. It is upon committees that Representatives learn best to know one another. No duty was so small as to miss his attention; none so difficult as to make him shirk it. Sweet tempered and patient in public life, he was affectionate, loving, and temperate in private life, deserving, and to an unusual degree possessing, the love of his family and his friends.

He made no boast of it and never any ostentatious show of it, and yet he was, as a matter of fact, one of the best educated and most broadly informed men in the House. He was, more than that, deeply cultured in the highest sense. His mind had dwelt much upon the humanitarianism of the Here and the eternal verities of the Hereafter. The broad world-love of Jesus of Nazareth had sunk deep into his heart and found there an abiding place and a home. Mind culture had broadened and deepened into soul culture. I will not say "May his soul rest in peace," because he himself did not believe that rest was the summum bonum of man's existence or the goal of his destiny.

I would rather say: May his soul continue to grow in power throughout all the ages of the "other time."

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, when, during the last session of Congress, we learned that Dr. STOKES had left his post of duty to go home on account of the state of his health, it never occurred to me for a moment that he was in any real danger. And I had this feeling because he was so self-contained, so thoughtful, so resourceful, so wise in the solution of every problem that confronted him, and so prompt and efficient in the doing of that which his judgment dictated, that it did not occur to me that he would fail to overcome this danger as he had all difficulties that had confronted him. During my term of service here with Dr. STOKES, extending over several terms, I had learned by the closest and most familiar contact that he possessed all these admirable qualities—qualities that might well justify him in feeling that for him there was no such word as fail.

I did not know Dr. STOKES until it was my good fortune to meet him here as an associate in this body. There were two prominent circumstances that tended to bring us together from the outset. One was that he then represented in great part that splendid constituency of the Seventh district which had supported me so bravely in many a hard-fought battle. We had both been greatly honored by the same people, we had both learned in the hard field of experience how to value their steadfastness, their integrity, and, more than all, their quiet but firm determination to maintain at every sacrifice the predominance of decent government.

Nothing was more natural than that we should be drawn together by such ties, and I know that our friendship derived strength from the character of the people through whom we were bound together. This was one of the circumstances that first made us friends, and a most pleasant one it was. The other was of a different character, one that might well be called the horror of Congressional life. We were both involved in the disaster of having to maintain and defend in this forum our right to the seats to which our constituents had elected us. I would not refer to such a matter on this solemn occasion were it not that our common misfortune, which entailed upon us an endless amount of work and worry, made conspicuous the admirable traits of Dr. STOKES's character and first made me value him at his true worth and have absolute reliance upon him.

From this time on until the end we were firm friends, and our intercourse was of the most delightful character. And the more I knew of him the more I liked and admired him. For he was one of those men who, from their quiet and unpretentious demeanor, must be well known to be appreciated. He was absolutely without guile or pretense; he was as true as steel; he was faithful to every trust; he was diligent; he was sound in judgment and prompt in execution; he was untiring in work; he was courteous to everyone, but firm as a rock in the performance of what he believed to be his duty. He never faltered, but kept on in the even tenor of his way until the thing he had to do was done.

As I have already said, I learned never to associate failure with our dead colleague. This was because he was a thorough believer in hard, systematic work and had a wholesale contempt for mere show and promise of performance. To this was due the strong hold he had on his people, a hold that grew stronger with each year of his service, until at the time of his untimely taking off he had practically the unanimous support of his district. And he deserved all this, Mr. Speaker, because we who were familiar with his daily life here well know that there never was a more faithful Representative than he, and that his constant thought was what more he could do for the people who had honored him.

As in his Congressional career, so it was in his previous life—all that Dr. STOKES accomplished was by hard, untiring work. Born in Orangeburg County, S. C., in 1853, he was brought up to farm life, meanwhile attending the county schools until his entrance into Washington and Lee University, from which he graduated in 1876 with high honors. In order to pay off the debt contracted in procuring an education, he taught school a number of years in Tennessee and Mississippi, and while so engaged in Tennessee utilized his spare time in studying medicine at Vanderbilt University.

Notwithstanding this drawback, Dr. STOKES graduated at the head of his class, and bore off from many competitors the prize for the best essay. In 1889 he returned to South Carolina and to farm life, and was prominent in organizing the Farmers' Alliance of the State, of which he was president for two terms. He became State senator in 1890; was one of the delegates at large to the Democratic convention at Chicago in 1892; a Presidential elector on the Democratic ticket in the same year, and a member of the constitutional convention of 1895. He was still further honored by his people by being elected to the Fifty-fourth, Fifty-fifth, Fifty-sixth, and Fifty-seventh Congresses. Those of us who did not know him until we served with him here could easily understand that his previous successful career, his promotion from one high trust to another, were due to his untiring, unostentatious and faithful work.

To quote from one who knew him well:

> There is another side of Dr. STOKES's life that is not generally known, which accounts for the strong hold he had on the affections of the people. Having no children of his own to care for and educate, it was his delight to assist others. There is many a young man to-day pursuing his college course who will miss the assistance of Dr. STOKES. There are many young men at home and abroad who owe their education to the kind-heartedness of Dr. STOKES. Of this the public knew little, only those interested in each particular case knowing the facts.

While in Tennessee Dr. STOKES married Miss Ella S. Landers, of Fayetteville, Tenn., a woman universally beloved for her charming personality and most admirable character. Their married life was an unbroken chain of complete happiness riveted together by mutual love and esteem. From what I know of his true and faithful heart, I do not doubt that the presence and tender ministrations of his devoted wife in his last hours robbed death of its sting.

I can not obtrude upon what we all know to be a life sorrow.

Mr. Speaker, I esteemed it a mournful privilege to be able to attest by my presence at the last solemn rites my admiration of his character and my affection for him as a friend. The vast throng there assembled, the evidence of sorrow depicted on every countenance, the solemn and impressive services of the church of which he had been for many years a devoted and consistent member, all testified to the esteem in which our dead colleague was held at his home. And when we had given his body to its last resting place we knew that we had consigned to the keeping of the soil he loved so well all that was mortal of an earnest Christian, a devoted husband, a loving son and brother, a true and faithful friend, and an upright, honorable, and zealous public servant.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, it was my pleasure to serve on the Committee on Agriculture with Mr. J. WILLIAM STOKES during the entire period of his membership in the House of Representatives. His appointment to the committee was a timely, fit selection. Mr. STOKES was brought up on a farm, and his knowledge of agricultural conditions, especially in the Southern States, qualified him perfectly for service on the committee which has all to do with the Federal connection with agricultural affairs. He had a farm boy's love for country and a farmer's perception of the needs of the calling. He was a close student of the agricultural conditions of the country, not confining himself to the section in which he resided, but showing equal interest in the North and West.

No member of the committee was more attentive and earnest in his duties. He was a constant and regular attendant at all of the sessions and showed a keen, intelligent interest in every subject brought up for discussion. As to his personality, Mr. STOKES was a gentle, lovable gentleman, who made for himself a very warm place in the hearts of all those who came in daily contact with him. Those of us who were fortunate enough to have close association with him in the preliminary work performed in the committee were, perhaps, better qualified to judge of the character of Mr. STOKES than others who simply saw him on the floor of the House. He was not a man who was self-assertive, but was of such disposition that he seemed to try at all times to smooth the pathway of others rather than to put himself forward. Industrious and painstaking in all that he did, his gentleness of character endeared him to all.

The death of such a man in the prime of his life may not cause great comment in the nation generally. It is likely that the history of his State will be written with but a brief allusion to the services for his constituents and his country, but the departure from this world of such a character leaves a pang in the hearts of those who knew him intimately which is not felt when a man of more prominence and fewer lovable traits is called away. I think I am voicing the sentiments of my colleagues on the Committee of Agriculture when I say that this man has been greatly missed by all of committee associates. There are moments when legislative duties are forgotten. And when we think of those who have joined with us in the past in our deliberations, it is then that we glance toward the seat which he occupied and feel with keen regret that a kindly, loving friend has been taken from us and that we never again shall have the counsel and advice of him who has been summoned back to his Maker.

Mr. SCARBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, it is eminently proper that we pause amid the busy activities of life and drop a tear of regret on the grave of a dead comrade. "One touch of nature makes the world akin," and I apprehend that no one is so callous as to feel no pang when a fellow-man yields up his life to the grim destroyer. The universality of death does not lessen its terrors. It is one great fact in every life which comes without our volition, and despite our most earnest protest and care. "The living know that they shall die" is the voice of revelation which sings in mournful cadence in every ear.

Death makes no invidious distinctions. The smiling infant, the sturdy youth, sweet-faced maiden, and aged, care-worn man are alike its victims. It visits alike the disease-stricken beggar on his pallet of straw and the wealthy prince upon his bed of down. Rich and poor, humble and great, young and old, all must die. "The rag of wretchedness and the purple robe of power find a common level in the democracy of death." The child just budding into conscious existence turns from its play and seeks safety in its mother's lap when it hears this awful subject discussed or when it looks on the face of a dead playmate. Young men and maidens become pensive and quiet when death steals into a community and touches a friend or companion.

The man of business starts when he learns that an acquaintance has been torn from family and friends and carried to that bourne from whence no traveler returns. The certainty of this dread visitation is the bitter in every cup of happiness, the skeleton at every feast. And the unuttered question of every palpitating heart as it looks upon the face of the dead is, "Who next?"

Nearly one year ago Dr. J. WILLIAM STOKES, an honored member of this body, was called to meet this king of terrors. He met him like a warrior faces his foe—grandly, bravely—but a new-made grave in Sunnyside Cemetery, in his much-loved Carolina, is a sad memorial of the unequal contest.

As a member of the South Carolina delegation I desire to join my colleagues in paying tribute to one whom the people of my State knew, trusted, and honored, and who died holding a commission from them under which he sat in the Council Chamber of the nation.

Dr. STOKES needs no eulogy from me. He established his reputation at home by devotion to duty as he saw it, and achieved an enviable distinction here by close attention to affairs of state. No work belonging to the duties of his office was too insignificant to receive his attention, none so great as to deter him from attempting its discharge.

I had not the honor of an intimate personal acquaintance with Dr. STOKES, and hence I shall speak of him as a public character and from what I have learned of him as one of the leading men of our State.

He was identified with the people—the great body of the people—drew his inspiration from them, was their champion at home as well as in this Hall, and while serving them in the capacity of a Representative in Congress he was true to the trust committed to his hands. He passed unscathed through the troublous times of political revolution in our State and presented to the public a character so pure that no critic could find a blemish upon his escutcheon, a purpose so noble that no opponent could successfully gainsay it, a devotion to his party and friends so loyal that he will live in the history of the State as one who merited all the honors which he received.

Others, however, who knew him well, have spoken of his virtues and pointed out the traits of character which made him great; for, indeed, any man is great who, like him, lives in the hearts of his countrymen.

A few days ago I was shown a letter of condolence written by a friend to the wife of the dead statesman. One passage is so pregnant of meaning, and so fully describes the perfection of his manhood, that I will read it. The writer said:

In a State which has produced so many good men, I know of none who had higher ideals of life and duty, or who was more thoroughly conscientious in the performance of his duties as a citizen, his obligations as a Christian, his pledges as a gentleman, his offices as a friend, and his life as a man.

But there is one feature of his make-up particularly worthy of note, and that is his lofty Christian character. It is too often the case that political honors and worldly prosperity wean men away from the Christian life and make them forget that religion should be their chief concern. Not so with Dr. STOKES. Neither the heat of political controversy nor the applause of the multitude could disturb his trust in God or separate him from the deep and rich experiences of a consecrated life. The allurements of fortune, the seductive influences of high political position, were insufficient to turn him from the King's highway. He overcame self, walked through life with the tread of a conqueror, and kept his face turned to the heavenly hills as truly as the needle points to the pole. A life like his is an inspiration and his triumphal death a benediction.

Near the banks of historic Edisto, the scene of strife and carnage in Revolutionary days, sleeps this truly noble man. Neither the criticisms of enemies nor the plaudits of friends reach his ears. Like a tired child he lies in the bosom of mother earth, and after life's fitful fever is over he sleeps well.

Not far from his resting place, in the beautiful home he builded, there sits a sad-faced woman whom he called wife. Almost a year has passed since death robbed her of her loving husband and protector. The frosts of winter nipped the flowers planted on the grave of her gallant knight, who loved her with all the ardor of his nature. Returning spring has recalled these love offerings into life, and still she keeps her holy vigil and longs for—

The touch of a vanished hand,
The sound of a voice that's still.

Her inconsolable grief is the most eloquent tribute to his worth, and her bitter tears the most touching memorial of his life. The State mourns him, and friends and neighbors claim the right to share in the grief of the heartbroken wife.

He lies within the light of God,
Not a shadow on his breast;
Where the wicked cease from troubling,
And the weary are at rest.

Young in years, full of purpose and energy, it seems almost cruel that he should have been called from his half-finished task. The summons came at midday, but it found him ready. He had secured his passport, and without a murmur he stepped into what we call the gloom and the shadow of the tomb. But no wonder that he quailed not when he stood at the grim portals of death. Years before, when life was full of hope and promise, he had found the Holy Grail. He had been in the Valley of Silence of which Father Ryan sang.

He toiled on heart-tired of the human,
And moaned amid the mazes of men,
Till he knelt long ago at an altar
And heard a voice call him. Since then
He walked down the Valley of Silence
That lies far beyond mortal ken.

Faithfulness to every trust was the ruling principle of his life. Knightly as the ideal gentleman of old to the woman he called by the sacred name of wife; loyal to his party and friends; true to himself, his country, and his God, he fell asleep so gently that no trace of suffering rested on his manly brow, and "he died with a smile on his face as though an angel had kissed him."

After all, the best of him remains—the record of a good name and his lofty Christian integrity. He had fed his soul on the bread of life and quenched his thirst in the living waters. No doubts or fears disturbed his regal spirit or shook his mighty faith. His stalwart mind caviled not at the so-called conflicts of religion and science. To him one was the complement of the other. He read on the pages of each the history of his race from creation's dawn to life's fitful close. Grand philosophy, beautiful faith! Each of these twin sisters follow us through all the labyrinthine way. Science stops pensive and sad at the tomb, drops a tear of regret on the sleeping dust of humanity, and writes an interrogation point for its epitaph. Religion takes up afresh the story of life and destiny and points to home and rest beyond the stars, that move in stately courses across the Empyrean blue.

Full of such knowledge and inspired by such faith, the lamented statesman went out with the tide, well knowing that he would Meet his Pilot face to face

When he had crossed the bar.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker, we are called upon again to contemplate the saddest, the strangest, and most inscrutable event in all of this riddle of human life—death. It would seem that so many myriads of the living have ceased to move among us that the few survivors would become accustomed to the inevitable, and look upon this cessation of life as the natural, normal, and therefore the most uninteresting, of all the incidents of our existence; but it is not so, and we can not be made familiar with this dread destroyer. Death, on the contrary, is always new, and always startling, and always awful.

Into every grave we gaze with new astonishment and over the lifeless form of every friend we stand in silence and amazement. We ask the same old question to ourselves which Job propounded in the morning of history. "If a man die shall he live again?" And no sufficient answer has ever yet been given to this greatest of all questions. To this question our experience and observation answer, "No." Science and philosophy say "they do not know;" but faith and religion, supported by the universal sentiment of mankind, answer, "Yes." But whatever the answer may be, death still remains, sad and inscrutable. It is sad when gray hairs and tottering limbs warn us of its approach; it is sad when physical suffering and mental decay make us welcome its embrace.

But it is sadder still, and saddest of all, when we see a young man suddenly snatched away in the prime and vigor of his young manhood, leaving behind him a young and devoted wife, and leaving unfinished so much of good that he might have accomplished, and so much which, it seems to us, he ought to have been permitted to accomplish. But at the grave our experience and observation count for but little. We bury there our science and our philosophy, and we turn away, seeing more clearly through the tears and sadness of the hour the truth of that universal verdict of mankind, that if a man die, he shall live again For do not that same science and philosophy teach us that—

If a star were plucked from on high,
For ages would its light,
Streaming on down through the sky,
Beam on our mortal sight.
So when a good man dies,
For ages beyond our ken,
The light he leaves behind him shines
Upon the paths of men.

Then it is not true that either the good or the evil which men do is oft interred in their graves. In the higher and better sense the man does not die, and we have not buried our friend, the Hon. J. WILLIAM STOKES. His body perished and was buried, but the man lives on. His life work is left, and his monument has been erected, not of stone or marble, it may be, but in the memory of those who knew him, in the influence for good he wielded, and in that molded, rounded, useful life which passes not away.

I held it truth, with him who sings
To one clear harp of divers tones,
That men may rise on stepping-stones,
Of their dead selves to higher things.

The splendors of the Taj-Mehal did not increase the virtues nor lessen the vices of the beautiful Indian queen to whose memory it was erected. Carvings in stone and sculptures in marble can not alter what has been written in the Book of Life. Our marbled pantheon in yonder hall adds not one jot or tittle to the smallness or to the greatness of those whose exterior images have been wrought in stone. Indeed, we are all sculptors of life, and the universe is one universal pantheon, with a niche for each of us, high or low, as we may choose; and we are all chiseling away, making our own monuments with form and feature and lineaments of our own fashioning.

It is therefore a pleasure, even in the midst of our sorrow, to point you to the exalted niche which Dr. STOKES has carved, and to look at the splendid lineaments wrought by him in a life of honor and usefulness. He was as true to his convictions as was that Roman sentinel whom the lava of Vesuvius could not drive from his post. He was honest and charitable as a man. He was tried and remained popular as a citizen. He was faithful and efficient as a public servant, and, more than all, he was kind, tender, and affectionate as a husband, as a friend, and neighbor.

The poet was mistaken who said:

The boast of heraldry, the pomp of pow'r,
And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave,
Await alike the inevitable hour.
The paths of glory lead but to the grave.

They do not lead but to the grave. They do not lead to the grave at all, nor even toward the grave. Nothing valuable that wealth or beauty e'er gave have been buried. Only gross material things are buried. But as to the fine impulses of the heart, the achievements of a life, the splendid accomplishments of the intellect—there is no death.

There is no death! The stars go down,
To rise on some fairer shore,
And bright in heaven's jeweled crown,
They shine forever more.

There is no death! The dust we tread
Shall change beneath summer showers
To golden grain or mellowed fruit
Or rainbow-tinted flowers.

There is no death! The leaves may fall,
And flowers may fade and pass away;
They only wait through wintry hours
The coming of the May.

There is no death! An angel form
Walks o'er the earth with silent tread;
He bears our best loved things away
And then we call them "dead."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the daily routine of our legislative work is suspended once again, that we may pay a brief tribute of respect to the memory of the dead.

The young may die, the old must die, and the wisest of us know not how soon. This time the member we eulogize was not only my warm political ally, but I was proud to name him in the list of the very first of my personal friends. I had had the pleasure of an acquaintance with him more or less intimate for a longer period perhaps than any member of this House, except some gentlemen of his own State delegation. I met him first in my own Congressional district in Tennessee nearly twenty years ago. It was while I was a very young member of Congress and when I was struggling to make friends and followers in my aspirations to continue a member of this House. It was under these circumstances we first met and he became my warm supporter and advocate.

You have already been told that Dr. STOKES was born on a country farm, in Orangeburg, within the State of South Carolina, in the year 1853; that there he grew to manhood, enjoying the opportunities of the average country school such as was found in his day and time in his State and throughout his section of the Union; that he graduated from Washington and Lee University in 1876, and that he then entered upon a course of teaching, which he followed until about 1888, or a period of twelve or more years.

He was elected to the State senate of South Carolina in 1890. In 1892 he was sent as a delegate to the national Democratic convention, which assembled that year in the city of Chicago, and which nominated, for President and Vice-President, Mr. Cleveland and Mr. Stevenson. He became a Presidential elector in that contest, and made a splendid canvass of his district for the national ticket. He was then laying the foundation of his future career as a Representative of his district in the Congress of the United States.

He was first elected to the House of Representatives in 1894, to the Fifty-fourth Congress, and reelected to the Fifty-fifth, Fifty-sixth, and Fifty-seventh Congresses. By his death he was prevented from taking his seat in this body in the Fifty-seventh Congress when we assembled in this Hall last December.

I believe he was a member of the constitutional convention which framed the constitution of his State. In all these positions of honor and trust committed to his hands by his people and constituents he bore himself not only with credit to himself, but with honor to those who gave their interests to him.

It is always sad, sir, to contemplate the loss of such a man as Dr. STOKES. Men like himself can not be well spared from public life, for there are too few such as he, who are willing to give up the quiet ease and comfort of the simple home life to engage actively in the turmoil and excitement of the hustings. He was a modest, unassuming, Christian gentleman, who improved and elevated the society in which he moved. His career in Congress could never have been what is termed brilliant or meteoric. He was of different mold. He was to be depended on in all the emergencies where coolness, calmness, and unimpassioned judgment were in demand to solve difficult and trying situations and emergencies. In all things public and private he was honest, sincere, and true. While engaged in his profession of school-teaching he found his way to Tennessee and located within the limits of the district I have the honor to represent on this floor. He taught school in two of the counties which then composed and which now compose my district.

There is where I first met him, and learned to love and to admire him. It was while thus occupied and engaged that he met, wooed, and won the estimable woman who was subsequently to become his partner in life. In a modest country home, surrounded by all that goes to make life pure and hearts contented, they united their fortunes and lives. He could not have been more fortunate in his selection, for while she brought to him the heritage of a good name—there being none better in our State—she was personally worthy of him into whose hands she committed herself. As we utter these words our hearts go out to her in the deepest and tenderest sympathy.

Mr. Speaker, in the loss of J. WILLIAM STOKES this House has lost an honest, upright legislator, his State a true and tried Representative, his country a broad-minded and devoted patriot, his church a pious and faithful member, and his widow a loving, tender husband.

[Mr. JOHNSON addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, in the meridian of life, with a promising future before him, enjoying the confidence and respect of loyal friends and a confiding constituency, surrounded with the comforts of home and the sweet companionship of a devoted wife, J. WILLIAM STOKES was called from earth to the abode of the just. On the 7th of July, 1901, a telegram reached me at my home in Virginia, requesting my attendance at his funeral in Orangeburg, S. C. It was a shock, but not a great surprise, for I had observed with deep regret his declining health. I shall ever regret that the information came too late for me to join my colleagues from the other States and be present when all that was mortal of our friend was laid in the silent tomb.

It was my good fortune to serve with Representative STOKES on the Agricultural Committee. This gave me an insight to his character and ability that a large number of this House could not enjoy. We know and appreciate the strong ties of friendship that are formed through association with the members of our own committees, as well as the opportunity this association affords for estimating the character of the members of the House. It is in the committee room that the legislation of the House is shaped and perfected. The quiet, painstaking work of the committeeman counts for much more than the speeches, too often delivered simply for the effect they may have in the Representative's district. This was the work suited to the taste of our deceased friend, and I bear willing testimony to his valuable services in this direction. For this work he was well equipped by training and temperament.

While for the most part we were in accord on the questions that arose in our committee, I call to mind one important subject on which we differed widely, and I bear in mind his gentle forbearance when his own views were combated, and his patience in listening to the arguments of those who opposed him.

Our friend died with his harness on. On more than one occasion I urged him to obtain leave of absence and go home for rest and treatment. He was a physician and would have given this advice to anyone else. I suggested to his watchful and patient wife that she might be able to persuade him to seek relief in entire rest, but her entreaties were in vain, so determined was he to remain at his post of duty as long as his strength would endure. Even after reaching home upon the adjournment of the Fifty-sixth Congress he devoted his time and taxed his energies for the welfare of his people.

I learned this through a rural free-delivery inspector who laid out several routes for me in the fall of 1901. When I ascertained that he had been through North and South Carolina I inquired after my colleagues and particularly as to the last days of Representative STOKES. This gentleman spoke in the highest terms of him, saying that he insisted on going with him over every route, though it was apparent that he was suffering and evident to all that he could not long stand the constant strain that he seemed determined to put forth. He was deeply interested in the rural free delivery, as the speech he made on the floor of the House will demonstrate. I have referred to his committee work; while this was performed with diligence and effectiveness, he was ready on all proper occasions to express himself with force and earnestness upon all questions arising in the House.

His reserve and modesty were known to his colleagues. So far as I could observe he was free from the twin vices that mar human character—envy and jealousy.

The wisest man who ever lived said, "Envy is rottenness of bones." Again he said, "Who is able to stand before envy?" Pilate knew that from envy the priests and elders of the people delivered Jesus into the hands of the enraged populace. The Phillistines envied the amiable and gentle Isaac. Rachel envied her sister. For less cause perhaps many a modern Rachel is to-day filled with envy and uncharitableness. Joseph's brethren envied him; and all over this land to-day, in city and country, in church and state, in private and public life, men envy their fellows.

Base Envy withers at another's joy,
And hates that excellence it can not reach.

Jealousy is the apprehension of superiority and is often converted into envy. Men who have served in the Army, particularly officers, know something of this evil passion. It has lost many battles and sacrificed many valuable lives. Men in public life are often afflicted with this passion. In years gone by it was a fruitful source of duels; now it finds vent in detraction, misrepresentation, and slander. The Good Book tells us, "Jealousy is the rage of a man." Again, "Jealousy is cruel as the grave." Evil spirits laugh in fiendish delight when, through the influences they appear to wield, they have worked up a desperate case of jealousy.

Beware, my lord, of jealousy!
It is the green-eyed monster which doth mock
The meat it feeds on.

I come now to speak of his higher nature and "holier chivalry." A religious philosopher once observed that, "In Christianity, and in Christianity alone, can be discovered character in harmonious wholeness; at once the 'righteous man,' high in the practice of all social virtues, stern in the inflexible adhesion to the utter right; and the 'good man,' who has won for himself a revenue of affection, at whose name men's eyes sparkle and their spirits glow as if a sunbeam glinted in." Our friend possessed this "harmonious wholeness." He was an earnest Christian. He preserved in his associations and public life the same devotion to his religious obligations that he practiced at home and among his friends. To resist the allurements of the world and keep a conscience void of offense requires strong convictions and resolute will power. He who can safely pass this ordeal in public life is indeed a hero and will wear the victor's wreath at the last.

No one can fully discern the spiritual relations between a man and his Maker. We can only judge a tree by its fruits. From all that we could see and learn of our lamented colleague we rest assured that he kept himself "unspotted from the world."

We believe if a man die he shall live again, and that the spirit of our friend has passed into the city of everlasting peace.

His day is come, not gone;
His sun has risen, not set;
His life is now beyond
The reach of death or change,
Not ended, but begun.

Among the many lovable traits of character possessed by our colleague, who has preceded us only a short time, perhaps, to the spirit land, was his gentleness. This is no afterthought of mine or those who unite with us to-day in these sorrowful and not purely perfunctory ceremonies, but was observed often and sometimes commented on, for every man here is estimated according to his real worth and character. We would do well to lay this thought to heart.

Gentleness is the crowning virtue of man. It is the sunshine of the soul. It is the beautiful blending of many virtues. It comes from the heart and is not a product of the intellect. It is often assumed, but, like every other counterfeit, is sooner or later detected. It is the natural charm of women, but shows its true force or power in strong men who have thought well and struggled hard for their fellows. Its force is potential in the hours of sadness and affliction. It is linked with sympathy and finds an active field in the heroic struggles of the altruistic reformers of this age.

If ever you have looked on better days,
If ever been where bells have knelled to church,
If ever sat at any good man's feast,
If ever from your eyelids wiped a tear,
And know what 'tis to pity and be pitied,
Let gentleness my strong enforcement be.

In emulating the gentle virtues and shunning the weaknesses—if he had them—of our lamented friend, let us seek to promote the welfare of those who have clothed us with grave responsibilities, and in the end deserve the just tributes we now pay to his memory.

With tender recollections of our departed colleague, we pray that peace and happiness may follow her who bears his image in her heart and binds his memory to earth.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, amid the cares and responsibilities, the triumphs and disappointments, and the changing scenes of political life, we pause a while to-day to pay a slight but appropriate tribute of respect and love to one who for six years was an honored and esteemed member of this House and a faithful Representative of his people and the State of South Carolina.

As the years pass like summer clouds, one after another of those whom we have known and esteemed in this House enter the dark valley of the shadow of death and depart to that "undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveler returns."

In accordance with the resolution of the House, we suspend to-day its order of business, and remembering the virtue, the patriotism, and the conscientious service of Dr. J. WILLIAM STOKES, we lay upon his tomb in the Palmetto State a wreath of immortelles. I did not know Dr. STOKES, Mr. Speaker, so well as his colleagues from his State, South Carolina, or so intimately as those who served upon the same committees with him, but I knew of him before my first election to Congress on account of his connection with and great interest in the rural free-delivery service. He was one of the strongest advocates of this service which has proven of such great benefit to the people who live in the country, giving to them a daily mail and newspapers, and bringing them in quick communication with the cities and towns and in closer touch with the current events of the world.

My association with Dr. STOKES in the Fifty-sixth Congress was exceedingly pleasant, and I formed a high opinion of his integrity, character, and fidelity to his trust. I served upon the committee of this House in attendance upon his funeral. A graduate of Washington and Lee University in Virginia, in 1876, and later in medicine of Vanderbilt University, Tennessee, his natural inclination seemed toward public life, and his sympathies were especially with the agricultural people, the farmers of his State, whom he served for two terms as president of the State Alliance.

He was State senator, delegate at large to the National Democratic Convention at Chicago in 1892, Presidential elector, and a member of the Fifty-fourth, Fifty-fifth, Fifty-sixth, and Fifty-seventh Congresses. In the closing days of the Fifty-sixth Congress it was apparent to his devoted wife and his friends that his health was failing, so that the sad news of his death at his home in Orangeburg in July, 1901, soon after his entrance upon his fourth term as a member of Congress, was not wholly unexpected.

And yet, Mr. Speaker, how few of us ever expect the coming of this greatest of all changes in our human lives, the final separation from the bright scenes, the joys, the sorrows, the activities, the ambitions of the world, and our transition to another sphere of existence, borne upon and across the wide and fathomless ocean of eternity.

Whither we go, we know not. We only know that heathen as well as Christian philosophers, since the days of Socrates and Plato, have taught that death is but a transition; and we can only look up and beyond the mists and shadows which surround the dark valley into the sunshine which rests above and beyond, and with confident faith in the teachings of the divine Master exclaim:

And though from out the bourne
Of time and space
The flood may bear me far,
I hope to meet my Pilot face to face
When I have crossed the bar.

Those who love and serve their fellow-men may pass from the stage of action, but they still live in the affection and undying memories of their fellow-citizens; and so, Mr. Speaker, I am sure if loyalty to conviction and duty, if fidelity to trust, if Christian manhood, if service to his fellow-men can prepare a man for transition to a higher and nobler existence, and cause his memory to survive the mighty change of death, then our late colleague in this Chamber, to whom we pay tribute to-day, still lives in his work and his example.

At his home in Orangeburg, S. C., upon the streets, at the church of which he was an active and beloved member, throngs of his fellow-citizens assembled to manifest their love for him and deep grief in the loss they had sustained. He seemed to be, and he was, in the very zenith of his popularity and usefulness when the end came, and he still lives in the affections of the people of his district and State.

He has only passed from earth to some happier existence. Death for him was but transition, and we believe that in the "silence of the receding world he heard the great waves breaking upon the farther shore and felt upon his wasted brow the breath of heaven's eternal morning."

There is no death! the stars go down
To rise upon some other shore,
And bright in Heaven's jeweled crown
They shine forevermore.

There is no death! the forest leaves
Convert to life the viewless air;
The rocks disorganize to feed
The hungry moss they bear.

There is no death! the dust we tread,
Shall change beneath the summer showers,
To golden grain, or mellow fruits,
Or rainbow-tinted flowers.

There is no death! the leaves may fall,
The flowers may fade and pass away—
They only wait through wintry hours,
The warm, sweet breath of May.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I always have a feeling of solemnity on occasions like this, when I realize I am in the presence of death. Great minds have traveled through life in awe at the thought of death, and Queen Elizabeth cried out, "All my possessions for a moment's time!" Burns called death "the poor man's friend," and Byron, when the end came, said: "I must sleep now." Mrs. Hemans truly proclaims:

Leaves have their time to fall,
And flowers to wither at the north-wind's breath,
And stars to set; but all,
Thou hast all seasons for thine own, O Death!

We can not understand it, and we will never know why here, "for now we see through a glass darkly," but by and by we shall know, "for then I shall know even as I am known." Hence "it is not all of life to live nor all of death to die." I am here to join in paying a tribute to the life and character of the Hon. J. WILLIAM STOKES, late an honored and beloved Representative in this House from the State of South Carolina. I had not an extensive or long acquaintance with Dr. STOKES. He lived in my home city of Corinth, Miss., about twenty years ago, and was the principal of the graded schools during his residence there.

I felt highly honored when I received an invitation from his widow through the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] to deliver an address on this occasion, and as I did not live in Corinth when Dr. STOKES resided there, I at once wrote to some prominent gentlemen there about him, and I am going to take the liberty of quoting from their replies. He was a teacher while there, and it is of that period in his life I shall especially speak. The first letter from which I quote is from Hon. Thomas E. Henry, the present mayor of Corinth. He says:

It was my pleasure to know the Hon. J. WILLIAM STOKES quite intimately while he was a resident of Corinth. I was the clerk of the board of mayor and aldermen at the time he taught school here, and this gave me an opportunity to know him well. He was not only a thoroughly educated man, but a very practical one.

He was the founder of graded schools in Corinth. It was the custom when he came here to prorate the public school fund to every private school in town. He questioned the propriety as well as the legality of this practice, and in a short while had the support of the people as well as the authorities in favor of using the public fund exclusively in support of the public graded schools. He established such a reputation for honesty, integrity, conservatism, and ability that he was placed in absolute control of the entire school interests and school funds of the city, and was allowed to conduct the school according to his best judgment, and permitted to select his own faculty. He was a strict disciplinarian, but at the same time was kind and gentle, and one of the most amiable of men. He lived up to his professions in both temporal and spiritual affairs. He was a true man, an excellent teacher, an exemplary citizen, and a consistent Christian.

I now quote from a letter written me by Hon. J. M. Boone, a prominent attorney of Corinth. He says:

Hon. J. WILLIAM STOKES lived here several years, and was during that time principal of our public free school. He was very competent and extraordinarily energetic. He was, I think, as progressive and persevering as any man we have ever had here in any line of work. By his ability he built up the public school interest that finds such strong hold in our city now. When he took charge here, our people did not seem to rightly appreciate the benefits of an education for their children, but never since his stay with us have I seen a disposition on the part of our people to lag in this work

He was a consistent Christian gentleman. He possessed strong will power and was persistent in his views about his profession. I never heard a remark against his honesty of purpose or a reflection upon his daily life. His life here showed him to be a leader rather than a follower of men. He was open, frank, and candid in all his dealings. In all of his proposed public measures he never seemed to have anything to conceal, but dealt with the subject in an open, frank way, and presented his views with the utmost candor.

The following quotation is from the letter of my family physician, a most excellent and elegant gentleman, Dr. Charles M. Taylor, of Corinth. He says:

I am very glad you were requested to say something of Dr. STOKES. I went to school to him. He was a great teacher and a most excellent gentleman. He was an honest, upright man of undoubted integrity, a man who loved right and abhorred wrong, one who when mistaken had the manhood to acknowledge it; who when right had the moral and physical courage to maintain it. He was a teacher of great ability. He possessed the happy faculty of being able to impart what he knew in a forcible and pleasing way to the student. He deserved and received the good will, respect, and admiration of the pupils and patrons of the school so long as he remained in our midst without, so far as I know, a single exception. His life was such as to lead me to believe he was a devout, true, and sincere Christian.

I was, as a student, very intimate with Dr. STOKES for two years and had a most excellent opportunity to observe his "daily walk and conversation," and he was in all above criticism or reproach. I never heard him discuss religious subjects or mention God but what he did it with that becoming reverence due from the creature to the Creator, from a sinner saved by grace to his Lord and Master. His was a beautiful character, worthy of all emulation. You can not say too much of Dr. STOKES. He was a true, manly man, a perfect gentleman, an excellent citizen, and a devout Christian.

The next quotation is from the letter of Dr. Theodore Borroum, an accomplished and cultured physician of Corinth. He says:

I was too young to know much of Dr. STOKES when he lived here. I have, however, inquired of a great many citizens who did know him and who now remember him well since I received your letter asking me about him. All with one accord speak in the highest terms of him as a man, a teacher, and a Christian gentleman. He taught here something like twenty years ago and was the principal of the city schools. He was eminently successful as an educator. I am sure you may pay him the highest encomiums and not speak extravagantly of him. Corinth owes much to his wise counsel and effective work. He made his impress here for good, and the present most excellent graded schools in our city are an enduring monument to his memory and a blessing to humanity.

I have preferred to copy these letters verbatim rather than otherwise use the information brought to me by them, and having done so, I could well stop at this point, for I can pay no higher eulogy than these testimonials to the life and character of this great and good man. Here is a verification of that divine truth, "By their fruits ye shall know them." This man, wherever he lived, left his impress for good. He used well his opportunities as a teacher to rightly store the mind and soul of the young with aspirations for loftier things. There is no nobler, higher, or better calling or profession than that of teacher. He who properly instructs, guides, and directs the youth, male and female, of the country is a blessing to humanity, an honor to the world, and a coworker with our Father above.

Dr. STOKES was a success in this exalted profession, and it prepared him for wider usefulness and for greater endeavors in the field of statesmanship. He was a leader—"a voice, not an echo"—and faithfully and well did he lead onward and upward in things temporal and spiritual. To such a man life was a field of noble activity to prepare for better things by and by, and death had no terrors. The Christ said, "He that believeth on me hath everlasting life." He believed on Him, he trusted in Him, and he simply passed through the "valley of the shadow of death" out into the fuller, purer, and never-ending life in the presence of Him above. The life and character of such a man is encouraging and uplifting; the death of such a man is sublime and beautiful. In life he dispelled clouds, he scattered sunshine.

He was busy, he was useful. He continually did that which was good. He constrained people into better ways. He was sincere in all his purposes, and was not a passive influence, but an aggressive, active force. He performed his task faithfully, and has gone to his reward. His life was beautiful, and its close here and its passing through the shadows exemplified the "beauty of death." The mystery of life and the mystery of death met and blended into a transcendent light that brilliantly illuminated the pathway to that rest "beneath the shade of the trees," in the "heaven of eternal bliss." Mississippi mingles her tears with South Carolina on the grave of her honored and beloved dead, and plants a most beautiful flower which shall ever be blooming and fragrant in our memories.

With our united hearts of sympathy we offer condolence to the bereaved widow, and would comfort her with the thought, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." He rests from his labors, but his works still live; they follow him, and they are for good. "He being dead, yet speaketh," and in his works and speech he has exemplified and is exemplifying the true man, the perfect gentleman, the faithful public servant, and the devout Christian. In truthfulness we can say his life was a success, and that truthful epitaph is a "halo of glory" for any life which will not grow dim e'en with eternity.

His life and death in their beauty emphasized a great truth, and that truth is that no one can be truly great unless that greatness is used to advance that which is truly good. Would that all would properly realize and appreciate that truth. It contains the climax of a successful life, and without it life is a dismal and never-ending failure. One's life and death can and should always be beautiful; and it can be so by simple faith in a crucified and risen Lord, the fruits of which must be doing the best and most we can for others while on this earth and a crown of righteousness at God's right hand in the mansions above. Such was the life of the Hon. J. WILLIAM STOKES.

Mourn not the dead whose lives declare
That they have nobly borne their part,
For victory's golden crown they wear,
Reserved for every faithful heart.
They rest with glory wrapped around,
Immortal on the scroll of fame;
Their works, their praises shall resound,
Their name, an everlasting name.

As life's battle ended the Hon. J. WILLIAM STOKES, with the great Apostle to the Gentiles, could triumphantly exclaim: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them that love His appearing."

He is gone, but when he departed he held—

That golden key
That opes the palace of eternity.

"He is dead, but he ever liveth," for—

He has but passed
Beyond the mist that blinds us here,
Into the newer and larger life
Of that serener sphere.

And ever near us, though unseen,
The dear, immortal spirits tread,
For all the boundless universe
Is life! There are no dead.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I can add but little to what has been said by my colleagues, and it might possibly be a sufficient eulogy upon my dear friend to say that I have come from a sick bed to be present on this occasion; but that will not satisfy in any degree my own feelings in this matter. Yea, I am almost constrained to repeat the words of a warm friend of Tom Moore, who said of him:

Were it the last drop in the well,
And I gasped upon the brink,
Ere my fainting spirit fell,
'Tis to thee that I would drink.

In the gloom and sorrow that overshadows us to-day, when meditating upon the departure of our friend, these words have suggested themselves to me, and I have not other words more adequate to express my high appreciation of the noble character of the deceased in adding this humble tribute to his memory in addition to those paid him by his other colleagues.

The Grim Reaper has again visited us and taken one of our number, and according to a long-time-honored custom we are convened to-day to do honor to and pay the last tribute to one of our late associates, only yesterday with us, so to speak, who now lies with restful hands in the cold and silent grave. These occasions are always sad and solemn, giving us cause for reflection. It is a sad and mournful thought to lose any member of this House, it matters not from what State of the Union he may come. But it is sadder still when death comes closer home to us and claims as its victim one from our own State, from our own home, one of our own delegation, one of our colleagues, one of our brothers, one of our intimate friends, one with whom we have associated for years. We are all brethren in a sense, but the members of a delegation from any particular State are brethren and friends in a peculiar sense.

While a member of Congress represents the interests of all the people at large in a general way, in a more particular sense does he represent the people of his own State and district. And colleagues who have been working for days, months, and even years for the good of the people of their own State are drawn closer together and ties of friendship and fellow-feeling are thereby made that are hard indeed to break. This was the case with the South Carolina delegation toward the man whom we are attempting to speak about to-day.

A seat has been made vacant in this delegation (though now filled honorably and efficiently by a good and worthy young man, following in the footpaths of his illustrious predecessor); a chair has been draped in mourning; a voice has been silenced; a heart has ceased to beat; a life has been cut off by which this House has lost one of its most useful members, the country one of its most ardent defenders, the people of South Carolina (the masses) one of their best and truest friends, and a most noble and devoted wife bereft of her beloved husband, whom she almost idolized and who in turn was just as devoted and mindful of her. This man was the Hon. J. WILLIAM STOKES, of Orangeburg, S. C., whose honor it has been to represent the Seventh district of that State from the 4th day of March, 1895, till the day of his death, which occurred on the 6th of July, 1901.

The summons from on high came and called him away from us and from the life he lived, but we are led to believe that he is now with his Master, whom he loved to serve on earth, in a more blissful field of glory and heavenly love. While living here you have only to review his record to see how well he served his country and how ably he represented the people of the Seventh district, who have ever loved and honored him in his lifetime, and who now hold sacred his memory, which will live on as long as time shall last. In giving a condensed sketch of the life of this good man I feel that I can do no better than to reproduce the short biographical sketch given of him in the Congressional Directory, as follows, being only a short outline of his illustrious career:

J. WILLIAM STOKES, of Orangeburg, was born in Orangeburg County, S. C., in 1853; was brought up to farm life, attending the ordinary schools of his county and town until he was 19 years of age; graduated from Washington and Lee University, Virginia, in 1876, and taught school for twelve years, graduating in the meantime from Vanderbilt University, Tennessee, in medicine; in 1889 he returned to the farm, assisted in organizing the farmers, and was president of the State Farmers' Alliance two terms; was elected to the State senate in 1890; was a delegate at large to the national Democratic convention at Chicago in 1892, and was Presidential elector on the Democratic ticket the same year; was defeated for the Democratic nomination in the old First Congressional district in 1892 by a small majority; in 1894 was nominated without opposition in the Democratic primaries in the new Seventh Congressional district, which is nearly the same as the old First district. He received the certificate of election to the Fifty-fourth Congress, but the seat was declared vacant. At the election on November 3, 1896, he was elected to the short term of the Fifty-fourth Congress, was reelected to the Fifty-fifth Congress, and also to the Fifty-sixth and Fifty-seventh Congresses.

To know Dr. STOKES well was but to love him much. It was my good fortune to know him quite intimately, having been associated with him in the State work of the Farmers' Alliance, of which he was the president, while I was State lecturer, before we came to Congress together. While he was an extremely modest and somewhat reserved man, yet at the same time, when the necessity would arise, none were more aggressive and bold, none more determined and energetic. He was possessed of a high and laudable ambition and worked his way up by energy and industry from the humblest walks of life to a seat in the United States Congress, and it may be truthfully said that during his service here he has always been ready and willing to take good care of the interests of the good people of the Seventh district, whom he had been called to represent.

He was a man of a high degree of intelligence and refinement. He was a strictly temperate and sober man, and possessed of wonderful will power and determination for one of his physical ability, being rather frail and delicate. I can now recall how often his colleagues would tell him during the last session of Congress he attended that he ought to go home and rest, but he would not. He was an active and consistent member of the Methodist Church; naturally pious, liberal in his views as well as in his contributions; a man of firm and decided religious opinion; an all-round, earnest, useful, and zealous worker in the Master's vineyard, and it can be said that Orangeburg was draped in mourning on the day of his death.

It was my sad duty to attend his funeral, held in the Methodist Church at Orangeburg, of which he was a member, and I will never forget the large concourse of people assembled to do him honor. Well do I recall the words of the text announced by his pastor, which had been selected by himself before his death. It was part of the twelfth verse, first chapter of Paul's second epistle to Timothy, in these words:

For I know whom I have believed and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto Him against that day.

Oh, whence and what, if not of God, is this mystery we call mind? What is it that thinks and feels and knows and acts? Who can deny the divinity that stirs within us? He clung fast to the hand that led him, though sometimes it was in darkness, though it was sometimes in deep waters, yet he knew whom he had believed, and felt persuaded that he could and would keep all that which he had confidingly committed to Him against that day.

From these impressive words the venerable pastor preached one of the most feeling funeral sermons to which I ever listened, and after it there were very few dry eyes in the vast audience. It was a solemn occasion, and as I sat there meditating upon the death of my dear friend I could but recall to mind his many noble traits of character, and to rejoice that he died the death of the righteous, and being comforted with the language of the one who wrote, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." And believing that henceforth their works survive them. The Methodist Church has sustained a great loss in the death of this good man, and while we lament we believe the good Lord has taken him to Himself in glory, and that he is now basking in the sunshine of His love.

We shall miss him, the country will miss him, the House misses him, South Carolina will feel the loss; his many friends mourn over him, his relatives look in vain for his coming, the poor will feel their loss; but most of all and beyond all he will be missed by that dear, good, noble, conscientious, and Christian woman whom it was his good fortune to woo and win for a life companion, that most estimable, highly cultivated, and refined lady who was his helpmeet, who sat opposite him at table, who presided over his lovely home, who was always with him—sometimes at the banquet, sometimes at the funeral, sometimes at the bedside of the sick, but always with him until his death, like a ministering angel. And now, in this hour of profound sorrow and bereavement, we would extend to her most of all our heartfelt sympathy and condolence. It was never my fortune to witness greater or more affectionate devotion between man and wife.

He was not blessed with any children of his own, but he was the benefactor of a great many poor children, having educated a score of young men in his day and time. He loved and helped the children of his community.

But Hon. J. WILLIAM STOKES is no more; he has gone; we are nevermore to meet him again, nor to work with him, nor to enjoy his company in this world. But let us remember that while he can not come back to us we may meet him in that happy land, if we will, where parting is no more, and where the weary are ever at rest. After all, our sorrow is heaven's joy. Our loss is his gain, for his faith in the God who rules the destiny of nations as well as individuals has enabled him to fall asleep in this world of sorrow to awake in a brighter and better land, where he can receive that welcome plaudit, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joys of the Lord."

While he is dead, his influence as a representative of the people still lives, and, far better than that, his example as an humble follower of his Lord and Master stands out in bold relief as a rich legacy to all those he has left behind, leading them to a realization of the saying that "It is not all of life to live, nor yet all of death to die." His many good and noble examples are well worthy of emulation by all of us, especially by the young men. Then, as we ponder over the life and character of our departed friend and colleague, who rose from the humblest walks of life by perseverance and toil to prominence, serving his people all the while honestly and faithfully and leaving them, above all things else, a noble Christian example, let us in our ambition to do something and be something in the world feel encouraged by this man's career and learn the lesson he has taught us, that—

Honor and shame from no condition rise;
Act well your part, there all the honor lies.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, quite a number of gentlemen desired to say something on this occasion, but have been unable to be present. I ask unanimous consent that members may have thirty days in which to print remarks in the RECORD on the late Representative STOKES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ELLIOTT). The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that leave for thirty days be granted members to print eulogies in the RECORD on the late Representative STOKES. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE CRUMP, OF MICHIGAN.

Mr. APLIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tribute to the memory of Hon. ROUSSEAU O. CRUMP, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Michigan.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his eminent abilities as a distinguished public servant, the House, at the conclusion of these memorial proceedings, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

Mr. APLIN. Mr. Speaker, in his lifetime ROUSSEAU O. CRUMP was my friend.

The task is a sad one which devolves upon me, now that he is gone.

I know that my words are feeble but my love for him as well as my duty as his successor here impels me to pay tribute to his memory,

ROUSSEAU O. CRUMP was born in Pittsford, Monroe County, N. Y., May 20, 1843.

He received his education in the public schools of Pittsford and Rochester.

When still a young man he went to Michigan and for a time lived in Allegan and Kalamazoo counties, engaged in the lumber business.

In 1881 he removed to West Bay City, where he established a sawmill and box factory, and from that time until his death he was a prominent factor in the commercial life of northern Michigan.

He made a modest beginning in business and won his way to success by the application of correct business principles, giving his personal attention to every detail of the work in hand and treating workingman and customer with equal consideration and honesty, with the result that all the people regarded him as the embodiment of manliness and integrity.

His best friends were those who knew him best—the men who worked for him in his mills.

The reason for this was that he was always their steadfast friend.

It was their friendship that finally forced him into public life.

His inclination was not in that direction.

He would have chosen to devote his energies to the great business which he had built up and to enjoy the fruits of his labors while going quietly in and out among his neighbors, working for their interests as well as for his own, continuing the kindness, the charity, the considerate care for others which seemed inseparable from him.

He would have chosen not to take upon himself the cares of public office, whose exactions he realized would break in upon the quiet of his pleasant home life and require him to give up much of the time which he would rather spend with the members of his family whom he loved so well.

No man was ever more blessed in his home life than was ROUSSEAU O. CRUMP.

With a loving wife who had been his true helpmeet in sunshine and shadow, who had stood by him and bravely battled with him through the early hardships of his business career, with manly sons and loving daughters about him, he was fortunate indeed.

When, however, his neighbors drafted him into the public service, he obeyed the call.

He was elected and reelected alderman of his ward; elected and reelected mayor of his city.

The same energy, the same thoughtfulness of others, the same fidelity to details, the same rugged honesty which had won success for him in business he applied in the discharge of his public duties.

He was no man's man.

He was faithful all the time to the interests of all the people.

He worked with as strict fidelity over the seemingly small requirements of his position as alderman as he did afterwards in doing the people's will as mayor and as Congressman.

He never shirked a duty and he never failed.

When in 1894 he was nominated for Representative in Congress he was of course elected, notwithstanding the large adverse majority which confronted his party in the district at the beginning of the campaign.

Four times he was chosen by the people of the Tenth Congressional district of Michigan to represent them upon this floor.

That he served them well the record proves.

He was here here during critical times.

Thoroughly grounded in the principles of the Republican party, he steadfastly maintained those principles while he was a member of the House of Representatives.

Those who served with him here have told me that his influence was exerted and his vote was cast always seriously, conscientiously, patriotically.

He believed in what he did and did it because he believed it was the right thing to do.

That his people approved his course they attested by their votes time and time again.

He loved his people and he never failed them.

They knew him and they trusted him implicitly.

It is now a year lacking only five days since he died.

Bravely had he fought for many months against the malady which had taken hold on him, but his courage did not avail.

On the 1st day of May, 1901, in his beautiful home in West Bay City, his loved ones at his bedside, the light of his life went out.

The impending separation had brought sincerest grief both to him and to them, but both he and they were "sustained and soothed by an unfaltering trust" and an abiding faith which looked forward with hope and confidence to a happy reunion "beyond the grave in the breaking light of the resurrection morn."

On the afternoon of May 3 we laid him to rest in Elmwood Cemetery.

Thousands of his friends—the high and low, rich and poor, young and old—gathered at his home and followed his remains to the "silent city."

About his grave they stood, bowed down with grief, no eye undimmed, all hearts oppressed, and yet all those mourning ones gave voiceless but sincere expression, more plainly than could words have done, to the pride they felt in the fact that ROUSSEAU O. CRUMP had been their friend.

He is not dead, this good man whom we mourn,
Though out of sight and hearing he has gone;
He lives, removed from earthly care and ill,
With stronger, holier, power to bless us still.

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Speaker, a portion of this day has been set apart, by the action of this House, to pay tribute of respect to the life, character, and public services of the Hon. ROUSSEAU O. CRUMP, of Michigan.

I would be untrue to my warm friendship for him in his lifetime and to my admiration for his ability and success if I did not briefly on this occasion set forth some of his characteristics which have most deeply impressed me.

My acquaintance with him began after my election to the Fifty-fourth Congress, to which we both came as new members.

Some men carry with them constantly a presence that invites your confidence, a demeanor that demands your respect, a simplicity that wins your love. Such was the man in whose memory we have this day met and to whom no words of mine can pay fitting tribute. No eulogy here pronounced can satisfy the high demands of those who were nearest to him and those who knew him best during his lifetime.

Mankind is measured by what they accomplish. Fortunately, under our system of government the pathway of advancement, either along commercial or political lines, is open to the most humble youth born on American soil if he has the will to do, the capacity to acquire, and the soul to dare. No matter how lowly his early environments, he may aspire to and reach the highest level in the field of usefulness and success, and take front rank in the political or business world.

While the pathway is open to all, it is only those who merit success by their industry, energy, and perseverance who will be permitted to tread this pathway to the highest honors in any field of usefulness.

Thus we judge that the successful man has earned his promotions by the presence of those qualities of mind and heart which merit any distinction he may acquire. Men are loved and esteemed for what they are. Men's virtues are the rays of a higher life shining out from the soul. These virtues prompt to deeds of benevolence, acts of friendship "which are most wonderfully kind," but such acts make the man what he is and prompts the love and esteem in which some are held, no matter how humble in capacity the man may be or how high a genius he may possess.

Mr. CRUMP was born of the middle class, of that sturdy English stock which has made the history of the British Isles the world's history for more than two centuries, and which carried the cross of St. George on every sea and made her flag respected and feared on every land.

His father and mother came from England to the United States in 1842 and settled near Rochester, N. Y., where Congressman CRUMP was born.

He inherited from his parents that reverence for good things; that spirit of nobility, the very grandeur of a noble and upright life; that hatred of meanness which despises dishonesty; that reverence for the truth which is a crown of honor to a perfect manhood; and these traits of character dominated his existence from the days of his boyhood until the close of his life.

Armed with only a meager education, obtained at that early day in our public schools, with no endowment except such as nature had given him in a clear intellect, strong arms, and a courage that never falters, he started out to win his own way in the world before he had yet passed the years of his youth.

I shall not attempt to give a history of his life, nor to follow him in his struggles from an apprentice boy to the time he so honorably and so ably represented his district in Congress, but, rather, will call the attention to the House to some of the traits of his character which have most deeply impressed me.

He loved his home and sought to make his home lovable. He was a tender and an affectionate father, a loving and devoted husband. In his home was constant sunshine, purity, and peace. He was congenial and popular with his neighbors; trusted as a friend, admired as a citizen, and relied upon as an adviser. This is witnessed by the fact of his having been elected alderman of his ward; elected and reelected mayor of his city, and four times having been chosen as a Representative of his district in Congress by constantly increasing majorities.

He was true to his family, true in places of public trust, and greater than all he was true to himself and true to his convictions of right and wrong.

He was generous, public-spirited, and patriotic; his gifts often exceeding his means, and his devotion to public duty often taking his time and means, which he could ill afford to spare from his private affairs.

He was essentially patriotic. He was loyal to his city, to his State, and to his country.

His friendships once formed were abiding, and no man need ever be ashamed to claim his friendship. When at home the rich and the poor, the exalted or the lowly, the laborer in his mill, or the highest official, found in him a wise counselor, a worthy and a sincere friend.

As a member of this body he was active, industrious, faithful, and useful. He thought clearly, and never betrayed, in the slightest degree, the confidence imposed in him by his constituents. He pretended to no oratory, but could present his views clearly and distinctly. Oratory is a desirable adjunct to a legislator, but good business capacity, honesty, and vigilance in the discharge of public duties are the most valuable and essential attributes to a successful and desirable legislator. The real value of a member of this body lies not so much in his oratorical ability as to his clearness of vision, his information on public affairs, the compass of his intellect, his integrity, his willingness and his capacity to devote every energy to the interests of his constituents and his country; and herein is to be found the greatest strength of Mr. CRUMP.

The confidence which his character and his untiring energy inspired gave confidence to his constituency and gave him a wide influence upon this floor.

He was as practical in the conduct of public affairs as he was in his business methods at home.

The kindliness of his nature was an ever-present consciousness to those who met him in daily life, whether at home, surrounded by his family and neighbors, or in this Hall. Some men are a perpetual benediction to those with whom they come in contact, and every smile is a cheer and every word an encouragement.

The comments of the public press of his district and his State are eloquent tributes to the husband, the father, the man, the citizen, the public-spirited benefactor, and the legislator.

The Bay City Times-Press said:

He seemed to be a man of the people. He had a faculty of drawing men to him. He was a worker in Congress, and accomplished for his district what many others could not do. He was a warm friend of the Administration, and political favors that he asked, if they were just, were given to him. He was always genial and good natured, and no matter a man's condition, he always gave him a hearing, and his petitions due consideration. He was a friend of the old soldier, and it was his aim to see that deserving ones throughout his district were awarded just pensions.

Mr. CRUMP was a successful business man, a person of good morals and sterling integrity. When he gave his word, it could be depended upon. Politically he was not a partisan, and in his dealings with his constituents he cast politics completely aside. No man having passed to the great beyond ever received a greater tribute of respect from the people of this city than did ROUSSEAU O. CRUMP yesterday when the last services were held over his remains. For several hours before the time of the funeral the house was visited by people anxious to pay their last tribute to one whom they knew so well, even though all did not enjoy his personal acquaintance.

As the time for the funeral services drew near, the house was filled with friends and business and political associates. Every house on Midland street was closed during the hour of the funeral, and the schools were closed for the afternoon. Mr. CRUMP was a conspicuous man, too, for his home relations. He loved his home. It was his palace, the strength of his life. It was there that he found his greatest consolation, there that he found the inspiration and the strength to do. He was a man among men, but was the happiest when making those nearest to him happy. His last thoughts were of his home, and his favorite song was "Home, Sweet Home."

The Detroit Free Press said:

Congressman ROUSSEAU O. CRUMP, of the Tenth district, was one of the safest men the State has had in Congress for several years. He never was and never aspired to be a practical or professional politician in the modern acceptation of these terms. His enterprise, honesty, and business success caused his home people to place him in one position of trust after another, until the honors thus conferred culminated in a seat in Congress. Had the majority in that body been made up of men of like conceptions of duty to the people there would have been a business-like administration of affairs and a consequent gain to the masses. Within the scope of his opportunities he did his work well as a Representative, and the appreciation of his people was attested by his continuance in office with increased majorities. His busines line had been lumber, and his business monument is one of the largest manufacturing establishments of its kind in the United States. In private life he was a man deserving of the many friends that he made and of the prosperity that he enjoyed.

The Oscoda Press said:

Congressman ROUSSEAU O. CRUMP was a plain man. He attained eminence by ability and hard work, being noted for his energy and push, accompanied by fair and honest dealing, and having the respect of all with whom he came in contact. For thirty years a large employer of labor, he never had a strike nor any difficulty with his workingmen.

The Coleman Independent said:

In the death of Congressman CRUMP the people of this district have lost an earnest, conscientious Representative, one who was ever ready to do anything in his power for the people he represented. As a friend he was most loyal, and throughout the district, during his long career as Congressman, he made many personal friends, who learned to respect and admire him for his many noble qualities, and his death has brought deep regret to all.

The Bay City Tribune said:

Bay City people knew Congressman CRUMP as a big-hearted, whole-souled, progressive, and broad-minded man. Companionable in his dealings with his fellows, of inflexible integrity and well-grounded principles, he was a man among men. The community sorrows in his death.

In his public service he was keenly alive to the interests of his constituents. A thorough-going American, his career was marked by rugged devotion to the welfare of his people and loyalty to what he conceived to be the better policies for the greater number of the citizens of the nation. No discredit attaches to any of his public acts.

The Tribune joins with those who will lament the death of ROUSSEAU O. CRUMP. Upon his coffin is placed the tribute deserved by his life, and tenders the family of the dead citizen and legislator the sincere condolence of an entire community.

The Alpena Evening News said:

In the death of Congressman CRUMP northern Michigan loses one of her most honored and respected citizens. No public man in Michigan has been so kindly spoken of by the press of Michigan as was the late ROUSSEAU O. CRUMP. The people looked upon him as a business man rather than a politician, and it is generally conceded that it was to his credit to be so compared.

Concerning Mr. CRUMP'S religious views I know but little. A man's professions are not always the fairest judgment of his character or faith. Judging him from his life and works, the atmosphere of his daily living, he most fairly represented the true spirit and teachings of the Great Master—that spirit of charity for all mankind "which suffereth long and is kind, which thinketh not of himself, but of the welfare and happiness of others"—that unselfishness which shines like a star in the heavens and marks the true spirit of Christian living; that love of God's creatures which shuts out greed and selfishness and envy and malice. There was no room in his great heart for jealousy, which warps the intellect, stifles friendship, and dwarfs every kindly impulse to do good unto others.

He sat in judgment on no man; he imputed evil to none. If not a professor, he was a possessor of those great virtues which adorn the Christian name, and which has lifted the world up to the great plane of the brotherhood and fraternity of the human race, which is the nearest approach to Divinity.

I was present at his burial and saw the great concourse of people who, with bowed heads, followed his remains to their last resting place. There no one asked his creed. He had left as his creed the flowers of love and charity scattered all along his pathway of life, and men and women and little children of all creeds came and stood over his grave and gave it the tribute and gentle benediction of their tears. The world is better for his having lived in it.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, we have met to note the passage of a human life, to pay a sincere tribute of respect and esteem to one who was once a companion of our daily life.

It is fitting that we should lay aside for a time the ordinary transaction of the public business and present for general good those ennobling lessons we have learned from one who "no longer lists to war's alarms or pulsates with feeling when the pleasing notes of the harp strike the strings of perfect harmony." It is meet and proper that in this hour, so fittingly given for this purpose, we should perpetuate the glories of that life, now ended, and place upon the permanent records of this body our tribute of love.

ROUSSEAU O. CRUMP represented in this body, as in his entire life, those traits of sturdy, steadfast manhood which never rise to brilliant, lightning flashes, but shine on and shine ever by tireless endeavor and never-failing faithfulness.

It was not given to him to stir the echoes of this Chamber by spoken word, nor by flashing wit to hold enthralled the minds of his fellow-men. His part was of a different sort, but not less noble nor of less enduring worth. He left a record of honest, sterling merit so deeply graven on the memory and lives of his fellows that nothing but death can efface it. He has left shining examples of manhood that will have an effect on our lives so long as we shall remain upon earth, and, if faithful, shall go down, through their influence on us, to those who follow after. No man is so poor in results but that some word or act lives after him in the minds of his friends to influence them, and, through them, for good or otherwise all those with whom they come into contact.

Particularly rich in lessons of good was the life and influence of my late colleague.

If deeds of kindness can make life a success then Mr. CRUMP'S life was singularly successful and happy, for he ever labored to do justly by others. That great, kindly personality did not deeds of evil; that rugged mind never harbored even thought of evil toward his fellow-men, and that warm, generous heart ever beat in true unison with charity, the queen of the graces, in thought, word, and action, and refused to see evil in others, or seeing appearance of evil refused to believe that good was not somewhere hidden.

Mr. CRUMP'S course in this House, as in every walk of life, was such that no man ever pointed the finger of objection nor of censure to a single act of his, and in his reply to that mandate of the Supreme Master of the Universe, which all of us must some time hear, he cheerfully laid aside the armor of battle and with fortitude and humility passed from earth to that better land "where the weary be at rest."

Of no one more than Mr. CRUMP could it be said, in the language of the proverb, "Seest thou a man diligent in business, he shall stand before kings." He did with his might what his hands found to do, and no one ever doubted where our companion would be found when duty sounded its clarion call and conscience pointed the path.

He never faltered in the faith of his fathers, and when fidelity to principle clashed with selfish, personal interests there was no hesitancy, no backward glances of regret, nor wavering from the line which duty marked.

Possessing the rich heritage of birth, a mind of unusual discernment of right and wrong; trained from boyhood that there was but one way, and that to follow the straight and narrow path, "though rough the way and coarse the fare," he not only lived those precepts in his daily life, of every hour and every year, but so lived them that they shone through his every action and reflected their luster and their influence upon us and all who knew him. To him the pathway was ever clear and the beams of God's directing light illumined the path and inspired his hopes and deeds.

Few knew him as a deep student of the "Book of Books," yet such he was, and in his travels from home he was never without his well-kept copy for constant perusal.

Here in the House we ever knew where to find him, and I doubt if any man was more often at his post of duty, in committee or on the floor, than our late colleague. None ever had need to ask as to Mr. CRUMP. He had ingrained in his sturdy nature that old-fashioned notion that he was here for a definite purpose, to represent those who sent him, and that it was his duty to be here at all times and to keep the faith, as he understood it. Richly possessed with that God-given attribute of "uncommon common sense," he went his way in peace and contentment with all the world, ever satisfied when he had done the best he could do, and always contented if he met the commendation of his own conscience.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Mr. Speaker, again have we assembled for the purpose of paying due and proper respect to the memory of a deceased member. The death of ROUSSEAU O. CRUMP, the Representative from the Tenth Congressional district of Michigan, was a loss not only to the State of Michigan, but to the country as well. His advancement in public life was the inevitable sequence of his commercial career. Born in New York in May, 1843, he grew to manhood amid surroundings and in a society which developed his best characteristics and laid the foundation for an honorable and successful future. With keen and discerning eye he discovered the possibilities for advancement in the developing West, and in 1881 he removed to Bay City, Mich., where he resided until the time of his death.

He took with him to his new home an honest purpose to succeed, an earnest intention to do right, a conscientious determination to so conduct himself as to merit the esteem and confidence of his neighbors and of his associates. His determination to remove from the land of his birth to a newer and more rapidly developing section of the country was the best evidence of his ambitious spirit and his firm purpose to make the most of the opportunities which came to him. He at different times occupied public positions in his city and State, and was first elected to the National Congress in 1894. His reelection in 1896, 1898, and 1900 is strong evidence of the respect and confidence imposed in him by his constituents, and we, who know of his work here, can cheerfully testify to the fact that the confidence of his constituents was not misplaced.

His death was particularly sad to me by reason of the fact that I had been associated with him on the Committee on Railways and Canals and had become quite intimate with him on account of that relationship. In committee he was always genial, kind, and considerate; always conscientious and honest; always ready to perform any duty imposed upon him, no matter how onerous; always striving to perfect proposed legislation, so that the rights of the citizen and the best interests of all the people would be subserved.

Probably one of the strongest temptations which beset a member of this House is the desire to secure legislation which will be of direct and positive benefit to his constituents. Sometimes he is strongly tempted to secure legislation which may be only for the benefit of his constituents. I believe the great majority of the members of this House earnestly try to represent their constituents and to vote upon important legislation as their constituents desire them to do. A member must not forget, however, that he is not here solely for the purpose of securing legislation for his constituents. While he directly represents the people of a certain district and is expected to do that which will meet with their approval, yet in the higher, broader sense he is the representative of all the people and is equally bound to support legislation which he believes will be for the benefit of the whole country.

We who are honored with membership in this House are charged with the responsibility of not only so discharging our duty as to reflect honor upon those who have sent us here, but as well so that the nation as a whole may be benefited. While I honor the Representative who earnestly strives to reflect the wishes of his constituents, yet I more highly honor him who recognizes the fact that we are not here solely to secure legislation for our immediate locality, but are charged with legislating for a great people—citizens of a great country. I have been lead to make this suggestion because in paying my tribute to the memory of Representative CRUMP I want to say that in my opinion no member of this House ever tried more honestly and earnestly to fulfill his high duty to all the people than did he; that no member ever tried more earnestly to secure the passage of measures which would be of benefit to the whole country and to all the people of the country than did he.

While he faithfully represented his district, and while he always kept in mind the wishes of his constituents, yet, so far as I know, when it came to a question of the welfare of the country, the country that he loved and honored, he was always found upon its side striving to do his whole duty in promoting its welfare. Such men leave their imprint upon the records of the country. Such men build not for themselves, but for those who come after them, and the country will always cherish the memory of those who have devoted their energy and their talents to the advancement of its best interests.

I had the honor to be appointed as a member of the committee to represent this House at the funeral of Representative CRUMP. Absence from home prevented my receiving the notice of such appointment in time to reach West Bay City in time for the funeral. I regret this, as I should have been glad to have joined with the members of the Michigan delegation and with others, who gathered at the home of Mr. CRUMP and who stood reverently by his grave bowing their heads in token of their appreciation of his worth. I should have esteemed it an honor to have been able to have dropped upon his grave a sprig of evergreen as a token of my friendship for him and in memory of his kindly conduct toward me.

He has passed on. He has gone to "that realm from which no traveler ever returns." He has solved the mysteries of that "great unknown," concerning which we know so little. He has left behind a family who deeply mourn his death and toward whom we, his friends, extend most generously our sympathy. He left behind a large circle of friends and associates, of brothers in societies of different names, all of whom will not soon forget his many kindly attentions, his deeds of generosity, his words of welcome and of praise—who will not soon forget the example of his noble life and sterling qualities. They are the richer because of their fellowship with him. They are the better because of their association with him. Thus can it be truthfully said, he did not live nor did he die in vain. His life and character stand as beacon lights, pointing the way to an honorable career for those who believe in honesty, in morality, in justice.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Mr. Speaker, this day has been set apart as a mark of respect for the memory of two of our distinguished colleagues. The South and the North unite in paying tribute to faithful public officials with whom we have had the honor to serve.

South Carolina brings its garland of flowers and bestows upon her honored son well-merited praise.

Michigan publicly manifests its deep sorrow over the death of an able, conscientious, and lovable character, represented in the attractive personality of ROUSSEAU O. CRUMP.

We entered Congress together strangers to this great and limitless field of public activity. We early found consolation in one another, and the disappointments which beset this work were easier to bear because of his lovable counsel and his unperturbed disposition. I love to think of him here in this historic Chamber, quietly, modestly performing his duty with no thought of personal aggrandizement or vainglory; kind, thoughtful, and indulgent; generous, manly, and independent in thought and in action, he was a worthy Representative, an honor to his district, his State, and his country.

I never knew him to say an unkind word of any man, and when sickness came upon him he carried his heavy burden alone without complaining; and even those most intimately associated with him here did not realize that the citadel of his life had been attacked by unrelenting and incurable disease.

He met his fate with sturdy heroism, sublime courage, and splendid faith.

We are richer because of his friendship, and Michigan is proud of his untarnished name. He has contributed to the lofty character of our citizenship, and his memory will long linger among us as a delightful benediction.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, "while we are reasoning concerning life it is gone."

The last time I saw Mr. CRUMP alive was near the close of the last Congress.

He was then in feeble health, but still hopeful.

When next I saw him he was lying in state in a bank of flowers at his home at West Bay City, with the afternoon sunlight of a May day shining across the coffin where he lay waiting for the silence of the grave.

The glory of spring was in the air. Nature was beginning over again, but springtime and autumn, seedtime and harvest were alike to him.

"Life was over and the man was dead."

Whether he had reached the beginning of knowledge or the end there was no sign.

In the calendar of the infinite without beginning and without end, where our uttermost past is but current history, human life seems small and human events insignificant.

Into the mouth of one of his characters, Tolstoi puts these words:

In the infinity of time, matter, space, an organic cell forms—lasts a moment, perishes—that cell is myself.

It is singular about this cell, though. Whether we accept the Old Testament version of creation or not, still it is true that this "organic cell" has dominion over all the rest of creation.

This "organic cell" has made the sea a highway, tunneled mountains, and annihilated time and space.

Through the avenues of its five senses it has solved something of the mystery of time, matter, and space around it.

If it had more means of perception doubtless more would be perceived.

There were solar systems before Copernicus worked out his theory; there was gravitation before Newton took a hint from the falling apple, and there was electricity before it flashed down Franklin's kite string, but man had not perceived these things.

The truth has always existed, but man has not always been able to perceive the truth. Man's ability to perceive the truth has changed from generation to generation. It would be foolish to suppose there is nothing left to be discovered.

Around us always is an unknown universe. We emerge from it on one side, cross the stage of life, and disappear into it on the other side. It is not difficult to believe that what we call death is but a continuance and transition, although we can not prove it by reasoning.

This makes the "organic cell" sublime; makes life an opportunity; makes the hopes, passions, poetry, logic, and all the lower traits of man that minister to them of tremendous importance.

And so, when we stand by the open grave, where all artificial human distinctions sink into insignificance, the question is, What of the man? What sort of personality has this "organic cell" taken on?

It is certain we can take nothing away with us unless it be what we are. And although the mental and physical feebleness of senility puzzles the logic of those who believe in the theory of progression, still unless there be progression the discipline which makes us what we are would seem illogical, and all our fights with beasts at Ephesus and beasts within us would seem a cruel farce.

After a man dies the statutes of descent and distribution and the probate court take care of his possessions.

As to his position in history, that depends on whether he has been conspicuous enough to catch the historian's eye, and after he has caught the historian's eye his position depends a good deal on the mental bias of the historian.

We are not historians here. Like Marc Antony: "I only speak right on; I tell you that which you yourselves do know."

I liked Mr. CRUMP while living, and I honor his memory now that he is dead.

What I have to say of him I say with candor, just as I know he would like to have me say it, just as I would like to have him speak of me if I were there and he here.

He was an honest gentleman, incapable of littleness. He never tried to collect dividends from friendship. He was always generous, charitable, true, and modest. He always spoke kindly of others. He never kept a private rack whereon to break the reputations of his acquaintances.

He never made conversation out of the misfortunes of others. He bought no pleasure with another's pain. His word always informed you what he meant to do. He never tried to be somebody else. He never had two sets of opinions, one ostensible, the other real.

He was not a showy man. He was destitute of the art of duplicity or of posing. He was without affectation. We always knew where to find him, and we all liked him.

His heart was big and kind.

As Thoreau once said of John Brown, "He might have left a Greek accent slanting the wrong way, but he would have righted up a fallen man."

He had no craft of rhetoric.

He expressed himself more in deeds than words, but he had strong literary leanings.

He admired Burns not for the purpose of giving himself a literary tone, but because he found in Burns the winged expression of his own feeling.

In his earlier years he had been a millwright and builder. He had upon his hands the honorable scars of his earlier occupation.

He remembered the way by which he had come and sympathized with his fellow-man along the way. He never tried to put up a barrier of false dignity. The people felt that he was one of them.

Later in life he became the employer of labor in large industries, and the men who worked for him were always his friends. He was a successful man in what the world calls success. He had acquired property and worldly position. He held his way with honor and fair dealing to the end.

In days of old it is said there were historians who wrote as they were bribed. Of one Paulus Jovius it was said that he kept a "bank of lies." "To those who paid him liberally he assigned a noble pedigree and illustrious deeds; those who paid nothing he villified and blackened."

In modern political life we sometimes see things analogous to Paulus Jovius's bank of lies, but when a man is gone the tongues of those who can neither gain nor lose by praise or detraction are silent.

In the presence of death all the littleness, meanness, innuendo, sycophancy, and tinsel glorification which frequently hover around a political career fade away, and the reputation of the dead stands for what it is.

In the presence of death crowns are but yellow metal and purple robes but food for moths.

Men take on their true proportions in the republic of the grave, no matter what their tombstones say.

Judged by the Sermon on the Mount, judged by the Ten Commandments, judged by eternal standards, ROUSSEAU O. CRUMP will bear the judgment well.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, when the hammer fell closing the mortal career of ROUSSEAU O. CRUMP, Representative from the Tenth Congressional district of Michigan, it marked the end of the active life of a good man. And goodness, after all, is the supreme test. Wherever in life we find a great man, a man truly great, who leaves a lasting mark upon his day and time, we find a good man. And such was Mr. CRUMP, upon whose life and character we meet this day to place a meager estimate in enduring form in the records of this House.

From memory's rich storehouse we recall the tender eye, the beaming face, the warm hand pressure, the mellow voice, the form of ease and grace, the manly man, who wrought mightily for his district, his State, and the nation. Loved by friends, honored by neighbors, and respected by all, he left a cherished memory. He lived without a foe and died without an enemy, yet in every call upon him he did a man's part.

Early in life he came to Michigan and saw at once in her inland seas, surrounding her like a zone of beauty, which draw the frosts from the air, so that the breezes fall soft as Eden on the peach, the apple, the grape, and the pear; he saw her wealth of primeval forests, her mines, richer in enduring wealth than the diamond fields of South Africa and the mines of Galconda combined; he saw her great water power, with strength sufficient to turn the machinery of a continent, salt wells which might supply the world, a soil that yields bountifully to the touch of the farmer, a climate that stimulates toil; he saw in prophetic vision Michigan some day to be the world's workshop; he saw her schools, her university, her churches at every turn of the road, and here he came to live and to thrive. He watched the growth of the State, and with proud confidence saw and told of her future. He put the plummet line upon her matchless resources and watched with patience for her development. Her lakes were his friends, her forests were his companions. The humming machinery of her mills was music rare to him, for above the anthem he saw happy homes.

He would not have us say much, but such a life must not pass without notice. What I shall say to-day I would say in words as simple as his nature, as sincere as my affection for him to whose memory we pay brief tribute.

His work was without bluster. He went straight to the point, and so many times he won where others would have failed. He grew up from the ranks of the common people. He stole into our affection as a gentle May, as the birds mate, as the flowers open; his kindness came as comes the song of the bird, as comes the fragrance of flowers. There was no one to smooth his pathway in life and make it easy; he wrought for himself and for all about him. He had to work for all he had. He was a student in the great workshop of human toil. He had that rare distinctive gift, God's best gift to man, common sense, common sense instructed, common sense instructed by experience. He did kind deeds almost by stealth; he was as artless as a child, yet in the things he stood for he was as unyielding as flint and true as steel—true in his devotion to principle, in his absorbing love of truth, in his integrity of mind. With courage undaunted he waged the battle of life without a helping hand and won with full measure of success.

Wealth did not narrow him. He had all the advantages of poverty without the burden of it. He grew up among those who struggled, sharing their common lot. He held the most boundless of gifts, better far than great riches—a strong body, a healthy mind, good nature, a gentle spirit, a manly ambition. I count it good fortune that a boy is born poor, for, after all, this world is governed in mind and in morals by those who must toil to win; by those gifts of mind and character best disciplined under the pressure of poverty and work.

He looked the world in the eye. Frank and true, the people knew just where to find him; he concealed nothing.

Socially, he was bashful; a modest, lovable man. A fonder husband, a tenderer father, never lived, and he had ample reward in the unabated love of wife and children.

How aptly we may say with little Nell:

When I die put something near me that loved the light and had the sky above it always.

I can not do better than to quote a poem which expresses the controlling sentiment of his life:

There are hermit souls that live withdrawn in the place of their self-content.
There are souls like stars that dwell apart in a fellowless firmament.
There are pioneer souls that blaze their way where highways never ran;
But let me live by the side of the road and be a friend of man.

I watch from my house by the side of the road, by the side of the highway of life,
The men who press on with the ardor of hope and those who fall faint with the strife;
But I turn not aside for their smiles or their tears—both parts of an infinite plan—
Just let me live by the side of the road and be a friend of man.

Just let me live by the side of the road where the race of men go by;
They are good, they are bad, they are weak, they are strong, wise, foolish, and so am I.
Then why should I sit in the scorner's seat or hurl the cynic's ban;
Just let me live by the side of the road and be a friend of man.

He knelt at the shrine of the people, and they knighted him and crowned him with a crown more lasting and enduring than all of earth's richest diadems, an affectionate regard and high esteem of all who knew him. And now that the book is closed, the account made up, we may say that he had the best of all rewards—the feeling that he played a man's part in the affairs of his time and left a name and a memory which wife and children will reverence and cherish.

I shall always hold it a fortunate circumstance in my life that I was permitted to enjoy his friendship.

Humbly I pay this meager tribute to his memory. He lived well a life of usefulness, of honorable distinction, of worthy example.

We of the Christian faith believe that the power he laid down here he has taken up over there; that he has passed from attainment here to higher attainment over there; from conquest here to larger conquest over there; from love here to richer love over there; from faith here to stronger faith over there. He sleeps the sleep of the just.

We peer beyond the shadows, but we can not see; and yet the cable of human hope carries on the evangile of our faith, and over it is carried our message of love to those who have passed beyond, and to the living comes back the faith that cheers us all.

Mr. APLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general leave to print eulogies on the late Representative CRUMP be granted for thirty days.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PLATT of New York presented a petition of sundry citizens of New York, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the internal-revenue laws relative to the tax on distilled spirits; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Audubon Society of the State of New York, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the protection of game in Alaska, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

He also presented petitions of the East Side Republican Club, of New York City; of the New York Produce Exchange, of New York City; of the executive board of the Bricklayers' Unions of New York City, and of the Republican Club of the Eighteenth Assembly District of New York City, all in the State of New York, praying for the enactment of legislation increasing the pay of letter carriers; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, I present a petition on the subject of Chinese exclusion, from the Chinese Exclusion Commission of the State of California, signed by the president and secretary of that commission. Inasmuch as the commission is the organ of the State of California and the matter to which the petition is directed is now pending before Congress, I ask unanimous consent that it may be published in the RECORD for the information of the Senate.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows;

To the Congress of the United States:

In pursuance of the trust reposed in us by the State of California and the citizens of that Commonwealth represented in convention, we respectfully pray that the Kahn-Mitchell Chinese-exclusion bill, which has passed the House of Representatives, be adopted, and that the Platt substitute bill, which has passed the Senate, be rejected.

I.

In affirmative support of the petition that the Kahn-Mitchell bill be adopted we urge as to that bill:

That it preserves every provision of the present exclusion laws on which the nation is relying for protection against dangerous immigration of Chinese persons; and, by virtue of clear codification, lifts beyond the reach of pending litigation all of such provisions as are now attacked in the Supreme Court of the United States.

That it gives statutory form to a few Treasury rules which should have been statutory always, and which the Bureau of Immigration believes should be made inelastic—rules sharply distinguished from those properly subject to ready alteration.

That it is heedful of the needs springing from aquisition of insular territory since the passage of the exclusion act of 1893, and not only requires (in language not leaving intent disputable) that Chinese persons not of the five treaty-exempted classes shall not enter the insular territory of the United States nor pass thence to the continental territory of the United States nor from one group of islands to another, but provides the machinery for making those prohibitions effective.

That it takes cognizance of unfortunate omissions discovered in the present exclusion laws since 1893 and embodies the appropriate remedial recommendations of the Bureau of Immigration and the Department of Justice.

That it provides protection against the mercenary disregard shown by powerful trans-Pacific steamship corporations for the welfare of Caucasian seamen and the future of the American merchant marine and Navy.

That it contains nothing indicative of a disposition on the part of the United States to modify or to reconsider the exclusion policy, but, on the contrary, by its omission of reference to the year 1904, is in the nature of a notice to the Chinese Empire that this Republic will not in that year ask that the Gresham treaty be then terminated, and will not look with favor on denunciation of that convention by the Emperor of China.

That it has the hostility of those transportation companies, both of land and sea, which from the beginning have antagonized the exclusion policy and which profit in ratio to the defectiveness of the nation's laws relating to undesirable immigration.

That it is opposed by that little group of California capitalists to whom the exclusion policy always has been hateful.

That it comes out of the West, and in its every stage has had the cordial and unwavering support of the tried friends of the exclusion policy.

That its administrative features have the approval of the Bureau of Immigration.

That it has the emphatic indorsement of the author of the Geary Act.

That in the House of Representatives it has the support of every member from the Pacific coast except one, and in the Senate a corresponding bill has been given the support of every Senator from the Pacific coast except one.

That not only is it expressive of the will of the section most familiar with the Chinese question, but hundreds of thousands of the wage-earners of States not directly afflicted with colonies of Chinamen have petitioned the Congress to make it law.

II.

We represent that the Platt bill should be rejected for these reasons:

First. It is not certain that it preserves all of the provisions of the present exclusion laws, and this because (a) the act of September 13, 1888, may be invalid for nonratification of the treaty mentioned in it, and if invalid may be incapable of cure by the language of the bill in that regard; (b) if the act of 1888 be invalid, but can be validated by the language chosen that language would revive the condition precedent by which the trouble was originally caused; (c) the restriction that the text of the Gresham treaty shall be the measure of the laws (and therefore the Treasury rules and regulations) continued in force by the bill might prove to be a restriction cutting away much of the law and practice essential to accomplish what the Government is doing; for though the present statutes and substantially all of the present Treasury rules and regulations were within the knowledge of the negotiators of the treaty of 1894, and though that treaty was intended to give an international sanction to them not afforded by the treaty of 1880, nevertheless it might be argued, in the light of the recent Senate debate on the Chinese question, that the Congress intended by the Platt bill to retire from the position of reading the laws and practice of 1894 into the convention of that year and to cut the exclusion policy to the precise letter of that treaty.

Second. It adds another element of confusion to the disorder of the exclusion laws (laws now scattered in nine acts of Congress), and postpones needlessly the work of codification.

Third. It leaves subject to ready change primary Treasury rules (for instance, those defining the "exempt" classes of Chinese persons) that should never have been left subject to easy change and that ought to be given statutory form at the earliest possible time.

Fourth. It is open to dispute concerning the movements of the Philippine Chinese in that it may be argued that unless expressly included in the general prohibition those Chinese laborers who were in the archipelago at the time of the cession to the United States could not be affected by it, because possessed of rights whereof they could not be divested by implication in that the general prohibition is not stated with desirable clearness, and in that the machinery for making the prohibition effective is not sufficiently provided.

Fifth. It does not define the term "Chinese" so that it shall necessarily include persons of mixed blood as well as those of the full blood, and this omission renders the protection of Hawaii, Porto Rico, and the American mainland against the Philippine Chinese of little practical value, because there are hundreds of thousands of persons having a mixture of Chinese and Filipino blood, and this fact will lead naturally (if the Platt bill be adopted) to the practice of claiming a strain of Filipino blood as the "open sesame" to forbidden territory.

Sixth. It neglects to give the country the benefit of the Government's experience since 1893; and in this respect is notably advantageous to the American and foreign corporations, the Chinese highbinders, and others now profiting by the extensive smuggling of Chinese laborers across the Canadian and Mexican boundaries of the United States.

Seventh. It refuses to give just protection to the American seamen against that corporate greed which is relentlessly driving them from the Pacific Ocean and making American ships training schools for an Asiatic navy.

Eighth. It holds the qualities of an invitation to China to denounce the Gresham treaty in 1904.

Ninth. It has the endorsement of the railway and steamship companies hostile to the exclusion policy, and their lobbyists have been its most industrious friends.

Tenth. It has the hall-mark of those California capitalists (and of no other Californians) who would rejoice to see the exclusion policy weakened or destroyed.

Eleventh. It came out of New England in a spirit of intolerance of the bill put forth by the West.

Twelfth. It lacks the approval of the Government's experts in the departments having to do with Chinese immigration.

Thirteenth. It has been directly condemned by the author of the Geary Act.

Fourteenth. In the Senate, where alone it has been debated, it has been opposed by the foremost friends of the exclusion policy, including every Senator from the Pacific coast except one.

Fifteenth. Not only is it in opposition to the will of the section most vitally interested in the racial and industrial problem to which it relates, but it has been expressly denounced by organized labor throughout the country, regardless of State lines.

III.

We believe that the policy of excluding from American territory all Chinese persons who are hurtful of the laboring classes of this country should be continued, whatever may be the will or the interest of China, and that American commerce should know beyond doubt that its growth is not to be encouraged by such means as require modification or abandonment of that policy. Our highest duty as a nation is to prevent impairment of the welfare of our common people and to remove obstacles to their further progress, for the value and the distinction of America are not so much in its wealthy and leisure orders as in its toilers.

We can not but regard the Platt bill, its painful and reluctant evolution considered, as saying to the world that the Congress, in so far as it favors that measure, is disposed to hesitate; is inclined to reopen the question in 1904; is willing to weigh the exclusion system against bolts of cloth and tins of kerosene; is leaning with somewhat of longing toward the cheap and servile labor of the yellow race; is tempted to resolve in favor of that race and against the workers of America every shadow of doubt on niceties of international comity.

If it be said that the bill we favor is severe in its provisions, we answer that it is not more so than the present laws and practice. If it be urged that some of the present laws and practices are repugnant to the Gresham treaty, we reply that the most rigorous of the existing rules were established prior to the signing of that treaty and that it is highly improbable the United States would have ratified the convention had it not been assumed as of course that there was no disposition on the part of the Chinese Empire to regard the treaty as repealing them.

Neither the present laws and practices nor the bill we advocate can be said to be needlessly harsh. The severities are such only as experience has demonstrated to be essential to keep out of American territory those Chinese persons China and the United States have solemnly agreed shall not come within this country. The wonderful deceptiveness of the oriental makes it imperative that the exclusion laws be designed with a view to Asiatic cunning and deceit; and condemnation is not justly to be visited on the American people for enacting and enforcing such laws, but is due the people whose bad faith imposes on this nation the need of them.

Hopeful that the Congress will give this subject such careful consideration as shall persuade it of the value and temperateness of the Kahn-Mitchell bill and disclose to it the weakness and inadequacy of the Platt bill, your petitioners subscribe themselves, with much respect to the distinguished body addressed,

CHINESE-EXCLUSION COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA,
By JAMES H. BUDD, Chairman,
EDWARD J. LIVERNASH, Secretary.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 28, 1902.

Mr. HARRIS. I present a telegraphic dispatch from the Kansas Millers' Association, relative to relief being granted to them through reciprocity concessions. I ask that the dispatch may be read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the dispatch was read, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

[Telegram.]

WICHITA, KANS., April 27, 1902.

Hon. W. A. HARRIS, Senate, Washington:

Kansas millers, on account of foreign discriminations, with the best wheat in the world at their door, are not producing over one-third of their capacity. Unless your Committee on Foreign Relations can give us relief through reciprocity concessions, placing our millers on an equal basis with foreign mills, many of our mills will shut down indefinitely and some of them will be forced to the wall. In our distress we look to our Senators for relief.

GEORGE M. RANDALL,
Secretary Kansas Millers' Association.

REPORT ON PARIS EXPOSITION OF 1900.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report a concurrent resolution, and I ask for its present consideration.

The concurrent resolution was read, and considered by unanimous consent, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound in paper 2,000 additional copies of Senate Document 232, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, being the report of the Commissioner-General for the United States to the International Universal Exposition, Paris, 1900, in six volumes, 500 of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 1,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 500 for distribution by the Office of the Commissioner-General.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator reporting the resolution if those are all the copies we will get?

Mr. PLATT of New York. Those are all that we will get.

Mr. COCKRELL. There will be no additional number printed?

Mr. PLATT of New York. No; it is not deemed necessary.

Mr. COCKRELL. That will give only about five copies to a Senator. If the report is worth printing, it is worth printing in sufficient number to distribute it to more places than that number will allow.

Mr. PLATT of New York. It is thought that this number is all that is absolutely necessary.

Mr. COCKRELL. It seems to me if we go to the expense of printing a document of that kind we ought to print enough to distribute it in greater numbers than five copies to each Senator.

Mr. FORAKER. What is the document?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is a report on the Paris Exposition.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I will accept any amendment the Senator from Missouri may suggest.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to just double the number for the Senate and House, whatever it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out "two" where it appears before "thousand" and insert "three thousand five hundred;" strike out "five hundred" where it appears and insert "one thousand," and strike out "one thousand" where it appears and insert "two thousand."

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, let the Secretary read the resolution the way it will stand if amended as I propose.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution as proposed to be amended, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound in cloth 3,500 additional copies of Senate Document 232, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, being the Report of the Commissioner-General for the United States to the International Universal Exposition, Paris, 1900, in six volumes, 1,000 of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 500 for distribution by the office of the Commissioner-General.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. I notice that the words "bound in paper" are in the resolution. If we are going to reprint a valuable document, what is the use to make a pamphlet of it? Why not have it bound in cloth?

Mr. PLATT of New York. No one has asked to have it bound in cloth.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Missouri seems to think there will be a demand for it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I did not notice the provision about binding. There will be very little difference in cost between the two forms of binding.

Mr. TILLMAN. The difference in cost amounts to scarcely anything, and the document is certainly no good in paper.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to strike out "in paper" and to insert "in cloth."

Mr. PLATT of New York. I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment inserting the words "in cloth" is accepted. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution as amended.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

CLAIM OF HERRERA'S NEPHEWS.

Mr. CULLOM. Some days ago Senate Document No. 318, Fifth-seventh Congress, first session, being a letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the Senate of March 26, 1902, correspondence relating to the seizure of certain vessels and the occupation and use of wharves and warehouses at Santiago de Cuba, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], who called for this report, I think, made a mistake in having it referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and desired really to have it referred to the Committee on Claims. I move that the Committee on Foreign Relations be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. CARMACK was, on his own motion, excused from further service upon the Committee on Education and Labor.

executors of the estate of Henry Lee, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Finance.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. HANSBROUGH submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,000 to enable the Episcopal Eye, Ear, and Throat Hospital to provide medical and surgical treatment to persons unable to pay therefor, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DILLINGHAM submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 of the $100,000 made by the act of Congress of March 1, 1901, to enable the Secretary of War to purchase the Isham high-explosive shell, intended to be proposed by him to the fortifications appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MARTIN submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of draftsman for assessor's office from $1,200 to $1,400, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PRITCHARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. Mr. HEITFELD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 4861) to regulate the assessment and collection of personal taxes in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS.

Mr. CLAPP. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate on Saturday passed the bill (S. 312) providing that the circuit court of appeals of the eighth judicial circuit of the United States shall hold at least one term of said court annually in the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado, or in the city of Cheyenne, in the State of Wyoming, on the first Monday in September in each year.

The facts concerning this matter are as follows: On Saturday morning I gave notice of an amendment, which was offered and ordered to be printed and to lie on the table. I called the attention of the Senator having the bill in charge, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], to it, and did not anticipate that the bill would come up on Saturday. It came up on Saturday, and was passed without this amendment, the amendment at that time being before the Senate and on the table. I therefore move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota enters a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed on Saturday. He also moves that the House of Representatives be requested to return the bill to the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (H. R. 2063) amending an act creating the middle district of Pennsylvania; and

A bill (H. R. 12648) establishing a regular term of United States district court in Roanoke City.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Territories:

A bill (H. R. 13076) to apportion the term of office of Senators elected at the first general election in the Territory of Hawaii; and

A bill (H. R. 12797) to ratify act numbered 65 in the twenty-first Arizona legislature.

The bill (H. R. 1964) to provide for a light-house keeper's dwelling, Ecorse range-light station, Detroit River, in the State of Michigan, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 5183) granting an increase of pension to William Holdridge, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 113) authorizing the use and improvement of Governors Island, Boston Harbor, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

IMITATION DAIRY PRODUCTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives agreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9206) to make oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of any State or Territory, or the District of Columbia, into which they are transported, and to change the tax on oleomargarine, and to amend an act entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exchange of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886, numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, and 11, and agreeing to amendment numbered 9, with amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments have been read.

Mr. TELLER. There seemed to be a little question on Saturday as to where my amendment ought to come in. The copy of the bill I have does not seem to have the amendments numbered; page 2 of the bill, line 25, seems to be a proper place. I believe that is what is called the ninth amendment. I move my amendment at that point.

Mr. President, I do not desire to debate this question. I should like to get a vote on it. As far as I am concerned, I have no disposition to delay the bill. There is nothing to be gained by such a course that I know of. I did not vote for the bill, and I would not vote for it now. If I had an opportunity, I would vote against it.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to know the parliamentary status of the bill. How is it before us at this time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill came from the House of Representatives and was amended in the Senate. It went to the House. The House agreed to certain of the amendments and returned it to the Senate with certain other amendments. The bill is on the table of the President of the Senate, and it has been by him laid before the Senate, as is usual in such cases.

Mr. CULBERSON. Should it not be referred to a committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not necessarily. It is for the Senate to say what shall be done with it.

Mr. CULBERSON. If it is not to be referred should it not go on the Calendar?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No disposition has been yet made of it. It was laid before the Senate by the Presiding Officer this morning.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask if, under the rule, the bill ought not to go to the Calendar?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no rule which requires the Senate to refer it or anything else. The rule simply requires the Presiding Officer to lay the bill before the Senate with the action of the House thereon. The Presiding Officer has laid it before the Senate, and the Senator from Colorado offers an amendment to one of the House amendments.

Mr. ALLISON rose.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to know the status of the bill. There seems to be some question about it. I understand that the bill came from the House and went to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It did not. It remained on the President's table, and was laid by him before the Senate on Saturday. Then by unanimous consent it still remained on the President's table. The President of the Senate has this morning again laid it before the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. Has there been unanimous consent given this morning to consider it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There has been no consent at all. It was the duty of the Chair, under what took place on Saturday, to lay it before the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. Should not the bill properly go to the committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is for the Senate to determine.

Mr. CULBERSON. I move that the bill, with the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. TELLER. That seems to be the proper way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion takes precedence of the motion to amend.

Mr. ALLISON. I was about to make the same inquiry made just now by the Senator from Colorado. I find that the bill was laid upon our tables as having been printed by order of the Senate on Saturday, but I do not see the original House bill nor do I see the amendments of the Senate to the original House bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The original House bill is on the table.

Mr. ALLISON. Did the Chair lay the original House bill before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did this morning,

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. Then the print does not show the condition of the bill; that is all.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to say one word. I was under the impression when I offered the amendment that the bill had been to the committee and had been reported from the committee to the Senate. I find that I was entirely mistaken about that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would have gone to the Calendar if that had been the fact.

Mr. TELLER. That is the reason why I insisted that the Calendar was the place for it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas moves the reference of the bill to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. That is the question before the Senate.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, there seems to be a little apprehension about the action of the Senate. When the bill was before the Senate, the Senate did not adopt a substitute bill, but we made an important amendment and several minor ones, eleven in all. The House agreed to all the amendments but one, and that is the amendment which has been reprinted here. That amendment they agreed to with certain amendments not important in character. That amendment, which we proposed to them did not touch oleomargarine at all. It was simply in regard to process, renovated, and adulterated butter. When it came back here with the proposals of amendment, I consulted with the members of the committee, and all the minority said, and I so announced, that the amendments were unimportant and did not harm the bill from their standpoint. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] made the same statement on the floor. The minority members said that the House amendments were an improvement rather than otherwise, and that they were ready to have me ask to have the Senate agree to the amendments. I accordingly did so.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if I understand the situation about the bill aright the House bill came over here, and to that bill we made sundry amendments. The bill went back, with our amendments, to the House, inviting the concurrence of the House. The House concurred in ten amendments, and concurred in the eleventh with an amendment.

Therefore the motion (if I am wrong I can easily be corrected) to concur with the House amendment takes precedence of all others. A motion to concur with the House amendment with an amendment would come next. Surely a motion to concur must take precedence of all others, because it is a motion looking toward a conclusion, bringing about an agreement of the Houses, which is the purpose of all legislation. I do not know whether a motion to concur has been made.

Mr. PROCTOR. I made a motion to concur.

Mr. LODGE. I understood that the Senator from Vermont made a motion to concur. Does not the motion to concur in the amendments of the other House always take precedence of every other motion, because it is the first to bring about an agreement?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that it does not, but that a motion to amend takes precedence of a motion to concur, because the Senate might refuse to concur without amendment and might desire to concur if an amendment was made. The motion made by the Senator from Texas takes precedence of any of the other motions, and that is to refer the bill to the committee. That is the question before the Senate.

Mr. PROCTOR. The bill as it came from the House has been before the committee, but not by action of the Senate. It has been before a regularly called meeting of the committee, and as I stated when the matter was up Saturday——

Mr. CULBERSON. I desire to ask the Senator if any committee has considered the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado to the bill?

Mr. PROCTOR. The reprint of the House was before the committee and examined by the members, and they instructed me to move to concur, as I stated.

Mr. CULBERSON. I refer to the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Colorado, that has been printed and is on our desks this morning.

Mr. PROCTOR. That has not been before the committee.

Mr. CULBERSON. That has not been before the committee, and it is a very important amendment. It seems to me that it ought to be considered by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on referring the bill and amendments to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me that the consideration of the bill by the committee, it not having been referred to them, was entirely irregular and does not amount to anything. That is the way I got the idea that the committee had reported it back to the Senate. If the Senate did not send the bill to the committee, but retained it on the table, the committee had no jurisdiction of the bill, of course, and the motion now to send it to the committee is a perfectly proper motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] to refer the bill to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. TELLER and Mr. CULBERSON demanded the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLLIVER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY], who is absent. I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON], and will vote "nay."

Mr. SCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO). If he were present, I should vote "nay." I withhold my vote, not knowing how he would vote on this question.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. I will explain that my colleague [Mr. MONEY] is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. ELKINS. I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. BERRY] is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. BARD] is unavoidably absent on account of illness. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the negative). I inadvertently voted, not observing the absence of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], with whom I have a pair. I will transfer my pair to the junior Senator from California [Mr. BARD], and let my vote stand.

Mr. PETTUS (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. As he has not voted, I will withdraw my vote.

Mr. MALLORY. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. TALIAFERRO] is paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT]. My colleague is unavoidaby absent from the city.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 35; as follows:

So the motion to refer was not agreed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] offers an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. LODGE. I intended to ask what is the precise motion that is now pending. In submitting the point of order, which I did a few moments ago as to the precedence of motions, I merely wanted to know if the pending motion is a motion to concur or to concur with an amendment. That takes precedence of a motion to refer to a committee, of course, because the motion to concur promotes an agreement between the two Houses, and the motion to refer, of course, delays an agreement, and agreement is the object of all legislation. Now, I want to know precisely what the motion is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending motion is to amend the House amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Is it to amend or to concur with an amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; the motion is simply to amend, as the Chair understands the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, a motion is pending, coming over from the last day's session of the Senate, to concur in the House amendment.

Mr. LODGE. That takes precedence.

Mr. NELSON. Under this condition the amendment of the Senator from Colorado would not be in order, except to concur with an amendment. It can not be in order as a naked amendment. It must be in the nature of a motion to concur with an amendment and not merely to amend.

Mr. LODGE. That is the point I desire to make.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, you will remember that I made a motion to concur on Saturday before the motion to amend was submitted by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. COCKRELL. But the motion was not entered.

Mr. TELLER. That is a mistake. I made my motion before the Senator from Vermont made his.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is right.

Mr. TELLER. But no matter whether I did or did not, a motion to concur does not prevent an amendment.

Mr. PROCTOR. I think, Mr. President, that the Senator from Colorado will remember, if he will recall the order, that my first motion was to concur. I afterwards made a motion to nonconcur and to ask for a conference with the House of Representatives. The first motion was made before the amendment was offered by the Senator from Colorado, and the last one afterwards.

Mr. TELLER. The Chair has distinctly stated that my amendment is in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado is in order.

Mr. TELLER. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Jefferson's Manual is very distinct on this point. It says:

A motion to amend an amendment from the other House takes precedence of a motion to agree or disagree.

The Chair recognizes the Senator from Colorado to offer the amendment, which will be read.

Mr. LODGE. On that point I wish to inquire, is it simply a motion to amend that takes precedence, or a motion to concur or nonconcur with an amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A motion to amend, as Jefferson says.

Mr. LODGE. Simply a motion to amend takes precedence of a motion to concur?

Mr. COCKRELL. That has been the universal rule of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I do not understand, and I never could understand, the mysteries of parliamentary law respecting this class of amendments. I should like to have the amendment read, and its connection with the text of the bill or with the House amendment.

As I understand the position of the bill, this is not an amendment to an amendment in the sense of the rule just read by the Chair. There was an amendment made by the Senate to the bill of the House, that amendment went to the House of Representatives, and it was concurred in with an amendment, as I understand, in the House. Therefore, the text of the Senate amendment, it seems to me, is beyond the consideration of the Senate at this time. Otherwise this bill would not be passed until doomsday. If an original amendment is now in order to this bill, as proposed, as I understand, by the Senator from Colorado, there can be no end to this bill. Therefore, I desire to know what the amendment of the Senator from Colorado is and to what it is an amendment. It may be that I do not understand it at all, but I want to say that if the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, as an independent amendment, is now in order, any future amendment that may be offered by any other Senator will be in order on this bill, and we never can reach an end to it. That seems to me, with all deference to other Senators, is a proceeding which has never been adopted. I shall characterize it in no other form.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Iowa has been out of town for a few days?

Mr. ALLISON. I have been.

Mr. TELLER. And he is not informed as to the facts, as he might have been if he had looked at the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I want to say, if the Senator will allow me, that I have looked at the RECORD, which I suppose is a correct interpretation of what has occurred during my absence—otherwise the RECORD is not a true portrayal or picture of what we are doing here from day to day.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the House amendment is to be found at the bottom of page 2 of the print of the bill I have; but there seems to be another print, where it is to be found on page 6. The House concurred in the amendment of the Senate and then added this amendment, which we have neither concurred in nor nonconcurred in. The House concurred in the Senate amendment in part, and a part of it they amended. Then they offered this as an independent amendment. If we can not now amend that, then, if that be the parliamentary law, we allow the House to force upon us a proposition in the bill or else compel us to defeat the bill. That, I am quite sure, is not the parliamentary rule.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator misunderstands me, or I may not understand the facts in this case, as I was not present on Saturday. Now, I ask if the Senator will allow me, so that I may understand the situation, that the action in the House be read, so as to ascertain exactly what was done by that body.

Mr. TELLER. I think the Chair is cognizant of the parliamentary situation, and I think the Chair has decided.

Mr. ALLISON. That may be true.

Mr. TELLER. The Chair understands my motion. All I ask is to have a vote upon it. I do not want to delay this matter at all.

Mr. SPOONER. I suppose the Senator from Iowa has a right to ask that the amendment be read, if he so desires.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly. I have no objection to its being read. I did not know that that was his request. I thought the Senator wanted the record of the House proceedings read, which I have never known to be done in this body.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to place myself right as respects the situation of this bill. The bill was originally sent here from the House, was amended by the Senate, returned to the House, and the amendment of the Senate was amended by the House. The record of that proceeding in the House is on our table, and I ask that it may be read, so as to become a part of the observations I intend to make on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, before the amendment is read, I want to ask at what point of the House amendment the amendment of the Senator from Colorado is to be made—where it is to be inserted? It can not be added to our section as a whole; it must be made to the House amendment, and I want to know where it comes in.

Mr. TELLER. I have distinctly named where it comes in, as the Senator would have known if he had paid attention.

Mr. LODGE. I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. TELLER. It comes in at the bottom of page 2 of the print of the bill I have.

Mr. LODGE. That is what I wanted to know.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Colorado was first offered to the bill as an additional section, and it was ruled out by the Chair. It was then proposed as an amendment to a House amendment, and the Chair ruled that it was in order as an amendment to the House amendment. The Secretary will read the action of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to ask a question for information, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Is the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado amendable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not. That would be an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Later I will suggest some changes in the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, which I hope he will adopt.

Mr. TELLER. I do not deny but that my amendment is open to amendment. It should be perfected before it is voted on, of course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the action of the House of Representatives.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
April 24, 1902.

Resolved, That the House agrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9206) entitled "An act to make oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia into which they are transported, and to change the tax on oleomargarine, and to amend an act entitled 'An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine,' approved August 2, 1886," Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, and 11, and agrees to amendment No. 9 with amendments as follows:

Strike out line 16, page 3, down to and including line 2, page 4:

In lines 5, 6, and 7, page 4, after "year," strike out "the payment of which shall cover the tax upon the manufacture of both articles;"
In line 13, page 4, after "annum," insert "Every person who sells adulterated butter in less quantities than 10 pounds at one time shall be regarded as a retail dealer in adulterated butter;"
In lines 14 and 15, page 4, strike out "Dealers in adulterated butter shall pay $48 per year;"
In line 18, page 8, insert before "All parts" a section number as follows: "Sec. 5;"
In line 18, page 8, strike out "meat" and insert "meats;"
In lines 8 and 9, page 9, after "same," strike out "for exportation or transmission from one State to another;"
In line 9, page 9, after "process," insert "or renovated;"
In line 10, page 9, after "marked with," amend the Senate amendment down to and including "manner," line 11, so as to read: "the words 'Renovated Butter' or 'Process Butter,' and by such other marks, labels, or brands, and in such manner;"
In line 2, page 10, after "States," insert "or in course of exportation or shipment;" and Change "Sec. 5" to "Sec. 6," and "Sec. 6" to "Sec. 7."

Mr. ALLISON. Now, Mr. President, as I understand, the Senator from Colorado proposed an amendment to an amendment of the House of Representatives. I ask that that proposed amendment to the House amendment may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado has proposed an amendment to an amendment of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment of the House of Representatives as printed on April 26, on page 2 of the amendment, line 25, after the word "act," in the line "'adulterated butter' as defined by this act," by inserting the following:

That every agreement, contract, or combination between persons or corporations which has for its object and purpose, in whole or in part, the creation of a monopoly in butter, or which tends to create a monopoly by preventing full and free competition in the importation, manufacture, or transportation of butter, or which shall have for its object and purpose the advancing of the cost of butter to the consumers, is hereby declared to be a trust; and there shall be levied and collected annually, upon the capital and assets, and also upon the products of every such butter trust as defined by this section, a tax of 10 per cent, and no drawback for such taxes when they have been paid shall be allowed for export. All the provisions of law in reference to internal-revenue taxes, so far as the same are applicable, shall apply to this tax and to the persons, partnerships, corporations, trusts, and combinations upon which it is imposed.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to occupy any time, except to say that the amendment of the Senator from Colorado not only materially changes the amendment which was reserved and not agreed to by the House, but it affects, also, every provision of the bill, as I understand it, and therefore it is new matter inserted in a particular place as an amendment to an amendment of the House, changing the character of this bill. It may be that the amendment is in order. If it is, I shall certainly vote against it as being inconsistent with what has been done in the two Houses after a debate covering a period of more than a month.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] to the amendment of the House of Representatives.

Mr. TELLER. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ELKINS. I want to offer an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not in order.

Mr. ELKINS. Can not the friends of the oleomargarine bill get in an amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A further amendment is not now in order, as it would be an amendment in the third degree. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado to the amendment of the House of Representatives, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who is temporarily absent, but I transfer that pair to the Senator from California [Mr. BARD], and vote "nay."

Mr. DOLLIVER (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON], and vote "nay."

Mr. PETTUS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. RAWLINS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA]. I will transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON], and vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I inquire whether the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am paired with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK], but I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. DRYDEN], and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SPOONER subsequently said: I had forgotten that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. DRYDEN], to whom I transferred my pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK], had voted against this bill, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. MALLORY (when Mr. TALIAFERRO'S name was called). I again announce that my colleague [Mr. TALIAFERRO] is unavoidably absent from the city. He is paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT]. If present, my colleague would vote "yea" on this amendment.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. I understand from Senators on that side of the Chamber that if he were present he would vote "nay," and I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. CULBERSON. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. BAILEY] is paired with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. My colleague is unavoidably absent from the Senate to-day. Were he present and voting, he would vote "yea" on this amendment.

Mr. HARRIS (after having voted in the negative). I should like to inquire if the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], with whom I am paired, has voted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Wyoming to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. HANNA (after having voted in the negative). I understand that during my absence my pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] has been covered by a transfer to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON], and I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. BERRY] is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS]. If present, my colleague would vote "yea" on this amendment.

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 28; as follows:

So Mr. TELLER'S amendment to the amendment of the House of Representatives was rejected.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the amendments of the House of Representatives and ask for a further conference, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand the committee have looked over the House amendments and have agreed to them. That was the statement made, and I therefore move to concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] moves that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives, which motion to concur takes precedence, and the question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

HOWARD LODGE, I. O. O. F.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar under Rule VIII is in order, and the first bill on the Calendar will be stated.

The bill (S. 92) for the relief of Howard Lodge No. 13, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Gallatin, Tenn., was announced as first in order.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. LODGE. Does that bill come up by unanimous consent, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not. It comes up in its regular order on the Calendar.

Mr. LODGE. Then we have reached that point on the Calendar?

Mr. BATE. It is the regular order on the Calendar, being the point reached on Saturday last.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to have the report in that case read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. TALIAFERRO on the 23d instant, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 92) for the relief of Howard Lodge, No. 13, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Gallatin, Tenn., beg leave to report as follows:

Howard Lodge, No. 13, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, according to the testimony of witnesses who are spoken of as men of good character and standing, and whose statements are entitled to full credit, owned at Gallatin, Tenn., during the civil war the following property:

(1) A three-story brick house, with two stores on the first floor, a public hall on the second floor, and lodge rooms on the third floor.

(2) The Howard Female Institute, furnished and used as a female college and boarding school, the grounds laid off and planted in shrubbery and lawns, with suitable fences, outhouses, hothouse, stable, and shed, this property estimated to be worth between $20,000 and $25,000.

The first piece of property, according to the evidence presented, was taken possession of by the Federal troops in 1862, and used as storehouse and for hospital purposes until the close of the war. The store furnishings, consisting of counters and shelving, were removed from the first floor, the camp regalia and furniture of the lodge rooms were destroyed, and damage was done to the building itself during the occupancy by the troops.

The second piece of property, the same witnesses say, was occupied by Federal troops from November, 1862, to August, 1865. The hothouse, stable, fences, outhouses, etc., were destroyed and used in the construction of pesthouses for the Federal troops. The furniture of the main building was destroyed during the occupancy by the troops, papering and plastering torn off the walls, and nothing left but the bare walls of the building itself.

The lodge claims damages to the extent of $7,448, of which $3,300 is asked as rent for the college property for a period of thirty-three months.

The valuation of the damage was appraised by citizens of Gallatin, Tenn., and their report, presented herewith, deals with each particular item, and in none of them do the charges seem to be unreasonable. On the other hand, they appear to be fair, equitable, and just. Of this committee, C. B. Wright, one of the witnesses, whose affidavit has been presented to your committee, says:

"Of the committee who made the report as to the damages of the college and lodge property, C. E. Bodie is dead, B. F. Allen still lives here, and Mr. Mills lives in the North somewhere. He was a Northern man and Union man during the war. Judge Hermans is dead, T. C. Trimble is dead, and William Wright is dead. They were all Union men. I was postmaster here for several years during and after the war. Mr. Trimble was superintendent of the Freedman's Bureau, and Judge Hermans was county judge."

Your committee beg leave to report the bill favorably and to recommend that it pass.

Mr. LODGE. I hope the bill may go over for the present. I have read the report. It seems to be of the vaguest kind. It merely states the amount claimed by the claimants. There are no itemized accounts. No details whatever are given. I should like to have the bill go over for the present until I can look into it further.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that it may go over without prejudice.

Mr. LODGE. Without prejudice.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, perhaps the Senator from Massachusetts does not know that this bill came up Saturday and went over for the same reason. Now it is the first in order on the Calendar, and I think it ought to be disposed of, unless the Senator from Massachusetts has some grave reasons to the contrary. I think he will find as the report shows, on the testimony of Union men who were living there at the time, that the United States forces took this college and made use of it as a hospital for smallpox patients. I think $20,000 would not be considered too much, and some of the witnesses say so. But it is put at $7,000, and every item is proved in a manner which should be accepted. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will not object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to look into it a little further. The report gives only a general statement of the claims, and what the claimants think they ought to have. I should like to have the bill go over without prejudice, so that I can look at it further.

Mr. BATE. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts objects, and the bill will go over without prejudice.

INDIANS ON ROSEBUD RESERVATION, S. DAK.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I have been anxious to accommodate my friend, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE], by taking up a bill which stands first on the Calendar under Rule VIII. I do not think there is time to dispose of it this morning. I give notice that to-morrow morning, immediately after the routine business, I will ask the Senate to consider the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. What is the bill?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It is the bill (S. 2992) to ratify an agreement with the Sioux tribe of Indians of the Rosebud Reservation, in South Dakota, and making appropriation to carry the same into effect.

LEGAL DEVISEES OF JAMES W. SCHAUMBURG.

The bill (S. 1191) for the relief of the legal devisees of James W. Schaumburg was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the legal devisees of James W. Schaumburg, deceased, the amount of the pay and allowance of a first lieutenant of dragoons from July 1, 1836, to March 24, 1845.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report in the case be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. WARREN on the 23d instant, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1191) for the relief of the legal devisees of James W. Schaumburg, having had the same under consideration, beg to submit the following report:

This claim has been pending since the Forty-seventh Congress, at which time it was first introduced, and it has been favorably reported by both House and Senate nearly every Congress during that period. It has passed the Senate seven times, but has never succeeded in reaching final consideration in the House. The merits of the claim have been repeatedly set forth in the many reports made from this committee, but as the salient points have been presented by the House Committee on Claims during this present session, your committee adopt the House report and report back the bill and recommend its passage with the following amendment:

Strike out the words "eleven thousand one hundred and sixty-five," in the twelfth line of said bill, and insert in lieu thereof the words "ten thousand eight hundred and sixty-five."

The report referred to is as follows:

"The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2218) for the relief of the legal devisees of James W. Schaumberg, beg leave to submit the following report and recommend that said bill do pass with an amendment as follows:

"Strike out the words 'eleven thousand one hundred and sixty-five,' in the eleventh and twelfth lines of said bill, and insert in lieu thereof the words 'ten thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.'

"The facts on which this bill is based are fully stated in prior reports of committees made to the House. Sufficient of these to give an understanding of the bill are here restated, as follows:

"From a report of the Committee on War Claims made to the House in the Fifty-second Congress:

"'This bill provides for the payment of an amount found due the claimant by the courts of the United States.

"'The service was rendered by the claimant as first lieutenant of United States Dragoons from July, 1836, to March 24, 1845.

"'The United States circuit court for the eastern district of Pennsylvania found this amount to be due in an action between the United States and the claimant in 1874.

"'The judgment was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States. The case is reported in the 103 United States Supreme Court Reports, page 667.'

"This was in 1880.

"'On the 11th of July, 1882, the Secretary of the Treasury transmitted the claim to Congress, asking for an appropriation, as follows:

"'TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
"'Washington, D. C., July 11, 1882.

"'SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith copies of papers in the claim of James W. Schaumburg for pay and allowance as lieutenant of dragoons from July 1, 1836, to March 24, 1845, and to recommend that authority be given to the accounting officers of the Treasury to audit and allow the same, and that an appropriation of $11,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be provided for its payment.

"'Very respectfully,
"'CHARLES J. FOLGER,
"'Secretary.

"'Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
"'Chairman Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

"'The Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. C. S. Fairchild, again recommended the payment of the claim to the Appropriation Committee under date of February 15, 1889.

"'It was referred to the Committee on Claims in the Senate, and passed the Senate March 19, 1888.

"'The bill again passed the Senate April 19, 1890.

"'It again passed the Senate at the present session of Congress, April 12, 1892.'" (Senate bill 261.)

"A similar bill to the one now under consideration has been before Congress since 1882, and has been reported favorably many times by committees of the House and Senate, but has never reached a final vote in both Houses.

"The following statement is contained in a report of the Committee on Claims to the House in the Forty-ninth Congress:

"'That said Schaumburg was commissioned a first lieutenant of the First Regiment of Dragoons on the 1st day of July, 1836, but, notwithstanding, the military officials of the War Department refused to assign him to duty. Against this decision he appealed to President Tyler, who, on the 11th day of January, 1844, ordered him to be recognized and his name printed at the head of the list of first lieutenants in the Army Register for 1845.

"'On the 19th of March, 1845, the Senate passed a resolution that such recognition was illegal and void and that Lieutenant Schaumburg's name ought not to be continued on the roll of the Army.

"'In pursuance of this resolution the Secretary of War announced, March 24, 1845, that the President directed that Lieutenant Schaumburg's name should be erased from the Army Register.

"'On the 2d of March, 1849, the Senate repealed and rescinded said resolution, and resolved that the order of the President made by reason of said resolution should be revoked, and declared that Schaumburg had been improperly dismissed from the Army and was entitled to a commission as captain in the First Regiment Dragoons. This resolution was followed by a memorial signed by 36 of the most distinguished members of the Senate recommending Lieutenant Schaumburg for promotion. This, however, was not done, and Lieutenant Schaumburg was not reinstated.

"'Mr. Schaumburg claims that he is entitled to recover from the United States his salary as first lieutenant of dragoons from the time he was commissioned, on the 1st day of July, 1836, to the time he was removed by the order of President Tyler, on the 24th of March, 1845.

"'Your committee further find that Lieutenant Schaumburg, in the year 1860, was appointed a paymaster in the United States Army; that he continued as such until he resigned in 1863.

"'Subsequently, and in the year 1874, suit was brought by the United States in the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Philadelphia against the said James W. Schaumburg and his sureties upon his bond executed by him and such sureties for the faithful performance of his duties as such paymaster, in which suit it was claimed that said Schaumburg and his sureties were indebted to the United States for default in the performance of the conditions of said bond in the sum of $306.30.

"'To this claim the said Schaumburg interposed a plea that the United States was indebted to him in the sum of $68,140.70 for undrawn pay and emoluments due him as first lieutenant in the First Regiment of Dragoons from the time he was commissioned as such as aforesaid to the commencement of said action.

"'Thereupon issue was duly joined, and afterwards, at a session of said court held at the city of Philadelphia before the Hon. John Cadwalder, judge of the district court of the United States for said district, on the 23d day of November, A. D. 1875, the said issue came on to be tried by a jury of said district, and having been so tried, the court instructed the jury as follows:

* * * * * * *

"'"That the defendant was from the 1st of July, 1836, until the 24th of March, 1845, in the military service of the United States as a first lieutenant of dragoons or cavalry, and that he is entitled as such to credit for the pay and emoluments accrued during this period.

"'"That as this credit was admitted to exceed the whole of the plaintiff's demand, the verdict should be for the defendant."'

"In this action was adjudged that there was due the claimant on the claim presented by him the sum of $11,165.31, which, being reduced by the amount of $300, recognized as due the Government, left a balance due the claimant of $10,865.31, as carried by the bill as amended.

"President Tyler recognized the justice of Mr. Schaumburg's claim, and in 1843 General Jackson wrote a letter explaining the status of this claim and completely vindicating the claim made by Mr. Schaumburg.

"On the foregoing statement of facts your committee are of opinion that the bill ought to be amended as hereinbefore indicated, and as amended it ought to pass."

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, in the report it is said:

"The judgment was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States. The case is reported in the 103 United States Supreme Court Reports, page 667."

This was in 1880.

Further on in the report it says:

In this action was adjudged that there was due the claimant on the claim presented by him the sum of $11,165.31, which, being reduced by the amount of $300, recognized as due the Government, left a balance due the claimant of $10,865.31, as carried by the bill as amended.

Everybody would infer from that that the court there had rendered a judgment in favor of this man. The exact reverse is the case, and I want to put on record some extracts from the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, found in 103 United States Supreme Court Reports, page 667:

SCHAUMBURG V. UNITED STATES.

1. United States v. Eckford (6 Wall., 484), reaffirmed.

* * * * * * *

Error to the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Pennsylvania.

Mr. George W. Biddle and Mr. Charles Henry Jones for the plaintiff in error.

That is, for Mr. Schaumburg, who was the plaintiff in error. It seems that he took an appeal or sued out a writ of error with respect to this judgment which he is now claiming was a judgment in his favor.

The Solicitor-General, contra.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court.

The judgment in this case is affirmed on the authority of United States v. Eckford, 6 Wall., 484. Claims for credit can be used in suits against persons indebted to the United States to reduce or extinguish the debt, but not as the foundation of a judgment against the Government. In the present case the court instructed the jury as matter of law that the plaintiff in error, from July 1, 1836, until March 24, 1845, was in the military service of the United States as a first lieutenant of dragoons or cavalry, and that he was entitled as such to credit for the pay and emoluments that accrued during that period, and this was admitted to exceed the debt sued on by the United States. The jury thereupon brought in a verdict for the defendant.

Judgment was rendered for the United States and not for Schaumburg.

Had the jury gone further and struck the balance that would be due from the United States, no judgment could have been rendered for it. Any verdict, therefore, beyond the one actually given would have been fruitless.

Mr. STEWART. The United States brought the suit, did it not? He was the defendant in the court below?

Mr. COCKRELL. I say there was no judgment rendered in his favor. The judgment was just simply——

Mr. STEWART. The court held that it could not be offset?

Mr. COCKRELL. That the United States could recover nothing. That was all.

Mr. SPOONER. That was a judgment in favor of the defendant?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; that the United States could recover nothing against him, but it was not a judgment in favor of the defendant for the amount.

Had the jury gone further and struck the balance that would be due from the United States, no judgment could have been rendered for it. Any verdict, therefore, beyond the one actually given would have been fruitless. The court itself decided that the plaintiff in error was entitled to his pay and emoluments from July 1, 1836, to March 24, 1845. While sometimes the jury have been permitted to certify to a balance they find to be due from the Government in cases of this kind, and under some circumstances it may be proper they should do so, a refusal of the court to direct that it be done can not be reviewed here.

Now, mark you, this suit was brought in 1874, thirty-two years after he ceased to make any claim to be an officer. In view of the statute of limitations, which does not seem to have been pleaded by the Government, how could he bring that in as a valid offset? This thing has gone on. Once the whole thing was reviewed by the Senate, and re-reviewed. I simply want to enter this of record. The case has been here off and on ever since 1845, but I do not suppose anything I could say now, in reviewing the various decisions made, would have any effect. Sometimes the reports have been favorable and sometimes they have been against him. It was an old controversy as to the question of jurisdiction and power between the President and the War Department, and I simply want to say that the statements in the report of the House do not carry out what they apparently represent. I shall record my vote against the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri is entirely correct that the House report is misleading, but the Senator does not reach the real point. The House report is misleading because as the report reads it leads one to infer that a judgment was rendered in favor of Lieutenant Schaumburg in the circuit court for $11,000, and that on appeal that judgment was affirmed. That is not the fact. The fact is that the Government sued him and his sureties on a bond for $306. That does not necessarily mean that he was a defaulter, nor does it often mean, because the Government has a cause of action on a bond, that the officer was except in a purely technical sense, a defaulter. It often happens that items are disputed and disallowed where there is no possible force in the claim that the officer is a defaulter in the common acceptation of that word, which carries with it opprobium.

He pleaded a lawful offset under the acts of Congress; and in order to be permitted to sustain that offset, of which the court had perfect jurisdiction, it was necessary for him to prove his claim. The court decided, as a matter of law—and Judge Cadwallader was one of the best judges who ever sat upon the circuit court bench——

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to ask a question of the Senator.

Mr. SPOONER. I desire to finish the sentence, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. The court decided as a matter of law that Lieutenant Schaumburg was entitled to pay as lieutenant of dragoons between these dates, and it was liquidated so far as to determine in that case the amount—eleven thousand and some hundred dollars. The claim was established, on a contest by the Government, before a United States judge, that the Government was indebted to him as compensation for services as lieutenant of dragoons in the sum of eleven thousand and some hundred dollars. But, of course, the court could do no more than to apply that offset upon the Government's claim of three hundred and odd dollars, because there was no authority of law to render a judgment for the defendant and against the Government. The Government can not be sued without its consent. Since then we have provided that the Government may be sued in these courts, but as the law stood then no provision was made by which a judgment could be rendered for the counterclaim against the Government.

But it was adjudicated, and when he went to the court on the writ of error from that judgment, it was with the claim that he was entitled to a direction from Judge Cadwallader that the jury should find a verdict for the whole amount against the Government. The Supreme Court held, on the basis of United States v. Eckford, that that judgment against the Government on this counter claim could not be allowed. The syllabus in United States v. Eckford is as follows:

When the United States is plaintiff and the defendant has pleaded a set-off (as certain acts of Congress authorize him to do), no judgment for any ascertained excess can be rendered against the Government, although it may be judicially ascertained—that, on striking a balance of just demands, the Government is indebted to the defendant in such amount.

As it was in this case—

That had to be ascertained in order to enable the application of the doctrine of set-off at all, and it was judicially ascertained in that court, a court having jurisdiction of the parties and of the case, that this amount was due from the United States to this officer.

Now, it was recognized by the Treasury Department as adjudicated. One would think he ought to have his money. I say again what I said the other day—that where a claim of a citizen against the Government is adjudicated in this way as a matter of law in one of the Government's own courts, he ought to be paid the money. Lieutenant Schaumburg died before the law was changed, as I recollect it, so that he could sue the Government, but there on the record is the adjudication in that case that the Government owed him this money. Of course it has been running along a long time. There is nothing in all this delay that can be imputed as the fault of Lieutenant Schaumburg. The bill was introduced in the first place in 1882. I remember reading and incorporating in a report years ago, I think, a long letter from General Jackson, of the strongest imaginable kind, justifying the claim of this lieutenant and denouncing as outrageous the treatment which had been accorded to him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the painful duty of the Chair to call time on the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the time will be extended by unanimous consent until the Senator can answer a question.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SPOONER. Is that the limit of the consent?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. I want to say a few words more about the claim.

Mr. COCKRELL. The suit by the Government was on a bond given in 1860 as paymaster.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. COCKRELL. That suit was brought in 1874, and at that time the Court of Claims had jurisdiction of suits against the Government. This officer, Lieutenant Schaumburg, had the same claim then that he had when this suit was brought, but it was barred by limitation, not having been brought within six years. Now, then, could he in a court which had jurisdiction and full knowledge of the law governing suits between individuals and the Government plead as an offset what he himself could not sue upon?

Mr. SPOONER. My answer to that is that he did plead that as an offset.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, and the United States attorney there probably knew nothing about the rights of the United States on these questions under the law governing in the Court of Claims. I do not suppose it was pleaded. If it had been pleaded, it would have been a complete bar.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not suppose there ever has been a United States district attorney in that district who did not know about the statute of limitations. One thing is very certain; there either was none applicable, or he did not raise it, or, if he did raise the question, the court decided against it.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no question about that. There is no doubt the court decided that this man was an officer from a certain day to a certain day.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This debate is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. WARREN. I ask, in the interest of the Committee on Claims and for its relief in some of these matters, that the Senator from Wisconsin may have unlimited time to proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SPOONER. I object. I do not want unlimited time. But I think a citizen ought not to be treated in this way. I think Congress ought not to assume that a United States district attorney did not know of the statute of limitations. I think where the judgment was rendered on the set-off, and the claim adjudicated as a matter of law by a man like Judge Cadwallader, there ought to be some substantial reason given for impeaching it, and there is none given. It has been recognized by the Treasury officers as a just claim and a fair adjudication. Judge Folger, who was a great lawyer, recommended its payment. Ex-Secretary Fairchild recommended its payment. This man, on the record, was shabbily treated. He was commissioned a lieutenant of dragoons away back——

Mr. COCKRELL. In 1836.

Mr. SPOONER. In 1836. Is it pretended there was no such office? Is it pretended he was ineligible? He could not have been commissioned without an appointment by the President. He could not have been commissioned without a confirmation. All that occurred.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senate did act upon it and said he did not have a right to it. This august body, the greatest legislative body in the world, decided he had no right.

Mr. SPOONER. This is not the greatest legislative body in the world. It is one of the branches of, I think, perhaps the greatest legislative body in the world, and this may be the greatest part of the greatest legislative body in the world. I am not disposed to dispute that. We all admit that ourselves, Mr. President. [Laughter.]

He was commissioned by the President and confirmed by the Senate. That made him a lieutenant of dragoons in the United States Army and entitled him to pay as such under the laws of the United States. Then came a controversy between the War Department and the President. The military authorities refused to put his name on the roll. The President, as Commander in Chief, directed that it be done, and it was done. Then the Senate, not acting as a legislative body, I take it, perhaps it was acting as an executive body, it certainly could not itself pass a law, passed a resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senate passed a resolution on the 19th of March, 1845.

Mr. President, just one word. I know the Senator does not want to misrepresent the case.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, no.

Mr. COCKRELL. This officer was never confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. He was not?

Mr. COCKRELL. It was a question purely between the Executive and the War Department at different times, and there never was a commission except such as the President issues upon the appointment of an officer before confirmation. The whole question arose in that way. But I make no point on this matter, as far as I am concerned. I simply want to state the facts in the case.

Mr. SPOONER. Judge Cadwallader decided, as a matter of law, that he was lieutenant of dragoons.

The Senate passed a resolution that he was not. Then, in a couple of years the Senate passed a resolution that he was, and he was assigned to duty. So it went along for years.

Mr. COCKRELL. First one way and then the other, according to the way the reports were made.

Mr. SPOONER. But he did not get any pay. He was dancing between these two great departments; they deciding one month one way about his title and another month another way about his title. No man was ever treated worse. He was entitled to have it settled. If he was in law a lieutenant of dragoons, as the court held he was, and as these Secretaries of the Treasury decided he was, he ought to have had his pay, and he ought to have had it when it would have done him some good. But he never received it.

This bill has passed the Senate a number of times; it has been favorably reported in the House a number of times, and it has seemed to me that it ought to pass and the case be set at rest.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NELSON in the chair). Shall the bill pass?

Mr. COCKRELL. I want it simply to be noted that I vote no; that I am among the few who vote that way.

The bill was passed.

RAMON O. WILLIAMS AND JOSEPH A. SPRINGER.

The bill (S. 3967) for the relief of Ramon O. Williams and Joseph A. Springer was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Ramon O. Williams, late consul-general at Habana, the amounts necessarily expended by him for clerk hire in excess of his allowances between July 1, 1892, and June 5, 1896, $2,222.08; and to Joseph A. Springer, late vice-consul-general at Habana, the amounts necessarily expended by him for clerk hire in excess of his allowances between October, 1892, and June 30, 1895, $200.54, both amounts as shown on the records of the State Department and as recommended for payment by the State Department to the Fifty-fifth and Fifty-sixth Congresses.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GENERAL EDUCATION BOARD.

The bill (S. 4419) to incorporate the General Education Board was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, contemporaneously with the declaration of war against Spain Congress passed what has come to be known as the "Teller resolution." The fourth section of the resolution, which refers exclusively to Cuba, is in the following words:

That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination, when that is accomplished, to leave the government and control of the island to its people.

Later and contemporaneously with the ratification of the treaty of peace known as the "treaty of Paris," by which we acquired title to the Philippine Islands, the Senate passed what has come to be known as the "McEnery resolution." This resolution is in the following words:

That by the ratification of the treaty of peace with Spain it is not intended to incorporate the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands into citizenship of the United States, nor is it intended to permanently annex said islands as an integral part of the territory of the United States; but it is the intention of the United States to establish on said islands a government suitable to the wants and conditions of the inhabitants of said islands to prepare them for local self-government, and in due time to make such disposition of said islands as will best promote the interests of the citizens of the United States and the inhabitants of said islands.

The Teller resolution, I have no doubt, expressed the purpose of Congress and the country as to Cuba. There has been no change of our purpose as expressed in this resolution toward that island, and we are informed by the press of the country that in a very short time our army of occupation is to be withdrawn and the island turned over to the government of its own people. Although it has been doubted, I assume that at the time of its passage by the Senate the McEnery resolution in like manner expressed the purpose, not only of the Senate, but of the people of this country toward the Phillippines.

On the 24th day of February, in this year, when the bill temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes, was before the Senate, the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] offered as an amendment to that bill the McEnery resolution, and upon a yea-and-nay vote that amendment was defeated by a vote of 24 to 43. The division of the Senate upon the amendment was upon party lines; the Republicans, with the exception of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON], voting against the amendment and the Democrats voting for it.

On the same day the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] offered as an amendment to the Philippine tariff bill a certain amendment, of which I read one section:

That it is not intended by the Government of the United States to permanently annex the Philippine Islands as an integral part of the United States, but it is the determination of the United States to establish, with the consent and assistance of the inhabitants thereof, a government or governments suitable to their wants and condition, and that shall give to the inhabitants the control and administration of their local affairs, such as the raising of revenue and the disposition thereof; the maintenance of peace and order in the several communities of said islands that have been or that may be organized by the people thereof, and eventually to give them their independence.

Upon a yea-and-nay vote this amendment was defeated by a vote of 20 to 44, the Democrats voting for and the Republicans against the amendment.

The position of the Republican party in the last Presidential campaign upon the subject of Filipino independence, the discussion of the subject by the representatives of that party on the hustings and in the press, the general course and policy of the Administration since the election, and the debate which preceded these votes of the Senate, all indicated a change of purpose, as that purpose was expressed in the McEnery resolution, on the part of the dominant party toward these islands.

Before these votes there might have been some possible grounds for doubt as to the ultimate purpose of the dominant party in regard to the Philippines. Now, there is no longer room for doubt. The vote of the Republican party upon these amendments is capable of but one interpretation, and that is that it has become the fixed purpose of that party, as far as it can control the matter, to hold these islands for all time as a possession of this country.

I have no disposition, Mr. President, to discuss the motives or reasons which have led the dominant party to settle upon one line of policy toward Cuba and a wholly different line of policy toward the Philippines. That would, I apprehend, be unprofitable. But I do wish to say that there is, in my judgment, no justification for this differentiation, either in morals, public policy, or national obligation; nor yet in the physical or political conditions of these two countries or of their people. At the close of the war with Spain both of these countries were absolutely in our power. We chose to give independence to one; to deny it to the other. Upon what grounds can we defend this discrimination?

It can not be excused or defended upon the ground that the Filipino is less capable, or less prepared, or less ready for self-government than the Cuban. I have not been able to give this feature of the subject close study, but from the study I have been able to give it I am satisfied that the Filipino is just as well prepared and just as ready for self-government as the Cuban. The native uneducated Filipino is just as intelligent, just as bright, as the native uneducated Cuban. There is an educated class in both islands, but if there is any difference between them it is very slight and not material. There is also a foreign element in both the islands, but with reference to this foreign element there is this important distinction—that it is in closer touch and sympathy with the native Filipino than it is with the native Cuban.

Neither can this distinction in treatment be justified upon the ground that we promised independence to the people of one of these countries and did not promise it to the other, or to any difference in aspiration of these people in this regard. Both of these people, when we interfered in their affairs, were similarly situated with reference to Spain. Both of them were in insurrection against her authority; both of them were fighting for independence, and neither of them was considering any terms of surrender, or settlement, or reconciliation short of independence. The insurrectionary armies of both of these countries joined with our forces in overthrowing the power of Spain, and in both instances with the understanding, either expressed or implied, that if success attended our joint efforts they were to have independence.

I am glad we have kept faith with Cuba. I am glad that in her case we have been strong enough to resist the thirst of empire and the lust of power. I had hoped that we would pursue the same course with reference to the Filipinos, and after helping them to establish a stable government we would turn that government over to the people of the islands and safeguard it as we have done in the case of Cuba against the encroachments of any predatory nation.

There are many things involved in the Filipino situation about which I have had doubts and about which I still have doubts, but there is one proposition in connection with it about which there is not now and never has been any doubt in my mind. That proposition is this: That considering our own interest, present as well as future, this Government ought to relinquish possession of these islands and withdraw from the archipelago just as soon as it can do so consistently with honor and our national obligations to those people. This far I feel certain. Beyond this, I confess I have doubts.

I know it is the settled purpose of the Republican party, as now constituted, to permanently retain these islands, but I am not so sure that such is the purpose of a majority of the people of this country. I do not believe they have yet passed upon that question. I do not believe the result of the last election meant that. That question was discussed in the campaign which preceded that election, it is true, and it may have had something to do with the result, but the people of this country were not then in possession of sufficient information about the question to enable them to properly render a judicial and final decision upon the issue raised.

We know more about the Filipino situation now than we did then; but even now we know but little, and much of the information that we have is admittedly unsatisfactory and unreliable, and much of it contradictory. No question of such momentous importance, involving the welfare of 70,000,000 people here and 10,000,000 there, can be safely decided upon such meager and unreliable information as we then had, or even as we now have, with reference to these people, their character, their capacity, their aspirations, and their disposition toward us.

But if it is the fixed and settled policy of this Government, or if it shall hereafter become the fixed and settled policy of this Government, to permanently retain these islands, and we are confronted with the question as to how we shall govern them, whether as dependencies or under the Constitution, whatever may be the views of others, as between these two alternatives, I confess I should, if compelled to choose, make the choice with grave misgivings.

We can not govern them as colonies without trampling under foot there the fundamental principles of our Constitution, and we can not sanction an outrage upon these principles there without endangering them at home. We can not with safety link freedom in government with absolutism. On the other hand, we can not admit these people, many of them only half civilized and only a part of them with any just comprehension of the principles of self-government, as citizens of the Republic without degrading the citizenship of the nation and inviting countless dangers.

I do not doubt that these people are capable of establishing, and, with our assistance, that they would establish, a government satisfactory to themselves and suitable to their condition; but I am satisfied that at present they are, with very slight exceptions, utterly incapable of understanding or applying the principles of free republican government according to American standard and ideal. More than that, I am satisfied that they are by heredity incapable of understanding or applying these principles. It has taken ages to develop from the best possible material a people entirely fit for constitutional freedom. Many enlightened nations are still unequal to that condition.

It is the high privilege of America to inculcate the doctrine of man's capability for self-government, but we recognize the limitations and conditions that could render it expedient to establish a republican form of government among people not prepared for it.

Mr. President, we have had some experience in this country in trying to train by education an inferior race, a race which has never shown any initiative in self-government, in the practices and principles of our constitutional system. For thirty years the negro has been not only a member of a self-governing community, but a participant in that Government. During that time millions of dollars have been spent to educate him and to fit him for the duties and responsibilities of American citizenship.

Those who are most familiar with the result know that he is to-day but little better prepared for an intelligent and responsible discharge of those duties than he was in the beginning. If he has made any improvement or progress in that regard it has been exceedingly slight. The duties of suffrage and of citizenship under our constitutional system seem to be a thing beyond the capacity of his understanding. The defect in his case is not to be overcome, as the experience of the last thirty years shows, by education or by training, and the reason is obvious. It is a defect of heredity.

The system of laws which the Taft Commission has promulgated and is attempting to enforce in the Christian and pacified provinces of the Philippine Archipelago was framed in recognition of the present incapacity of those people and of their inherent lack of those qualities and virtues without which successful self-government is not possible. Governor Taft and the Commission frankly admit this. Their hope and theory is that these defects may be overcome by training and practical education through object lessons in civil government. In my judgment there is nothing to justify this hope, either in our own experience or in history, and the result will be disappointment and failure.

I do not desire to enter into any harsh criticism of the Commission or of the government that they have established there, but I do want to say, with reference to the government that they have established there, the un-American, the un-Republican, the despotic, the arbitrary, the tyrannical system of government that they have established there, and which I assume they have established not from choice but because, from their knowledge of that country and its people, they were satisfied they could not be governed with safety except by arbitrary methods, is strong evidence, and to my mind conclusive evidence, that those are not a people to be taken into the body of our citizenship.

It is somewhat of a digression from my purpose, but I want to say in this connection—because it seems to be the fit place in which to say it—that I have no disposition and have not had any disposition to criticise our army of occupation in the Philippines. I have wanted to believe well of our Army; I have wanted to believe that they were conducting the war there according to the usages and laws of civilized warfare. Early in this session, when I heard these charges of cruelty, of barbarity, of devastation, and of inhumanity against our Army there, I confess frankly I was not disposed to believe them, and in private conversation I reiteratedly expressed the opinion that the American people would not believe such charges against our Army unless they were established by the most indubitable proof. I even felt resentful.

But, Mr. President, the developments of the last few months have dispelled any doubts about this matter and constrained and coerced me to believe those charges. At first there was a disposition to deny the horrible practice known as the water cure. Now nobody any longer denies that it was practiced, not sporadically and in individual instances, but systematically and by authority. There is not now any disposition to deny the charge of unnecessary burning of villages and towns. There is no denial of the charge of reconcentration of helpless women and children, probably not quite as bad as the reconcentrado of the bloody and cruel Weyler, but still in a most cruel and objectionable form.

But, Mr. President, if there were any doubts about these charges of cruelty, and barbarity, and inhumanity on the part of our Army they have all been dispelled by an order issued by one in authority, by one who, until recently, has stood high in the Army and in the estimation of the country, by one who had a right to issue orders, by one who had a right to demand obedience to his orders, and obedience to whose orders has been held a sufficient justification for murder by an American court-martial.

That order, Mr. President, was a military order, a military command, to go into the island of Samar and there murder and kill—for it can not be called by any other name—every person capable of bearing arms, beginning almost at the cradle, at the age of 10, and going almost to the grave. There is no other order recorded, Mr. President, in all history which parallels this order, except that of Herod the King, when he directed that all the children who were in Bethlehem and in all the coasts thereof from 2 years and under should be slain, in order that he might compass the death of Him of whom it was said He came to be King of the Jews, the Christ and Saviour of mankind.

Mr. President, we have not long been in the colonial business, but we have made very rapid progress during the short time that we have been in it. I challenge Senators on the other side to cite a single instance in the annals of English or Spanish colonialism whose details are more horrible and shocking than that of this order to our army in Samar.

In the presence of these cruelties and barbarities, this uncivilized and un-Christian warfare, one who loves his country feels that the only thing he can do is to bow his head in shame. There it but one other thing, Mr. President, I feel like doing, and that is to appeal to the brave, honorable, and humane man who now occupies the White House to probe these things to the bottom, and bring the men, however high in office and position, who have perpetrated them or are responsible for their perpetration, to condign punishment. We can at least by fitting the punishment, if there be any law adequate to that, to the crime, make the offense odious. But, Mr. President, I have digressed from the subject. I was discussing the government the Taft Commission had promulgated for the archipelago.

I have examined with considerable care the civil codes promulgated by the Commission. Considered as simple rules for the regulation of the conduct of the citizens, most of these laws seem to be just and fair. In fact, many of them are almost identical with the laws which obtain in this country for the government of our towns, cities, and counties. But, in order to adjust them to the prejudices, the traditions, and nature of these Oriental people, there is interwoven in them, as their dominant element, the principle of Spanish absolutism. The body of these codes is American, but the great animating principles of American Government are omitted. Mr. President, in corroboration of this statement, I think it will be profitable to enumerate some of the more striking and essential features of the American constitutional system which the Commission has, from necessity, I assume, omitted from these codes.

Under the American system, and under every system entitled to be called Republican, the right of the people to select their governors and lawmakers is fundamental. Under the Taft code the people of the archipelago are permitted to do neither. Under certain limitations and restrictions they may pass certain town ordinances, provincial regulations, and elect certain minor officers; but in the exercise of all these functions they are subject to the supervision and control of the central power which owes its life and authority, not to the people of the island, but to the President of the United States under the laws of Congress. The Commission is the supreme power in the island. It appoints all the chief provincial officers, both judicial and executive, and they are subject to removal at its will.

It is a fundamental principle of jurisprudence in this country that the legislative, judicial, and executive departments shall be forever kept separate and distinct. There is hardly a State in the Union whose constitution does not contain this express provision. Under the system which we have established in the Philippines the Commission is at once the legislative and the executive department of the government. It makes the laws and executes them, or appoints agents to execute them, which is the same thing. Indeed, a part of the salary of the Commission is paid to them for the performance of their legislative duties and a part for the performance of their executive duties. They not only make the laws and enforce the laws, but appoint the judges who are to interpret and expound them.

In this country and in every government entitled to be called free it is a fundamental principle that there shall be no taxation without representation. Under the system which we have established in these islands the people have no voice in levying the general tax for the support of the government or in disbursing the proceeds when collected.

In every free government trial by jury is regarded as the palladium of the liberty of the citizen, indispensable to the protection of life, liberty, and property. Under the system of government we have established in the Philippines trial by jury is unknown. The judges both find the facts and determine the law.

In every free government the right of petition to redress grievances and the freedom of the press and of individual speech is regarded as sacred, and is either safeguarded in the constitution or in customs having the force of constitutional authority. Under our control in these islands it is a crime to petition and to remonstrate. Two newspaper editors—both friendly to American occupation—have recently been arrested there by order of the Taft Commission and incarcerated for presuming to publish, with approving comments, an article criticising the Commission which had already appeared in an American journal.

When the editor of Freedom, one of these papers, was arraigned for trial the other day in Manila a very remarkable scene occurred. In this country we demand that the judiciary shall be free and independent and shall take orders from no one, being amenable only to conscience and the law of the land. When this case was called, the presiding judge showed a disposition to grant the defendant's motion for a week's delay, that he might get ready for trial. The prosecuting attorney, appointed by the Taft Commission, representing that Commission and speaking for it, boldly and defiantly said to the court, in substance:

"You know the wishes of the Government in this matter, and I want to know whether those wishes are to be carried out." That such a demand could be made of an American court should bring the blush of shame to every citizen in this country, where we proudly boast of an independent judiciary. Manifestly there the court is regarded as only the tool of the Commission. That is what the prosecuting attorney plainly told the court in this instance. Fortunately for the honor of our country, this judge was not intimidated by this threat from the Commission.

We ought to feel proud, and I do feel proud, that the judge sitting upon that bench, who also held his commission from the Taft Commission, who knew that his disobedience to the will of that Commission ment possibly his decapitation, in the presence of this threat and this danger had the strength and the manhood to assert the independence of the American judiciary and to declare that there were rights of individuals as well as rights of government. A statue of that judge, when he passes away, should be placed in the solemn circle in Statuary Hall at the other end of this building.

Mr. President, I had hoped, and I have no doubt the American people had hoped, that when the Committee on the Philippines reported their bill providing for a civil government for the Philippines they would disclose what the Republican party has up to this time apparently sought to keep concealed, and that they would inform the American people in this bill what was to be the ultimate purpose of the Republican party with reference to the Philippine Islands.

That is the burning question, not only in this country, but in the Philippines. And yet when their bill comes in—and I am not going to discuss its details—it contains only about six pages with reference to the civil government of the islands, although it is a bill of a hundred pages and bears the rather proud title of "A bill temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes." It would have been better if it had been entitled "A bill for other purposes than the administration of civil government in the Philippine Islands."

The only thing in the bill which indicates in any way the ultimate purpose of the Republican party with reference to these islands is that provision of it for the taking of a census. In the census provision of the bill we are informed that this census is to be taken for the purpose of enabling us to ascertain whether these people are ready and fit and capable of self-government. Mr. President, the majority of the committee well knew the capacity of no people for self-government can be ascertained by censuses, and when the Republican party contented itself with providing for a census it simply put in what we lawyers know in the courthouse as a dilatory plea, something to answer the demand of the people here and in the Philippines to know what they proposed to do with these people and their country.

Mr. President, so far the Commission has confined its efforts toward establishing civil government, to organize the civilized and Christian provinces. It has not established nor attempted to establish a government of any sort in the Mohammedan, or Moro, and uncivilized provinces, such as the Sulu group and Mindanao. Although these Moros are said to be pacified and the people friendly to us, no serious attempt has been made to bring them under our control. No serious effort has been made to stop polygamy or abolish slavery among them. The sultans are still there. Indeed, some of the sultans are said to be upon our pay roll. They and their subchiefs, datos, are in control. The government which we found there, modeled after that of Turkey and submitted to by Spain because of the fierce and warlike character of these people, still continues under our sovereignty.

How long are these abhorrent conditions to continue? What is the remedy? The Commission tells us the remedy is education and training in government and that it will take generations before these people will voluntarily give up their ways and customs and become capable of self-government. Perhaps the Commission is correct in its estimates and predictions, and eventually, after the lapse of generations, these people may become enlightened freemen, but I do not believe it. I do not believe these methods will accomplish these results in generations or centuries, if, indeed, they will ever accomplish them.

In the meantime, Mr. President, the government which exists in these semibarbarous provinces exists by our acquiescence, by our sanction and implied consent. It is under our flag, under our sovereignty. We are responsible for it. In a large sense it is our government.

If we can not give up the Christian provinces without violating our national obligations, neither can we give up the Moro provinces without violating our national obligations. Our responsibility is the same in each case. For myself, I want to say if every Christian province and island in the Philippine Archipelago were pacified and Republican government established in them and in successful operation, and they were in easy access instead of 7,000 miles away, and their trade ten times greater than it is, I had rather see them and their trade gone from us forever than to have the American flag, the emblem of our sovereignty, float over and give its countenance to the conditions which exist in the Mindanao and Moro group, or have this Government, even by acquiescence, seem to sanction such conditions.

Mr. President, we are told these islands came to us as a result of the war and that the American people will not consent to give them up. Perhaps that is true. But why do we want to keep them? Why are we not willing to relinquish them? Are we influenced by considerations of duty toward the people of the islands? I do not believe that, nor do I think that anybody else believes it. I do not believe there is anywhere among our people a disposition to assume, for the sake of the Filipino, burdens not already imposed by our national obligations. Convince the American people that we are spending from seventy-five to one hundred million dollars a year and sacrificing the lives and health of our soldiers simply to teach the Filipinos the art of Republican government to better their material, intellectual, and moral condition and the demand for the retention of these islands will cease. We will hear no more talk about destiny, duty, and national obligation.

The truth is, and everybody knows it, we want these islands for purposes of exploitation, for purposes of commercial advantage. The people have been led to believe if we keep them we can coerce their trade and, by one device or another, force them to buy our goods; that it means 10,000,000 more customers for our mills and factories, and that it opens a gateway to the markets of the Orient. Such is the general impression, and this is largely, if not altogether, the inspiration of whatever sentiment exists in favor of the retention of these islands. It is a matter of trade, of markets for goods. This, I am sure, is the view taken of it in my State, and I believe elsewhere.

Now, Mr. President, considered from the standpoint of trade and profit, what are these islands worth to us in their present condition? What are they likely to be worth to us in the future? What is their present trade and what is our share of it? Their total exports and imports during the last fiscal year were, in round numbers, only about $59,000,000, and our share only about $5,600,000. It is not, therefore, the present trade of the islands—for that is insignificant—which attracts those who are looking forward to trade advantages. The trade which they want is not that which exists now, but that which they expect to be created there by the exploitation and development of the islands with American capital.

I do not say they will be altogether disappointed. Undoubtedly the islands are capable of great development, especially on agricultural lines. The soil is fertile, especially the valley lands. Many valleys are subject to overflow and annually receive a deposit which enriches them. A large area may be cultivated many years without artificial fertilization. If we retain them, American capital will go there. It will build railroads; to a limited extent it will establish factories; it will clear the lands and reduce them to cultivation. This will create trade. But, Mr. President, every dollar invested in the exploitation and development of the Philippines, every dollar invested in building railroads and factories and cultivating lands there will be a dollar withdrawn from the development of the boundless undeveloped resources at our own doors.

If the islands become valuable to us for trade, we must make that trade, and we will have to make it by the withdrawal of capital needed here and which can be more profitably employed here in the development of our own resources. More than that, Mr. President, whatever trade we create here by the development of our own mines, forests, fields, and factories is practically all our own. While at present we are only getting about 8 per cent of the trade of the Philippines, and, under most favorable conditions, if we retain the islands and develop them, in view of the experience of the colonizing nations of Europe, it can be safely said we can not hope to get more than a part of their trade.

That has been largely the experience of England with her colonies. England owns Canada, yet we sell Canada more than twice as much as she does. We sold Canada during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, $83,000,000, while England sold her during the same period only $37,000,000. This was in the face of a preferential tariff of 25 per cent in favor of British goods.

Hongkong belongs to Great Britain, yet Great Britain gets only one-half of the trade of Hongkong.

Government relations, Mr. President, do not constrain commerce; trade makes its way guided solely by profit and interest.

Mr. President, we do not need any more territory; we have no need for more lands; we have enough already. England may have needed more, for she is but a pent-up Utica. So, in a less degree, with France, Germany, and the other colonizing nations of Europe; but we have a domain, the most magnificent in area that the sun ever shone upon, stretching from ocean to ocean and from the Lakes to the Gulf, much of its forests and minerals undeveloped. Especially is this true of the section from which I come, that great empire stretching southward from the Potomac, with its rich and boundless ores, forests, coal measures, and oil fields scarcely touched, and much of its land yet in its virgin condition. It alone can furnish homes for hundreds of millions of people and give profitable employment to many billions of capital.

In that section of our common country alone there are undeveloped resources sufficient to afford profitable investment for all of our unemployed capital for generations to come. Its development has only fairly begun. The South was, until recent years, distinctively an agricultural country, and yet, after all these years, its agriculture is still in its youth. But little more than half of its agricultural lands have been cleared. By reason of its sparse population, not more than two-thirds of that which has been cleared is cultivated, and because of its inefficient system of labor and lack of capital, that which is cultivated does not yield much more than a half of what it is capable of producing.

And yet, even under these adverse conditions, its agricultural products during the last twenty years have enormously increased. The cotton crop of the South for the year 1880 was 5,000,000 bales; in 1890, 7,000,000 bales; in 1899, 11,275,000 bales. It is difficult to estimate the extent of the tobacco land of the South. Only a part of the land adapted to the growth of tobacco is cultivted in that way. In my own State in the last fifteen years the tobacco area has been more than doubled. The same thing may be said of the truck industry and of various other agricultural products.

Manufacturing and mining in the South are in their infancy. They are capable of indefinite development. The record of the last twenty years is a history of marvelous growth, and yet it is only an earnest of what can be accomplished and will be accomplished in the future whenever the needed capital shall be employed in securing development. Let me give a few of the figures showing what has already been done in manufacturing in this section that was formerly so exclusively agricultural.

In 1880 the number of manufacturing establishments in the South was—I only give round numbers—43,000; in 1890, 53,000; in 1900, 92,000. Capital invested in manufacturing in the South in 1880 amounted to $251,000,000; in 1890, $630,000,000; in 1900, $1,111,000,000. Value of products of Southern factories in 1880, $455,000,000; in 1890, $878,000,000; in 1900, $1,419,000,000. Lumber and timber products in 1880, $39,930,000; in 1890, $90,738,000; in 1900, $188,144,000. Manufacture of sugar for Louisiana in 1880, $1,480,000; in 1890, $12,603,000; in 1900, $47,891,000.

In North Carolina, my own State, the number of manufacturing establishments in 1890 were 3,667; in 1900, 7,226, an increase of 92 per cent. Capital invested in manufacturing in North Carolina in 1890, $32,745,000; in 1900, $76,503,000, an increase of 133 per cent. Value of property employed in manufacturing in 1890, $43,375,000; in 1900, $144,919,000, an increase in ten years of 135 per cent.

As wonderful as this record is, the growth of manufacturing at the South, as I said before, has been retarded by the want of capital. The increase of these twenty years is but a fraction of what will be the increase of the next twenty years if the capital which we expect will find investment there is not unfortunately diverted from us for the purposes of exploitation in distant parts of the world. Certainly no other part of the world to-day offers more profitable investment than the South. What is true of the South is also relatively true of a large area in the western part of our country.

If the money which we have spent in the Philippines since the close of the Spanish war had been invested in the reclamation of the arid lands of the West millions of acres of valuable land would to-day be open to settlers, and in the next generation would have yielded a trade more profitable than any we can hope to get from the Philippines for generations to come. I assert with entire confidence, Mr. President, that the same amount of money expended in the South and in certain sections of the West in the development of our resources there would create many times the trade, many times the demand for the products of our mines and factories, that the same amount of money expended in the Philippines would create.

Mr. President, every consideration should lead us to build up our country and trade here at home before seeking doubtful and hazardous enterprises abroad.

In considering the value to us of the Philippines for the purpose of trade, we must also consider the cost of subduing them and governing them while we are creating this trade. We have already spent $330,000,000 in attempting to subdue these islands, and our Army there is now costing us not less than $75,000,000 a year. It will be necessary for us to maintain an Army there of from 20,000 to 30,000 soldiers for an indefinite period of time.

In view of the statements of the military officers in the islands I think I can safely make this statement. Many of the provinces are said to have been pacified, but everybody knows that they are pacified only in the sense that they have been subjugated. Withdraw the Army and there will be widespread insurrection throughout the islands in less than a week. If we are to control them we must keep a large army there for at least a generation to come. We can not hope to reduce the cost of our naval and military establishments there below thirty or forty million dollars a year. Counting the millions we have spent there up to this time as lost, the annual profits on our trade, even under best conditions, will not in generations equal our annual expenditures.

In order to earn an annual profit equal to our expenditures in maintaining our control of the country, we must create a trade at least ten times that which those islands have ever had, even should we control the whole of it instead of only a fraction of it. When will we accomplish that? Perhaps the answer can, in part, be found in Spain's experiences with these islands. Did Spain find them profitable? Of what advantage have they been to her in the past, and what possible hope of advantage do they promise us in the future? Considered in this connection, a distinction is to be noted between colonial dependencies, where people are enlightened—like the colonies of Great Britain, in Canada and Australia—and foreign possessions, where the inhabitants are less intelligent and less advanced in civilization.

Australia exported to the United Kingdom in 1899 $355,000,000 and imported from the United Kingdom over $300,000,000 of goods. But the original inhabitants of Australia contributed nothing to this trade. It was created by European colonists carrying into a virgin region their enterprise and intelligence.

The 10,000,000 people who inhabit the Philippines never brought to Spain any trade commensurate with the expense of governing them, and merely by substituting our flag for that of Spain we can not alter the conditions inherent in their situation and convert those people into a thriving, busy, productive community. The leopard's spots do not thus change.

In a speech delivered by my colleague in this Chamber on February 22, in this year, in his efforts to show that the Philippines have already become an important market for the products of the South, especially the products of the cotton mills of that section, and that their purchases of Southern products during the past fiscal year give promise of great extension in our trade there in the near future, he said:

> For the first time since the American occupation of the Philippines the United States in the month of May last headed the list of nations sending merchandise to the Philippines. The exports into Manila during the month of May were valued at $2,460,431. While I have not had an opportunity to examine the report with the view of ascertaining the character of the exports which we sent to that country, I am satisfied that a majority of the items represent Southern products.

Manifestly, the statement made in this speech to the effect that the United States exported to Manila during May, 1901, products valued at $2,460,431 is a clerical mistake, for our total exports to the islands for the eleven months ending May 30, 1901, including gold and silver, were only $2,752,045. But, Mr. President, we did export to Manila during the month of May, 1901, products to the value of $560,432, and it is true that that was more than any other nation exported to that country during that month.

Great Britain was the next largest exporter in that month, the amount exported by her being $451,471. But the exports of Great Britain to the Philippines during the eleven months ending with May, 1901, more than doubled ours. Our exports to the Philippines for the month of May were evidently abnormal, and are accounted for by the needs at that time of our Army, as one of the items—more than one-third of the whole amount—was $178,000 of gold coin.

If my colleague had examined the abstracts of exports for the month following, he would have seen that our exports to the islands during the month of May did not sustain his argument, and that the proportions to which they attained in that month were abnormal, for our exports for the month of June only amounted to $282,610, being less than one-half of those for the month of May, while those of Great Britain increased.

If he had followed up the abstract of our exports for May, he would have found that no considerable part of them came from the South. He would also have found that in that month the United States only exported to the Philippines $6,107 worth of raw cotton, not as much as some farmers in North Carolina annually produce. He would have found that the whole United States exported there during that month only $8,918 worth of manufactures of cotton, not enough to keep many of the small cotton factories in North Carolina running a month.

He would also have found that the whole United States exported to these islands during the eleven months ending May 30, 1901, only $27,000 worth of raw cotton and $93,147 worth of the manufactures of cotton, and he would have found that a large part of our exports to these islands, both for May and the fiscal year 1901, consisted of liquors, beer—an American, and not a Philippine beverage.

When the fact that during this time we had quartered in Manila an army of over 50,000 American soldiers, spending something like $5,000,000 per month, is considered and that the entire amount of American cotton goods exported was less than $100,000, it really seems astonishing that anyone could conclude that the amount of our exports during this period furnished evidence of a gratifying growth of trade between the South or between this country and the Philippines. For myself, I find in it anything except cause of satisfaction.

My colleague, in another part of his speech which I have just read, comments upon the importance to our Southern cotton manufacturers of the markets of China, and attributes the growth in our trade with this country to Republican policies. In other parts of this speech he lays stress upon the effect of our ownership of the Philippines upon this trade. My colleague, in the conclusions he draws in this behalf, deceives himself. This argument is frequently heard in the South, where it is addressed especially to the cotton manufacturers.

They are told that the extension of our territory in the acquisition of the Philippines has unlocked the ports of China to us and given us that ancient Empire as a market for our cotton manufactures. These statements are misleading. The Chinese-Japanese war, though it resulted in her defeat, was in many respects a blessing to China. It was a great object lesson to her; it paved the way for the introduction of Western ideas and methods and appliances; it led to the construction of railroads and factories, and these in their turn have made China something more of a foreign trader and purchaser of foreign goods.

The Boxer movement was in some degree a protest of the more conservative element against this innovation. The result has been a great increase in her trade with the outside world, and the United States has come in for a share of this increase. Not a full share, but a share. The Spanish war has had nothing to do with the development and growth in this trade. It began long before that war and its increase is the result of changed conditions in China, and neither its origin nor development has been influenced by that war.

In 1895 we exported to China $3,603,840 worth of merchandise; in 1896 we exported there $6,921,933; in 1897, $11,924,433; in 1899, $14,493,440, and in 1900, $15,258,748. The ratio of increase before the Spanish war was, therefore, greater than it has been since. The same is true with reference to our trade with Japan. In 1895 our exports to Japan were $4,634,717; in 1896, $7,689,685; in 1897, $13,255,478; in 1898, $20,385,544; in 1899, $17,264,680; in 1900, $29,087,642.

The Spanish war certainly does not account for our increased trade with Japan, nor yet with Europe; and yet the growth of our exports to these countries is much more remarkable than its growth in China. Our exports to Europe in 1896 were $773,000,000 in round numbers; in 1897, $813,000,000; in 1898, $973,000,000, and in 1900, $1,040,000,000. These facts, this remarkable development of our trade with Europe, show that territorial expansion is not necessary for extensive trade relations.

I rejoice at any growth in the trade of our manufactured cotton goods. Considering the vast quantity of our cotton productions, our exports in this branch of American industry is surprisingly small. It is to be hoped that our trade in cotton cloth will grow and expand not only in China, but elsewhere. It will grow and expand there and elsewhere with improved transportation and when our mill owners have learned to prepare their products to suit the taste and fancy of their oriental customers. But its growth can not be made to depend upon territorial expansion.

The agricultural possibilities of these islands are, I have no doubt, capable of great development. The lands are generally fertile. Some of their valleys are annually inundated and, as in the case of the Nile, these floods leave a rich deposit. Even the lands not thus enriched do not for many years after being cleared require artificial fertilization. They are adapted to the growth of tobacco, rice, sugar, and, I have reason to believe, to the growth of cotton.

These are all staple crops of the South. It is true the archipelago does not now raise enough rice to supply the home demand, but before Spain began its policy of discouraging this crop in the interest of tobacco, in which the Government had up to 1882 a monopoly, the Philippines exported a considerable quantity of rice. They now export considerable quantities of sugar. Hon. SAMUEL M. ROBERTSON, of Louisiana, member of the Ways and Means Committee of the House, speaking of the sugar production of these islands, said, in a speech delivered in the House of Representatives December 17, 1901:

> In 1883, in addition to the amount of sugar consumed in the Philippine Islands, they exported 523,000,000 pounds. There are no statistics as to the amount of sugar consumed, but it may be estimated that a large quantity of it was used to supply the demands of the people in the islands. From these figures it can easily be seen that under the most adverse circumstances surrounding the production of sugar—with crude instruments and the crudest machinery—the Philippine Islands produced more sugar in that year than was produced by the Hawaiian Islands in 1899 under free trade with the United States and most improved machinery and appliances.
> Think, then, of the wonderful possibilities of production there even under unfavorable circumstances. In 1900 there was exported into this country for consumption 4,018,086,530 pounds of sugar. The domestic production was 500,046,450 pounds, from cane and beet, making the total consumed in the United States in 1900 4,518,132,980 pounds. These figures are taken from the Statistical Abstract, 23d number, 1900.

Again, Mr. President, even under the present unfavorable conditions the islands are exporters of tobacco.

I can not say with confidence to what extent cotton would be grown in the archipelago, but I am satisfied that all the natural conditions for its successful culture exist there. A reliable young gentleman of my State, a graduate of the university of the State, who spent two years in the Philippines in the army, who was born and reared in one of the largest cotton-growing counties in the State, a cotton expert, and who has recently, I have been told, been appointed to a position as cotton expert in the Philippines, in a conversation a few weeks ago expressed to me the unqualified opinion that the undulating and hill lands of the whole island of Luzon were especially adapted to the growth of cotton. For many years long staple cotton has been successfully grown in the island of Ilocos, and there are some small factories in this island.

Mr. Foreman, in his work on the Philippines, on page 361, says:

> The cotton tree (Gossipium herbaceum) is found growing in an uncultivated state in many islands of the archipelago. Long staple cotton was formerly extensively cultivated in the province of Ilocos Norte, whence many years ago large quantities of good cotton stuffs were exported. This industry still exists. The cultivation of this staple was, however, discouraged by the local governors in order to urge the planting of tobacco for the government supplies. It has since become difficult to revive the cotton production, although an essay, in pamphlet form (for which a prize was awarded in Madrid), was gratuitously distributed over the colony in 1888 with that object. Nevertheless, cotton spinning and weaving is still carried on on a reduced scale in the Ilocos provinces (Luzon, west coast).
> Wild cotton is practically useless for spinning, as the staple is extremely short, but perhaps by hybridization and careful attention its culture might become valuable to the colony.
>
> The pod is elliptical, and the cotton which bursts from it at maturity is snow-white. It is used for stuffing pillows and mattresses.
> It is a common thing to see (wild) cotton trees planted along the high road to serve as telegraph posts. By the time the seed is fully ripe every leaf has fallen, and nothing but the bursting pods remain hanging to the branches.

Now, Mr. President, wherever the cotton tree grows indigenously it may be safely assumed long-staple cotton can be grown. I have no doubt this great Southern product can be grown not only in Ilocos, but in many other parts of the islands. Whatever crops can be grown in these islands can be grown abundantly and cheaply.

The fact that these islands are not to-day exporting sugar, rice, and tobacco in quantities sufficiently large to affect the price of these articles in the markets of the world is due to the conditions of agriculture there, to meager clearings, to inefficient labor, to the crudity of the tools and machinery used, and to the political disturbances and disorders which have for years prevailed there.

Under our occupation most of these adverse conditions may disappear. Again, if we retain the islands, whether we retain them as dependencies or as domestic territory, the tariff barriers, which have in a measure closed our markets to these products, will be, if not removed, at least greatly relaxed, and the effect upon production will be the same there as it has been in the Hawaiian Islands.

"In less than ten years," says Mr. ROBERTSON in the speech from which I have quoted, "after the adoption of the reciprocity treaties with these islands (Hawaiian) the amount of sugar imported into this country from them had increased 1,300 per cent." The Government reports show that in 1875, the year before the treaty, the Hawaiian Islands imported to this country only 25,000,000 pounds of sugar, valued at $1,216,000 in round numbers. In 1899 they imported to this country 545,370,537 pounds, valued at $21,898,000.

If the effect of American thrift and enterprise and the relaxation of tariff restrictions shall have the same effect in stimulating the production and exportation of the staple agricultural crops of the Philippines as it has had on the growth and exportation of sugar in the Hawaiian Islands, will not the producers of rice, sugar, and tobacco, and perhaps cotton, in this country find in these islands a dangerous competitor? Our sugar and tobacco planters are alarmed over competition of Cuban sugar and tobacco, and are vigorously protesting against the proposition of a 20 per cent cut on the duty of sugar from this island. The Philippines are many times larger than Cuba, and can produce sugar and tobacco cheaper than Cuba can produce them.

These staple products can not only be raised in abundance in the Philippines, but they will be raised more cheaply than they can be raised in America, not only because of cheaper manual labor, but cheaper beast. Mr. Foreman, in his valuable work on the Philippines, from which I have before quoted, tells us that the native laborer of the Philippines can live in luxury upon 20 cents a day. In America farm labor costs from 50 to 75 cents a day. The farm animal of the Philippines is the water buffalo. He costs never more than $30, and generally only from $15 to $20, while the farm mule and farm horse in this country costs from $100 to $200.

It is said that the islands can never be developed with Philippine labor because it is lazy and thriftless. Perhaps that is true. It certainly is true unless, under the stimulus of American thrift and the influence of an opportunity to labor for better wages, the Filipino shall become a more effective farm hand. But that these islands will be agriculturally developed if we retain them, I have no doubt. If not developed by the employment of native labor, then with what sort of labor?

Certainly we can not develop them with Caucasian labor, for the white man can not work under that tropical sun. If we can not develop them with native or Caucasian labor, I ask again with what labor will we develop them? Without hesitation I answer, Chinese labor. Already a considerable proportion of the best population of Luzon is said to be of Chinese extraction. I know it is said by some that we will exclude the Chinaman from the archipelago, as we have excluded him from this country. I do not believe that. That law we have recently passed to that effect will not be permanent.

I know there is a prejudice in this country against the Chinaman as a laborer in our mines and on our railroads and in our factories just as there is a prejudice against the negro laborer in these industries. But I do not believe that prejudices exist against the Chinaman as a farm laborer in this country any more than it does against the negro as a farm laborer.

However that may be, if we keep the islands we may be absolutely certain of one thing—they will be exploited, and by whom? They will be exploited by those great syndicates and land corporations that are already organized and being organized for that purpose, and in whose interest much of the pending bill is manifestly framed. It contains about 100 pages, and at least 60 of them are devoted to devising and putting into statute law a scheme by which the land, and the timber, and the coal, and the oil, and the minerals in those islands may fall into the hands of these corporations and syndicates at a nominal price.

There is one most significant provision in the bill. It is with reference to leasing the land. It says that an individual may acquire 160 acres, but a corporation may acquire as much as 5,000 acres. It is perfectly manifest that the bill was prepared and is to be passed here in the interest of these very syndicates and land grabbers that are now organizing and that stand like hungry wolves upon the border ready to enter and to take these lands and to exploit them.

We asked the committee to tell us what they ultimately proposed with regard to these islands and these people. They decline to answer. But, Mr. President, we are going forward as rapidly as we can to seize and appropriate everything upon the islands that is valuable. It reminds me of the case of a man who has acquired title to a tract of land that may be technically good, like our title to the lands of those islands, but that has no foundation in morals or in justice. When he is asked to surrender his legal title because of its lack of morality he says, "Wait; after a while I will give you an answer," and he proceeds to cut the timber, and to mine the ore and the coal and the oil, and when he has stripped it of timber and ore and oil and everything that is valuable says, "I am ready now to surrender you back your title."

Mr. President, I can not contemplate without some feeling of alarm the prospect of building up in the archipelago this powerful competition, based upon Chinese labor or cheap native labor, to the great staple products of the South. If we retain these islands and develop them, our manufacturers may, in the course of time, find there a market for some of their products; but they will not realize their full expectation even in this regard, for when the American goes there he will carry his machinery with him—his refinery, his looms, and his spindles. He will find much, if not all, of his raw material there, with the possible exception of cotton, and even that may be raised on the ground; but if not, he can get it from near-by India, and with cheap and imitative native or Chinese labor, permanently establish his hold on the oriental markets we expect to gain, and even invade others we now have.

It will be remembered that Japan, whose industries are the wonderful creation of a single generation, is now competing with America in the sale of cotton goods. Japan exported to China and other Asiatic countries in 1899 $16,551,250 of cotton manufactures, while America exported only $10,600,000 to these countries in that year.

But, Mr. President, if no factories are established there; if a new Japan shall not arise there to interfere with our trade in cotton goods; if the archipelago shall continue a purely agricultural country and is developed to the fullest and becomes a valuable market for the sale of our manufactures, it will be dearly purchased trade if the farmers of this country find the markets they already have abridged for the sale of their surplus products or find those markets less profitable by reason of increased supply resulting from Filipino overproduction.

Mr. President, we hear much these days about the increase in our foreign trade and the new markets we have found abroad for our products, especially for our manufactures, for there has been but little increase in our agricultural exports. It is true the growth in recent years of our foreign trade in manufactures has been so phenomenal as to have attracted the attention of the world. But to what are we indebted for these new markets? Through what agency have they been secured? I answer. We got them because we had to have them; because we needed them and sought them with the intelligence and zeal which the American trader always displays under the spur of necessity.

For a long time our industrial expansion had been rapid, but there was a ready market at home for all that our mills and factories could make. No other market was sought, not only because there was a ready customer at hand, but because, by the exclusion of outside competition, he was a more profitable customer than could be found anywhere else. New factories continued to spring up and multiply, until in the course of time home production grew more rapidly than home consumption and finally greatly exceeded it.

In these circumstances, our manufacturers were suddenly confronted with the always troublesome problem of a surplus. The question was what should they do with the surplus, what could they do about it. There were two alternatives. They had either to find outside markets or stop building new factories and curtail the production of those already built. In this exigency the decision was what might have been expected of American pluck, energy, and resource. It was in favor of trade expansion. In pursuance of that decision, other markets were sought. The means necessary to secure them were employed and they were found, as they might have been and would have been found years before if they had been sought with the same degree of intelligence and determination.

That our manufacturers have found themselves in a position to successfully compete in the markets of the world with the manufacturers of other nations is a subject for patriotic rejoicing. I do not myself altogether sympathize with the criticism now current against some of our manufacturers who are selling their products in foreign markets at from 25 to 35 per cent less than they are selling them to our home people, although I condemn their extortion against their home patrons, and I condemn the methods and devices to which they resort for the purposes of stifling home competition——

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SIMON in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to ask the Senator in that connection if he does not also believe that the American manufacturers are enabled to sell to foreigners cheaper than to Americans by reason and by virtue of the high protective tariff laws that we have now in force?

Mr. SIMMONS. By reason of those laws, undoubtedly.

I was going to say, Mr. President, they have got to sell their goods cheaper abroad than they are now selling them at home or not sell them at all abroad, because abroad there are no discriminating tariff duties to protect them from competition, while in the home market our tariff permits them, within certain limits, to fix prices. Like every other trader, the American manufacturer wants the best price he can get for his wares, and if he refuses to content himself with reasonable profits and takes advantage of our tariff laws to obtain higher prices here than abroad the blame lies more against our tariff laws than upon the manufacturer.

The fact that these manufacturers are able, after adding transportation, to sell their wares in foreign markets at these lower prices and make reasonable profits—and that their profits in these markets are satisfactory is shown by their eagerness to get and extend them—is a political object lesson of great value. It demonstrates to the point of mathematical certainty that the manufacturers of these articles do not need the protection accorded to them, and that the time is at hand for a revision and reduction of our tariff laws, unless conclusively established injustice and discrimination against the consumers of this country are to be perpetuated as the fixed policy of this Government.

I repeat, Mr. President, the expansion of our foreign trade is due to the enterprise of our manufacturers and traders, and not to the economic or political policies of the Republican party. When the necessity for foreign markets arose they not only went out and sought them, but they adopted the means requisite to the end. They sent representatives to the countries sought to be reached, and they began to make and to fashion and stamp their wares to suit the trade and fancy of those to whom they would sell them.

One great establishment with two branch plants in my own

State has to-day high-salaried representatives in all parts of the world—South America, Europe, China, Japan, Australia, and South Africa. These agents sent out by great manufacturing establishments are international drummers, and are as essential to world trade as our great army of domestic drummers have been found necessary to our interstate trade.

Not only this, but our manufacturers clearly saw, at the beginning of this movement for foreign trade, that regular, direct, and quick ocean transportation was as necessary in foreign trade as railroad transportation has been in the development of our interstate trade, and therefore one of their first undertakings in this new movement was to provide efficient and adequate transportation. The new transportation lines which have been established as a result of this foresight have greatly contributed to the creation and extension of our trade in distant and heretofore inaccessible markets.

Mr. President, in this connection, as illustrating the effect in securing this trade of better ocean transportation, I wish to read from the Review of the World's Commerce, issued by the State Department for the year 1900. It says:

Conspicuous illustrations of the benefit of direct transportation and of the fact that increased trade follows its establishment are found in the recent growth in the export of American products to such unlikely quarters as Turkey and Peru.

Some two years ago our consul-general at Constantinople, Mr. Dickinson, exerted himself to secure the running of a direct line of steamers between the United States and Turkish ports on the Mediterranean. The Barber Line, of New York, decided to make the experiment, and the service, begun in February, 1899, has greatly stimulated the sale of American products in the Levant. Under date of April 14, 1900, Mr. Dickinson states that "since the establishment of the direct line and the consequent reduction in freights, wire nails and a few other articles of American manufacture appear to have taken possession of the Levantine market."

The next step taken by Mr. Dickinson, and one that was made possible by the improved transportation facilities, was the establishment by private capital of an exposition of American goods and agency, which, he says, "is already (November 15, 1900) a success and has outgrown the expectation of those who are conducting the business."

Peru increased her commerce with this country from $1,588,000 in 1897 to $3,491,000 in 1899, and during eleven months of 1900 our exports to Peru amounted to nearly $2,000,000, against something over $600,000 in 1893. Our consul at Callao, Mr. Dickey, attributes this gain, in part at least, to better transportation facilities offered by two competing steamship lines which for the past three years have kept up a monthly service between New York and the west coast of South America.

The same thing will probably be found to be true of our Pacific coast trade. Enlarged transportation facilities undoubtedly account to a considerable extent for the steady growth of our commerce with Japan.

There are now a number of steamship lines with vessels plying to Japan and China from San Francisco and San Diego, Cal.; Portland, Oreg.; Seattle, Port Townsend, and Tacoma, Wash.

There are now three lines of steamers running from Puget Sound to the Orient—the Northern Pacific steamers, or the Dodwell Line; the Canadian Pacific, or Empress Line, and the Great Northern, or Nippon Yusen Kaisha (Japanese) Line. These three lines include some ten steamers, affording sailings about five times a month. For weeks past all of their available freight space has been engaged long in advance, and a number of tramp steamers have cleared with oriental cargoes.

Mr. President, the absence of regular, direct, and quick ocean transportation has undoubtedly been a great barrier to the development and extension of our foreign trade in Asia, Africa, and South and Central America, but the greatest obstacle which has confronted our manufacturers in their efforts to secure world markets has been and is the tariff wall that we have built around our own country, operating to defeat that fundamental law of trade, to wit, mutuality of trade.

Mutuality is essential to healthy trade. We can not always sell to others and buy only from ourselves. In many instances our protective duties are prohibitory, and as a result we are prevented from purchasing from those who might buy our goods in the outside markets. The effect in some instances is to limit our sales; in others to invite retaliatory duties, making trade almost impossible.

Mr. President, doubtless Cuba would like to buy her goods from us. Not only gratitude but proximity to our markets would seem to suggest close commercial relations between that country and ours; but we are told by the leaders of the Republican party that Cuba can not buy from us unless we will buy from her; unless we let her sell to us at a reasonable profit.

A few years ago our manufacturers, especially in steel and iron, were building up a very good and profitable trade with Russia, but the Secretary of the Treasury rendered a decision against the sugar exports of that country by which higher duties were exacted, and in retaliation she imposed a duty upon our iron and steel which has destroyed that trade.

France is a great purchaser of foreign goods. She ought to be a valuable market for the sale of our products. But she declines to buy from us because of the embargo our tariff places upon the sale of her goods to us. As a result we sold to France last year only $4,000,000 worth of our manufactures. We can not sell her steel, because, in retaliation against our discriminating laws, she has imposed a duty of $11 a ton upon our steel rails, so that Germany and England sell steel rails in France at $11 less than we can. The duty on an American mower in France is $3.80 more than on English mowers, while an American reaper pays $8 more duty than the same machine shipped from England. So that a Frenchman can buy a mower from England for $3.80 less than from an American and a reaper for $8 less in England than in this country.

In asserting the proposition that our tariff schedules are an obstacle in the way of the restoration of our merchant marine and the establishment of adequate ocean transportation, as well as in securing the best results in our international trade, I am not advancing a theory or making a partisan declaration. I am but interpreting as to the effect of these prohibitory duties upon our foreign trade the almost dying declaration and warning of the most zealous and ablest advocate of protection this country has known, whose untimely death touched the heart of the world. I am only elaborating what the State Department states in its last annual review of the world's commerce. Let me quote from this valuable document. On page — I find the following:

It would seem to be evident that trade agreements widening the channels of exchange between the United States and other countries must have an important bearing upon the question of building up a merchant marine. One of the great obstacles to the establishment of direct steamship lines from United States ports is the difficulty of obtaining return cargoes. It is a fact of great significance that, wherever better facilities of transportation have been provided, our foreign commerce has immediately grown, even in the face of obstacles that might have seemed insurmountable, and in the absence of other measures for promoting trade.

The only barrier (speaking of the introduction of our goods in foreign markets) to their introduction will be the artificial one of tariff or other discriminating legislation, and this may be either removed or greatly modified by a judicious scheme of reciprocity. If to such agreements, securing favorable treatment of our exports, we add concessions permitting the importation of a larger volume of foreign products, we lay at once the basis for such exchange as may justify the establishment of direct transportation lines.

Mr. President, when we oppose territorial expansion in the faraway islands of the Pacific Ocean, our political adversaries taunt us with the statement that Jefferson, the great founder of the Democratic party, was an expansionist, and that the Democratic party itself, in its early history, was a great practical advocate of expansion. The statement is true and we are proud of it. The Democratic party has added to the territory of the Union nearly one-half of its present domain on this continent, and some of these acquisitions were accomplished against the violent protests of many who questioned the wisdom and patriotism of the Democratic statesmen. But the Democratic leaders were patriotic and did not hesitate to move forward on lines that they knew were right.

The question there was whether, on the one hand, our country should be limited by the Mississippi River, while the vast interior of America should be controlled by European nations and European interests, and dominated by monarchical institutions, or, on the other hand, whether between the Pacific and the Atlantic there should be but one single Union, composed, indeed, of separate States, but equal and sovereign States, owing allegiance to a common flag and entitled to receive and receiving equal rights, protection, and privileges under that flag. The question here is a question of two flags, one emblazoned by a galaxy of stars, representing a Union of equal States and speaking to all the nations of the earth of the surpassing excellence of our institutions, and the other an ensign of imperial sway over 10,000,000 of conquered subjects.

I protest, Mr. President, against quoting the action of the leaders of the Democratic party in securing America for Americans as a precedent for the acquisition of the Philippine Archipelago and the subjugation of the Filipinos to our yoke. The expansion of Jefferson was a natural expansion. It brought safety, not danger. The proposition to extend the limits of our country to another hemisphere and to establish under our flag imperial sovereignty across the ocean is an entirely different proposition, and one behind which lurks dangers against which the whole history of Republican institutions, present and past, is a solemn warning.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, unless some other Senator desires to continue the debate on the bill this afternoon, I shall ask that it be temporarily laid aside, as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] desires to begin the consideration of what is known as the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that the pending bill may be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask at this time that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 13123, known as the sundry civil appropriation bill.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13123) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the first formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that, as the reading progresses, the committee amendments may be considered as they are reached.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the first formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it shall be read for amendment, the committee amendments first to receive consideration. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. PETTUS. I hope it will be understood, Mr. President, that all of the amendments will be open to amendment as in Committee of the Whole hereafter, if any should be needed.

Mr. ALLISON. They will be subject to amendment as we progress with the bill. If any Senator has any special matter to which he wishes to call the attention of the Senate, he can submit an amendment to an amendment of the committee.

Mr. PETTUS. I do not quite understand whether the amendments are to be finally acted upon, as in Committee of the Whole, as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will all be open to amendment when the bill shall have been reported to the Senate.

Mr. PETTUS. Yes, I understand that; but it will be more difficult to secure an amendment in the Senate than it will be in Committee of the Whole. That was the question I asked when the adoption of the committee amendments was asked for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Every amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, as in Committee of the Whole, is open to amendment at the time it is before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. PETTUS. I understand that, Mr. President; but it has been usual, when a request such as that made by the Senator from Iowa has been made, that amendments shall be acted on when reached in the reading of the bill, that they shall be subject to amendment, as in Committee of the Whole, after they have been adopted, as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLISON. I should not, of course, object to any proper amendment that might be offered to any committee amendment. Later I am sure the Senator from Alabama will be satisfied with the progress we make with the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, after line 12, to insert:

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. With the permission of the Senator from Iowa who has the appropriation bill in charge, I should be very glad to present a conference report.

Mr. ALLISON. I yield for that purpose.

CHINESE EXCLUSION.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13031) to prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese and persons of Chinese descent, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said Senate amendment insert the following:

That all laws now in force prohibiting and regulating the coming of Chinese persons, and persons of Chinese descent, into the United States, and the residence of such persons therein, including sections 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, and 14 of the act entitled "An act to prohibit the coming of Chinese laborers into the United States," approved September 13, 1888, be, and the same are hereby, reenacted, extended, and continued so far as the same are not inconsistent with treaty obligations, until otherwise provided by law, and said laws shall also apply to the island territory under the jurisdiction of the United States, and prohibit the immigration of Chinese laborers not citizens of the United States from such island territory to the mainland territory of the United States, whether in such island territory at the time of cession or not, and from one portion of the island territory of the United States to another portion of said island territory: Provided, however, That said laws shall not apply to the transit of Chinese laborers from one island to another island of the same group, and any island within the jurisdiction of any State or the District of Alaska shall be considered a part of the mainland under this section.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and empowered to make and prescribe, and from time to time to change, such rules and regulations not inconsistent with the laws of the land as he may deem necessary and proper to execute the provisions of this act and of the acts hereby extended and continued and of the treaty of December 8, 1894, and with the approval of the President to appoint such agents as he may deem necessary for the efficient execution of said treaty and said acts.

"SEC. 3. That nothing in the provisions of this act or any other act shall be construed to prevent, hinder, or restrict any foreign exhibitor, representative, or citizen of any foreign nation, or the holder, who is a citizen of any foreign nation, of any concession or privilege from any fair or exposition authorized by act of Congress from bringing into the United States, under contract, such mechanics, artisans, agents, or other employees, natives of their respective foreign countries, as they or any of them may deem necessary for the purpose of making preparation for installing or conducting their exhibits or of preparing for installing or conducting any business authorized or permitted under or by virtue of or pertaining to any concession or privilege which may have been or may be granted by any said fair or exposition in connection with such exposition, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, both as to the admission and return of such persons or persons.

"SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of every Chinese laborer, other than a citizen, rightfully in, and entitled to remain in, any of the insular territory of the United States (Hawaii excepted) at the time of the passage of this act, to obtain within one year thereafter a certificate of residence in the insular territory wherein he resides, which certificate shall entitle him to residence therein, and upon failure to obtain such certificate as herein provided he shall be deported from such insular territory; and the Philippine Commission is authorized and required to make all regulations and provisions necessary for the enforcement of this section in the Philippine Islands, including the form and substance of the certificate of residence, so that the same shall clearly and sufficiently identify the holder thereof and enable officials to prevent fraud in the transfer of the same: Provided, however, That if said Philippine Commission shall find that it is impossible to complete the registration herein provided for within one year from the passage of this act said commission is hereby authorized and empowered to extend the time for such registration for a further period not exceeding one year."

And the Senate agree to the same.

O. H. PLATT,
WM. P. DILLINGHAM,
A. S. CLAY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
R. R. HITT,
J. B. PERKINS,
CHAMP CLARK,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. TELLER. It is utterly impossible for anybody, from the reading of the report and not having the bill before him, to know what changes have been made in the bill as it went from the Senate to the House. Either we ought to have from somebody on the conference committee a full and careful statement of what has been done, or the bill ought to be printed and go over. I suggest that the Senator from Connecticut, perhaps, might make such an explanation. What we would like to know particularly is what changes have been made by the conference.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I am perfectly willing to make an explanation. The House conferees objected to so much of the amendment of the Senate as continued in force existing laws, in the language of the Senate amendment:

Until the 7th day of December, 1904, and so long as the treaty between China and the United States, concluded on the 17th day of March, 1894, and proclaimed by the President on the 8th day of December, 1894.

They insisted that such laws should be continued without limitation as to time. In lieu of the language of the Senate amendment, it is now provided by the conference report that such laws "are hereby reenacted, extended, and continued, so far as the same are not inconsistent with treaty obligations, until otherwise provided by law."

Mr. TELLER. That is, until we change them, they will continue in force?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. "Until otherwise provided by law." That was the principal matter of difference, the most serious item of difference, to say the least, between the House and Senate conferees. We have consented to eliminate from our amendment the language which continued the laws in force until the expiration of the treaty, on the 7th day of December, 1904.

Agreeing to that, section 2 of the Senate amendment was no longer necessary.

Mr. TELLER. What was it?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It provided—

That in case said treaty be terminated as provided in article 6 thereof, this act and the acts hereby extended and continued shall remain in force until there shall be concluded between the United States and China a new treaty respecting the coming of Chinese persons into the United States, and until appropriate laws shall be passed to carry into effect the provisions thereof.

Mr. TELLER. That you strike out?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That is eliminated because we now continue the laws in force until otherwise provided by law.

Mr. TELLER. That seems to be proper.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There was some question as to whether reenacting the Geary law, as it is called, by title was sufficient. We thought it was.

Mr. TELLER. That is the act of 1888?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Yes; the law of 1888. We thought it was, but yielded to a request on the part of the House to specify the sections which they wished to have reenacted. So we say "including sections 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, and 14 of the act entitled 'An act,'" etc.

Mr. TELLER. Then you do not reenact all of that law. You leave out some sections, do you not?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. We reenact only those sections which are specified.

Mr. TELLER. What are the sections which are left out?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The sections left out are those which depended upon the ratification of the treaty which had been negotiated but was not ratified.

Mr. FORAKER. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut if the language of the report and of the bill as now amended by the conferees does not continue in force the whole of the act of September 13, 1888, including the sections specified?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It says "All laws now in force."

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But particularly they wished us to specify that it should include the sections named.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say that there were certain sections which the Department in the administration of the law claimed were legally enacted and some which they claimed were not. I understand now that all of the sections that the Department has been enforcing are to be reenacted.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Certainly. The language at first, "all laws now in force," is broad enough to cover the entire statute, in the opinion of the Senate conferees. We yielded to the request of the House conferees that these sections in particular should be named. Section 2, as I have said, goes out. Section 3——

Mr. TELLER. What is that?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Section 3 is in the language of the Senate bill and refers to Chinese who are brought here to participate in fairs.

Mr. TELLER. There is no objection to that.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Section 4 is a substitute for sections 5 and 6 of the Senate amendment which related to obtaining certificates in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. TELLER. That is the Mitchell amendment?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Mitchell amendment.

Mr. TELLER. What have you done with it?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. We substitute for it section 4 in this report, and I will read it. We did so at the request of the House conferees. They gave us the language, and we accepted it:

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of every Chinese laborer, other than a citizen, rightfully in, and entitled to remain in, any of the insular territory of the United States (Hawaii excepted) at the time of the passage of this act, to obtain within one year thereafter a certificate of residence in the insular territory wherein he resides, which certificate shall entitle him to residence therein, and upon failure to obtain such certificate as herein provided he shall be deported from such insular territory, and the Philippine Commission is authorized and required to make all regulations and provisions necessary for the enforcement of this section in the Philippine Islands, including the form and substance of the certificate of residence, so that the same shall clearly and sufficiently identify the holder thereof and enable officials to prevent fraud in the transfer of the same: Provided, however, That if said Philippine Commission shall find that it is impossible to complete the registration herein provided for within one year from the passage of this act said Commission is hereby authorized and empowered to extend the time for such registration for a further period not exceeding one year.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If the Senator will permit me one moment longer, the House conferees said——

Mr. MITCHELL. I simply wanted to ask a question; that is all.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. In just a moment. The House conferees said that the provision of the Senate bill relating to registration in the Philippine Islands was impracticable; that it would require the sending of a great army of agents from here out there to superintend the registration, and that it was much better to leave it in the hands of the Philippine Commission to enforce it. Now I will hear the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wanted to ask if the effect of this amendment is to take control from out of the hands of the Treasury Department and place it under the Philippine government?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Yes; and it directs them to enforce it.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to ask the Senator from Connecticut in this connection whether under this bill the Philippine Commission will have the power to admit Chinese into the Philippine Archipelago?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. They will not.

We retain the language of the Senate amendment:

And said laws shall also apply to the island territory under the jurisdiction of the United States.

That is, the exclusion laws.

Mr. TELLER. Then the Senator thinks that the Commission would not have the authority to open the door to the admission of Chinese laborers?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That is my understanding of it.

Mr. CLAY. I will ask the Senator from Connecticut if it is not true that the amendment which has reference to the power of the Philippine Commission simply allows the Philippine Commission to regulate the mode of ascertaining the number of Chinamen in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That is all. That is all the force or object of the amendment.

Mr. CLAY. As to registration.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know that I see any objection to that.

Mr. LODGE. The Chinese are absolutely excluded under section 2, I understand.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Under section 1, as it will be here.

Mr. LODGE. They are absolutely excluded.

Mr. TELLER. Those of us who have not had an opportunity of seeing this text are a little at sea as to what has been left in the bill. I do not see any particular objection, on the statement made, to the amendment.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I desire to say that the conference has been in some respects a strenuous one, and I believe this agreement is entirely satisfactory to the conferees on the part of the House, as I hope it will be to the House.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill what provision was made as to the time when the act is to terminate? I happened to be out for a few moments.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It is to remain in force until otherwise provided by law.

Mr. PATTERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut upon whom devolves the duty of enforcing the exclusion provisions in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Philippine Commission.

Mr. PATTERSON. Then the Philippine Commission not only has the duty devolved upon it of attending to registration, but it must appoint all officials to enforce the regulation provision.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Yes; as I understand it.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am very sorry that has been adopted.

Mr. LODGE. That is the way it left the Senate.

Mr. PATTERSON. I would much prefer if we had devolved it upon the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The House conferees said that might require the sending of 500 agents from the United States into the Philippine Archipelago to superintend this matter of obtaining certificates. I suppose that is an exaggerated statement, but it can be well seen that it might involve the sending of a great many agents from the United States to the Philippine Islands to carry out the registration provided for.

Mr. PATTERSON. If the Pacific coast Representatives are satisfied I am.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They were acted upon in that way.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 19, after the word "gates," I move to strike out the remainder of that line and all of lines 20 and 21, in the following words:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 28, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, April 26, 1902, was read and approved.

BUSINESS OF COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, I understand it is desirable to the Committee on Agriculture to go ahead with its bill to-day. In view of this fact, as well as the further fact that the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, who introduced and reported the only important measure that that Committee would have for consideration to-day, is absent on account of sickness, I ask unanimous consent that Monday next be set aside for the consideration of District business instead of this day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD], from the Committee on the District of Columbia, asks unanimous consent that one week from to-day be set apart for the business of that committee. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOSS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported the bill (H. R. 14046) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee reserves all points of order on the bill.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. APLIN, for fifteen days, on account of important business.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. WADSWORTH, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 13895) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, with Mr. HULL in the chair.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I should like to inquire how much of the three hours apportioned to the minority is left?

The CHAIRMAN. The minority has one hour and thirteen minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I desired to yield ten minutes of that time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES], and I had promised to yield fifty minutes of that time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FEELY]. I do not see either of these gentlemen in the Hall of the House. I will ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] if it is possible for him to yield some of his time to some gentlemen on that side?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS].

The CHAIRMAN. How much time?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The gentleman from Kansas can take the floor in his own right.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to take up the time of the committee on this bill, and I want to say at the outset that I shall say nothing about the bill; but so much has been said recently in criticism of a gallant Kansas officer that I feel justified in occupying the attention of this committee for a few minutes.

Mr. Chairman, if the criticisms had been limited to remarks made by General Funston, I should not say a word upon this floor, because I believe the people of this country have a right to criticise any speech by any man; but I do say that the critics have gone too far when they attack the record of that gallant officer. At the outset I desire to say that the people of Kansas are proud of the brave, the daring Gen. Fred Funston. [Applause.] I want to say further that he is criticised because he performed an act which, for daring conception and execution, capped the pyramid of honors won by our men at arms. He is also criticised by the gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber because he captured their George Washington—Aguinaldo.

What did he do in addition to capturing Aguinaldo? He took the Twentieth Kansas, a regiment which had been ridiculed and cartooned from ocean to ocean and from the Gulf to the Lakes, and under his management and the management of its other officers the Twentieth Kansas became the best regiment that served during the war with Spain. It was the Twentieth Kansas that set the pace for the regiments of the other States in the Philippine Islands. And I want to say to the gentlemen on the other side of this House that had some of the statesmen who are criticising him to-day accomplished what General Funston accomplished they would be the Democratic candidates for President of the United States at this time. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. They would not be elected.

Mr. CURTIS. No; they would not be. It is claimed he violated the rules of honorable warfare. Who recommended his promotion for the daring act he performed? General Wheaton. Who is General Wheaton? A man who served gallantly in the war from 1861 to 1865; a man who knows more about war and the rules of war than all the politicians in this country. Who else recommended his promotion? General MacArthur, who has been in the service of the United States since 1861. Who signed his commission? The greatest beloved President we have had, the soldier-statesman, the martyred McKinley. Would these generals have recommended his promotion, would President McKinley have promoted him, had he been guilty of violating the rules of honorable warfare?

The only trouble with the gentlemen who criticise him is this: He accomplished what they and their friends were unable to accomplish. He did what they could not do. He was promoted, and justly, for this service. The people of Kansas are proud of him; and I believe if you get down to the truth 90 per cent of the people of this country are proud of General Funston and are proud of what he did for this country in the Philippine Islands.

Out in our State we are proud of the Army and the Navy. We are proud of the fact that one squadron of our Navy carried our flag of liberty, of civilization, to islands nestling in beauty but ruled by tyranny, and we say all honor to Admiral Dewey for the splendid victory he won on May 1, 1898. We are very proud of the fact that another squadron of our Navy, on the 3d day of July, 1898, sent the pride of the Spanish main to the bottom of the sea. It may have been a captains' victory, but, out in our country, the people say all honor to the man second in command, who was there doing duty, all honor to Admiral Schley. [Applause.]

Now, I have simply made these few remarks this morning that the members of this House may know, so far as Kansas is concerned, we do not indorse what the critics say of General Funston. One of his critics has said that General Funston reminded him of the slaughter Samson made, and that he had won a great battle with the jawbone of an ass. I am reminded of a story they tell of a distinguished gentleman while a member of this House. When he first came here as a member of Congress, like other members of Congress, he was invited to address a congregation in the vicinity. He was to address it on Sunday, and as he arrived a little early, they invited him to talk to the boys. He thought he would ask some questions, and one of the conundrums he put to the boys was this: "What weapon was it that Samson used when he slew the Philistines?" None of the boys could answer; so he said: "Boys, don't you know?" None answered. At last he put his hand up to his jawbone, and, rubbing it, asked: "Boys, what is this?" One bright little fellow promptly responded, "The jawbone of an ass." [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I yield forty minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FEELY. Mr. Chairman, I know that in the matter that I now propose to discuss I may incur the criticism and the good-natured bantering of such members as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY C. SMITH], who last Friday criticised members on this side of the House for talking about things that are not, to his mind, of particular importance to the House. But I will say to him that if it had not been for the good-natured and discriminating charity of the members of this side of the House such members as he would in the last two or three weeks have had a very undesirable sort of "water cure" administered to them.

I desire to refer for a moment to the interpretation of the treaty of Washington made last week by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT]. I have read and reread with respect, with a desire for knowledge, and with a desire to form a judicial opinion if possible on the matters which he therein discussed. After devoting considerable time to the proposition alleged by him to have been advanced by members on this side, that it was unlawful for citizens of this country to sell arms and munitions of war for the use of a belligerent, which proposition nobody on this side has to my knowledge seriously advanced or contended for, the gentleman proceeds to say:

> To correctly interpret the treaty, it is necessary to consider its history and attendant circumstances. And I challenge any man to study the history of that rule—> and the correspondence about it between the two Governments who framed it without being convinced that the rule applies only to supplying vessels carrying on war and not to any other sale of military supplies.

Referring to rule 2, article 6, of the treaty of Washington—

I would say to the gentleman that I have carefully examined the correspondence alluded to by him. I have gone outside of the domain of published correspondence, where I am constrained to believe he went for his data, and I am one of those who accept his challenge and contend for a different interpretation of the treaty than that which he set forth in his remarks last Wednesday.

The gentleman from Massachusetts quoted a telegram from General Schenck to the Secretary of State, Mr. Fish, dated June 9, 1871, as follows:

> LONDON, June 9, 1871.
> FISH, Secretary of State, Washington:
> It seems probable that to remove serious objection to ratification of treaty here some declaration should be made limiting interpretation of second rule, sixth article, so as not to restrict sales of arms or other military supplies in ordinary course of commerce. Will the President authorize such expression of views and purpose in bringing rules to knowledge of other maritime powers and asking assent to them? De Grey in difficulty because no understanding on this point expressed.
> SCHENCK.

Then the gentleman proceeds: "To this our Secretary of State cabled the following answer:"

> DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, June 10, 1871.
> SCHENCK, Minister, London:
>
> The President understands and insists that the second rule of Article VI does not prevent the open sale of arms or other military supplies, in the ordinary course of commerce, as they were sold in this country during the late French-German war, and as they were sold to this Government in England during the rebellion, and as we understand them to have been sold also in England during the late French-German war.
> In bringing the rules to the knowledge of other powers, and in asking their assent, this Government will express this view, and will insist that such is the proper interpretation and meaning. It will be well that the two Governments agree upon the same terms of expression in presenting the rules to other powers.
>
> You are authorized to read this dispatch to Lords Granville and De Grey.
> FISH, Secretary.

The gentleman then proceeds to quote from the debate in the British House of Parliament, where Sir Roundell Palmer put the question direct to Mr. Gladstone, if the interpretation of the latter part of rule 2, article 6, was to be limited to a prohibition to furnish supplies to naval vessels, and then he quotes as direct an answer in the affirmative by Mr. Gladstone, plainly showing what the interpretation of that rule was on the part of the British foreign office and the whole British governmental authority.

He then states that the two Governments, through their departments of state, began negotiations as to the draft of a joint note to be submitted to the maritime powers, explaining our and their interpretation of that rule and requesting the accession thereto of those maritime powers, and he states that the following draft was prepared by the British foreign office and submitted to us for approval before sending it to other maritime powers. That note is as follows:

> As some question has been raised as to the true import of the second rule, that rule is understood by Her Majesty's Government (and, as the Government of —— will learn from a similar communication that will be addressed to it by the representative of the United States, by the Government of the United States also) as prohibiting the use of neutral ports or waters for the renewal or augmentation of military supplies or arms to a belligerent only when those acts are done for the service of a vessel cruising or carrying on war or intended to cruise or carry on war against another belligerent and not when military supplies or arms are exported for the use of a belligerent power from a neutral port or waters in the ordinary course of commerce. And it is in order to prevent any future misunderstanding on this point that the undersigned, in communicating the three rules above recited to the Government of —— and in inviting the accession of that Government to them, is ordered distinctly to state the construction which the Government of Her Britannic Majesty and the Government of the United States put upon the second rule, and under which they invite and desire to accept the accession of the Government of ——, as they will that of all other maritime powers.

The gentleman from Massachusetts then goes on to say:

> The United States Government agreed to all of the declaration material to the issue we are now considering, so that it stands as the interpretation of rule 2 by the two parties to it. There arose, however, some differences—all petty—as to the wording of the declaration, which occasioned a long correspondence and some friction, and meanwhile it appeared probable that the rules would not be accepted by the other great powers, so that after long and spasmodic correspondence the submission of the agreement to other powers was dropped.

There, Mr. Chairman, is the admission of the gentleman from Massachusetts—who relies on that interpretation as having been made by the British office and having been accepted by our Department of State—in that paragraph that when it came to the draft of the rule of interpretation for submission to other powers there were disagreements constantly creeping up between this Government and the British foreign office, which disagreements he brushes away with a wave of his hand, with the statement that they were all petty.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have examined the foreign relations as published, together with the correspondence published and unpublished, respecting this proposed identic note which was proposed for submission to the maritime powers for assent by them, and I confess that I must admire the gentleman's caution when he incorporated into the sentence which I have a few moments ago quoted the phrase "all of the declaration material to the issue we are now considering." He therefore admits that the United States Government disagreed to a part of the declaration. But he assumes to regard as immaterial a point which Hamilton Fish, who was our Secretary of State at the time of the controversy, and whose name is enrolled with the most brilliant and distinguished of American diplomatists and statesmen, regarded as material—so much so, in fact, that he was willing to suspend correspondence with the British foreign office unless his contention should be accepted. His contention was that the word "exported" should be omitted from the proposed identic note where it occurs in the gentleman's quotation, after the phrase "when military supplies or arms are" and before the phrase "for the use of a belligerent."

Now, what was the reason for the insistence by Secretary Fish upon the omission of the word "export?" Fortunately, this is not clouded by doubt or any lack of authentic information. Examining the records of the State Department, I find that Mr. Fish expressed himself in clear and positive terms on this subject, and that he was supported therein by the United States Senate, which he intimates went even further than he did in disapproving of this note of interpretation. I have here a copy of a letter which he addressed to General Schenck, our representative in London, which is recorded in the State Department as No. 44, Fish to Schenck, and which I will read as part of my remarks. It is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, August 11, 1871.

SIR: * * * I inclose also the draft of a note proposed to be addressed to the maritime powers bringing to their notice the rules laid down in Article VI of the treaty.

This draft was submitted to me by Sir Edward Thornton, under instructions, as he informed me, of his Government.

In the margin are the amendments and alterations proposed on behalf of this Government.

These alterations are understood to have been all agreed to by the British Government except that they proposed the substitution of the word "either" for "another" in the sentence originally proposed in these words: "For the renewal or augmentation of military supplies or arms [to a belligerent] [a] only when [those acts are done] such supplies or arms are [a] for the service of a vessel cruising or carrying on war, or intended to cruise or carry on war against [another] either [a] belligerent," etc.

And of our proposed alteration substituting the words "the open sale of arms or other military supplies in the ordinary course of commerce" for the language used in the British draft they propose the words "sale or export" in place of the words "open sale."

To the former of these exceptions (that substituting "either" for "another") we immediately assented; to the latter (proposing to substitute "sale or export" for "open sale") we were unable to agree.

The language proposed by us is precisely that of the telegram sent to you from this Department on 10th June last, in compliance with the request of the British minister as communicated in your telegram of 9th June last.

We prefer, therefore, to adhere to that language.

The word "export" introduced in the counter suggestion of Sir Edward Thornton might imply and admit much more than either Government desires. It might be claimed to authorize the direct exportation of arms, etc., to a belligerent from the ports and in the vessels of the neutral.

While this Government holds that a neutral can not be deprived of the right of manufacturing and selling within its own jurisdiction arms and munitions of war by reason of the existence of a state of war between two other powers, it holds, as the President announced in his proclamation of 22d August, 1870 (of which a copy accompanies this), that neutral vessels can not carry such articles upon the high seas for the service of either belligerent without incurring the risk of hostile capture and the penalties denounced by the law of nations in that behalf.

It may be a question whether the introduction of the word "export," as proposed, would not relax the sound rule of law thus laid down by the President, and might not be claimed to sanction the employment of neutral vessels in the transportation on the high seas of arms and munitions of war for the service of a belligerent.

Another reason why the words proposed by the British Government can not be admitted in a note to be addressed by this Government to the maritime powers in construction of the latter part of the second of the rules is that a proposition thus to construe that part of the second rule is understood to have been made in the Senate pending the debate on the treaty and not to have met the approval of that body.

Of course I can not speak with certainty of what occurred in the confidential discussion of the Senate, but rumor seems to be sufficiently positive in this particular to indicate the impropriety and the inexpediency of this Department adopting the language which the Senate refused as a construction or explanation of any part of the treaty.

It is desirable that the two Governments submit the rules to the maritime powers in the same spirit and with the same interpretation.

As the negotiations on this point were introduced here by Sir Edward Thornton, we shall endeavor to reach a conclusion with Mr. Pakenham, in the absence of Sir Edward Thornton, and this explanation is given for your information, and that, if practicable, in informal and unofficial conversation you may be able to maintain the position of this Government on the interpretations of the claim in question and assist in inducing the British Government to accept the language of the telegram of June 10.

I am, etc., HAMILTON FISH.

Here, Mr. Chairman, is the cap of the climax:

Another reason why the words proposed by the British Government can not be admitted in a note to be addressed by this Government to the maritime powers in construction of the latter part of the rule—is that it is understood to have been considered by the Senate, pending the debate on the treaty, and not to have received the approval of that body. Of course I can not speak with certainty of what occurred in the confidential discussion of the Senate, but the rumor seems to me to be sufficiently positive in this particular to indicate the impropriety and inexpediency of this Department adopting the language which the Senate refused as a construction or explanation of any part of the treaty. It is desirable that the two Governments submit the rule to the maritime powers in the same spirit and same interpretation.

Mark you—

[a] Words in brackets to be omitted, and those in italics to be inserted.

Mr. Chairman, in all the long correspondence which ensued respecting this subject, extending over seven years, before the matter was dropped, Mr. Fish never once relaxed his contention as to this matter, and this fact resulted in a failure of the proposition to submit identic notes by the two Governments to the maritime powers. It was plain to all the maritime powers would not accede to the interpretation.

As evidence that our Government took a firm stand on this question and regarded the declarations of the treaty as nugatory, as far as international law was concerned, without accession thereto by the maritime powers, I quote the following letter of Mr. Fish to Sir Edward Thornton:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 8, 1876.

SIR: * * * There remains, however, another provision of the treaty as yet entirely unperformed. By the sixth article, three rules were agreed upon as binding on a neutral government and applicable to the questions submitted to the arbitrators at Geneva, and in addition the two Governments agreed to observe these rules as between themselves in future, as well as to bring them to the knowledge of other maritime powers, and to invite them to accede to them.

Although the agreement of the high contracting parties to observe these rules as between themselves, and to bring them to the knowledge of the other maritime powers, and to invite them to accede to them is contained in one paragraph, these obligations unitedly forming parts of a single engagement, absolute in its character and coming into operation immediately, no effective steps have been taken in that direction. Whatever delay has necessarily occurred as to other articles there appears to be no reason for delay in reference to that portion of Article VI to which I have referred.

In informing you, therefore, of the readiness of the Government of the United States to proceed with the nomination of a third commissioner, I have to request that you will inform your Government that the United States desires that the requisite steps be taken at the same time, that the three rules laid down in Article VI of the treaty of Washington may be brought to the knowledge of the other maritime powers, and that the invitation provided for may be extended to them to accede thereto. In so doing the two Governments will be enabled at the same time to dispose of the two questions under the treaty of Washington which are still outstanding.

I have the honor, etc.,

HAMILTON FISH.

Now, Mr. Chairman, nobody on this side of the House desires any radicalism in the treatment of this question. So far as I know there is no sentiment of hereditary enmity or ancient opposition connected with the discussion of this question. Those who are believed to have given some credence to the reports of the alleged violation of the neutrality laws in Louisiana and the contributions thereto by other parts of this country only desire that the light be thrown on this question—only desire to interpret the laws of this land in a judicial manner—in a manner that will stand the search light of the legal luminaries of the world. We desire to put no interpretation on that treaty that is not warranted by an intelligent reading of the English language and a clear understanding of the duties of neutrals under the law of nations. And we submit to you that whatever secret correspondence was had with respect to an interpretation of this rule between the two Governments, laying aside the reported refusal of the other governments to accede thereto, there was not even enough of assent between the two Governments to give any such interpretation of the rule as the gentleman from Massachusetts contended for.

He himself admits that the rule needs interpretation if his view is to be sustained. If it does not actually mean that the ports and waters of this Government can not be used for the augmentation of military supplies for any belligerent power, he knew that to successfully contend for his interpretation of the rule it was necessary to go off the face of the treaty. If there was ambiguity there he considered that ambiguity to be latent; and I believe he went out of the domain of published correspondence. I believe he went into the secret archives of the Government, or of that part, anyhow, which has not been published, for his information; and everyone has the right to go there to find the interpretation of the officials of the Government at that time.

When we go there what do we find? We find that the British foreign office placed a restricted interpretation on the second rule of the sixth article of that treaty. We find that the Secretary of State of the United States was willing to limit to a certain extent the interpretation of that rule, but not to the extent the British foreign office desired; but we find that in the American system of statesmanship the Secretary of State desired to be governed in his deliberations on matters of this kind by a reference to the Senate of the United States. And we find that after referring to the Senate the language of that proposed note to the maritime powers, the Senate refused to place upon it the interpretation which the British foreign office desired.

That, Mr. Chairman, disposes of the petty (?) differences suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts. Pray, what would be considered important if these are petty? If there was any doubt as to the real meaning of that treaty—if it was necessary to dig down underneath and examine the records of the State Department for a clear insight into what was meant in the treaty—it is plain there was no agreement to limit the meaning of the words of the treaty of Washington.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. FEELY. In a moment. The last part of rule 2 contains these words:

To suffer either belligerent to make use of its ports or waters as the base of naval operations against the other, for the purpose of renewal or augmentation of military supplies or arms or for the recruitment of men.

That question is as open to-day, so far as any light has been thrown on it in the discussion in this House, as it ever was. And the prohibition can not be said to be limited wholly to naval operations.

I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I have just come into the Hall of the House and consequently have heard but a small part of the gentleman's remarks. I want to ask him whether he does not admit that the interpretation of a treaty between two powers is decided absolutely if the two powers afterwards agree as to what it meant?

Mr. FEELY. Not when the rights of other powers are involved. And I submit to the gentleman that no two of the great powers can enter into any treaty which would foreclose or limit the right, such as neutrality, of other nations without the assent of other nations thereto. If the gentleman from Massachusetts has any other doctrine of international law to submit I would be glad if he would exhibit it now.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I quite agree with the gentleman on that point. What I mean to ask is whether two nations joining in a treaty can not be limited by their own agreement as to the meaning of that treaty as between themselves.

Mr. FEELY. I submit that no nation or no two nations have a monopoly in the matter of declaring what the rights of neutrals are; and no two countries can decide what those rights are and set up their interpretation as against the right of other powers, and furthermore the facts do not disclose any such agreement between Great Britain and the United States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, every time anyone submits here any remarks of sympathy for the struggling burghers in the South African Republic, somebody sneers, somebody laughs, somebody wants to proceed to the regular order of business or to talk about a post-office somewhere, or good roads somewhere else. I am not going into any extended oration declaring my sympathy for the struggling burghers in South Africa to-day. The time for the raising of a voice of sympathy for them has passed in this House and in the Senate of the United States. In the early days of the war there were here (as Daniel Webster was here at the time of the struggles of the Greeks with the Turks) men who raised their voices for liberty, who raised their voices for the upholding of republican forms of government, and for the existence of republican systems everywhere.

Resolutions of sympathy were drafted. The same words that Henry Clay used when here were sent to the Committee on Foreign Affairs of this House, and to the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, but we were too busy at that time civilizing and "benevolently assimilating" to pay any attention to the struggling burghers in South Africa, or any people on earth struggling for liberty and for democratic forms of government. I say that the time has passed for sympathy. Webster raised his voice for the struggling Greek, and Clay raised his voice for them also, and they did not fear then that the simple expression of sympathy would involve them in a trouble with foreign powers. On the 20th of January, 1824, Clay said, in speaking to a resolution in the House expressing sympathy for the struggling Greeks:

Has there, then, been no pillow reflections on such a subject? Is it now that we are for the first time to sleep upon it? The proposition is before us. It asks us to speak a cheering word to the Greeks. Gentlemen have to say yes or no. That monosyllable was all that was asked of them. Let them say distinctly whether they would give so much encouragement as this to a nation of oppressed and struggling patriots in arms, or whether they would shut themselves up in a cold, shivering, contracted, but mistaken policy, which must in the end react upon ourselves. If in a proposition so simple, so plain, so harmless, so free from all real danger as this we were to shut our hearts from the influence of every generous every manly feeling let gentlemen say so at once.

What says Daniel Webster at such a time as this? On January 19, 1824, in the House of Representatives, Mr. Webster said, speaking on his resolution to make provision for defraying the expenses of an agent or commissioner to Greece:

The attitude of the United States, meanwhile, is solemn and impressive. Ours is now the great Republic of the earth; its free institutions are matured by the experiment of a half a century. Yes, as a free Government it goes farther back—the benefits of a free Constitution have virtually been enjoyed here for two centuries. As a free Government, as the freest Government, its growth and strength compel it, willing or unwilling, to stand forth to the contemplation of the world. We can not obscure ourselves if we would; a part we must take, honorable or dishonorable, in all that is done in the civilized world. Now, it will not be denied that within the last ten years there has been agitated in the world a question of vast moment, a question pregnant with consequences favorable or unfavorable to the prevalence—nay, to the very existence—of civil liberty. It is a question which comes home to us. It calls on us for the expression of our opinion of the great question now before us.

Even as late as March 24 the following resolution was introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RANDELL], and every member on this side is ready to vote for it if opportunity is offered:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 170) expressing sympathy for the two South African Republics and urging cessation of hostilities.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Congress of the United States hereby expresses the sympathy of the people of the United States for the people of the South African Republic and the Orange Free State in their heroic struggle to maintain their liberty and independence.

SEC. 2. That the Congress appeals to the British Government in the interest of humanity to accept overtures for peace, cease hostilities, and endeavor to bring about a just and honorable settlement of existing differences between the British Government and the two South African Republics, to the end that peace may be established.

SEC. 3. That the United States should, and will, fairly and honorably maintain a position of strict neutrality in this contest between nations friendly to us, and that the Administration should see to it that the neutrality laws are rigorously and impartially enforced.

But we were too interested in other concerns; we were too interested in administering the water cure of civilization to people of other climes to pay any attention to the question of republican forms of governments on earth, and so nothing was said. Gentlemen, the time has passed when the people of South Africa desire any sympathy from us.

ENFORCEMENT OF NEUTRALITY ALL THAT IS DESIRED.

All they desire of us, and all the people of this country in whose veins run blood in which courses the warmth of the love of liberty, ask of the House and of the Senate and of the Government at this time is that our arms, like the arms of justice, shall be always uplifted in token that neutrality shall be preserved in all its spirit and in all its letter. I am not personally acquainted with the conditions existing in Louisiana. I have only to take what you take, the report from the newspapers and from officials who have investigated there. But I believe there exists a base of supplies for the British Government, which ought to be investigated and which, I understand, has been officially investigated, although the report of the investigation has not as yet been submitted to us.

I hope that that submission will be made to us, that we shall see whether we have been as a nation derelict in our duty under the international code, whether we have allowed any great nation, no matter whether she claims to be our cousin, no matter whether she claims to be the mother of all our civilization, of all that we have to be thankful for in this country, whether we have allowed to have extended from this country and this people help for a great nation on one side, as against no help, not even sympathy, for a weak little nation on the other side. The South African republics, whether successful or unsuccessful, will take their places in history, and historians will allot to them, whether we do or not, the place of a nation that was brave and true to its ideals; that took up a sword in a holy and a just war; that contended against the right of another nation claiming a sort of domain over them, or suzerainty over them, to enter into their internal affairs for the simple reason that the material welfare of gentlemen inerested in a mining company was at stake.

No one, I say, can read the history as written by the English themselves of the inception of this war without feeling a sympathy for the Boers on account of the manner in which they were dragged into this war, and no one can read the history of that war without being convinced of the brutality and ferocity with which it was carried on by those whose desire it was to exploit the gold mines of South Africa. No one can read the history of how those poor people, driven from one place to another, hunting for pasturage for their cattle, settled down in peace and in quiet after the cam paign of 1881 and the convention of 1884 in the belief that hereafter they would be undisturbed in working out their own salvation and in governing themselves, then happening to find themselves the center of a great mining horde coming in upon them, to upset their institutions and to drive them from their own fastnesses, first, by the power of the bullet, which failed, and second, by the power of the ballot, which until to-day has failed, has absolutely failed—no one can read that history without feeling in his heart a sympathy for these unfortunate people.

Gentlemen, I desire not to bring anything into the record here of a sensational character, for gallery-playing statesmanship has no part in the category of my ideals, but I look upon this plainly as any American citizen looks upon it, with a desire to see that justice is done and that our Government keeps its position in the honorable place where it ever has been kept. In answer to the remarks of some who deem this a subject irrelevant I desire to quote the language of the Hon. James Brice himself as to the cause of this war.

It being admitted that the war was an unjust one, that the attitude of the British Government in attempting to stamp out and eradicate this Republic is an unjust attitude, then I say, that fact being admitted, any man who holds a commission from any constituency in this country has a right to raise his voice in so far as it can be effective in setting forth the position that he believes that our country ought to occupy when a kingdom is waging an unjust war against a republic. If we say in private that republican forms of government are the best and that we desire to see them succeed, who can accuse us of an unfriendly act if we say that in public, and if the Government says it?

Says the Hon. James Bryce, M. P., whose impartiality is everywhere admitted:

Under the convention of 1884, which fixed the relations of Britain and the South African Republic, the latter had the most complete control of its internal affairs, and Britain possessed no more general right of interfering with those affairs than with the affairs of Belgium or Portugal. The suzerainty which has been claimed for her, if it existed (for its existence under the convention of 1884 is disputed), related solely to the power of making treaties, and did not touch any domestic matter. When, therefore, the British Government was appealed to by the Uitlander-British subjects who lived in the Transvaal to secure a redress of their grievances, her title to address the Boer Government and demand redress depended primarily upon the terms of the convention of 1884, any violation of which she was entitled to complain of; and, secondly, upon the general right which every State possesses to interpose on behalf of its subjects when they are being ill treated in any foreign country. Under these circumstances it might have been expected that the questions which would have arisen before Britain went to war for the sake of her subjects living in the Transvaal would be these two:

First. Were the grievances of her subjects so serious, was the behavior of the Transvaal Government, when asked for redress, so defiant or so evasive as to contribute a proper casus belli?

Secondly. Assuming that the grievances (which were real, but in my opinion not so serious as has been frequently alleged) and the behavior of the Transvaal did amount to a casus belli, was it wise for Britain, considering the state of feeling in South Africa, and the mischief to be expected from causing permanent disaffection among the Dutch population; and considering also the high probability that the existing system of government in the Transvaal would soon, through the action of natural causes, break down and disappear—was it wise for her to declare and prosecute war at this particular moment?

Strange to say, neither of these two questions ever in fact arose. That which caused the war was the discussion of another matter altogether, which was admittedly not a grievance for the redress of which Britain had any right to interfere, and which, therefore, could not possibly amount to a casus belli. This matter was the length of time which should elapse before the new immigrants into the Transvaal could be admitted to citizenship, a matter which was entirely within the discretion of the Transvaal legislature.

Then he goes on to state the commencement of negotiations, the raising of extra troops by the British Government, and the commencement of hostilities by the Boers.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is not to criticise this Government; it is, in the first instance, to set forth my views as to the clear and proper interpretation of the treaty of Washington here, and to call attention to my belief that if Port Chalmette is being used as a base of supplies for the furnishing of munitions of war to the British in South Africa some attention ought to be paid to that matter and these operations should be stopped, and the power of this Government be brought to bear in compelling a cessation of them.

Sentiment in this country doubtless is in favor of the struggling Republics of South Africa. Nobody, Mr. Chairman, desires to take advantage of that sentiment for political reasons. Nobody desires to drag into the discussions of this House questions immaterial to ourselves as an American Republic; but we do believe that wherever there are respectable allegations of a violation of neutrality those respectable allegations should be examined into and there should be no further violation of neutrality permitted by our Government. Let us hope that the Republics of South Africa will carry on their own war; that they will succeed, if you please, if it is not high treason to express a wish that they succeed; and if they do not succeed, that while they are endeavoring to succeed the United States Government shall extend no aid to Great Britain in endeavoring to stamp them out and to erase from the map of the earth one more republic. Let us take this question, if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] desires, out of politics. No one desires to criticise any Administration that does its duty. No one will. All anyone wants is fairness and the enforcement of the neutrality laws. [Applause.]

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, when I came into the hall a few minutes ago the gentleman from Illinois was criticising some remarks I made the other day on the duty of the United States as a neutral in the present Boer war. I regret that I did not hear the first part of the gentleman's remarks. But I wish to point out one or two erroneous statements which I did hear. The gentleman stated that I quoted, in order to maintain that we were doing our duty and to maintain our interpretation of the treaty, from secret archives of the State Department. What I quoted is in a published Senate document, No. 1, volume 1, of the third session of the Forty-fifth Congress, and a message from the President of the United States. I gave the citation in my printed remarks. So that when the gentleman states I quoted from secret correspondence he was certainly erroneous.

Mr. FEELY. Will the gentleman kindly point out the citation?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I will, if the gentleman will send me the copy of the RECORD, or if he will read my remarks he will see himself. It is on page 4836, the third paragraph from the bottom. I confess it strikes me as a little strange that the gentleman should criticise remarks I made when, apparently, he has not even read them, because the citation is clearly given.

Mr. FEELY. Will the gentleman kindly read the page?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Four thousand eight hundred and thirty-six, about ten lines from the bottom of the page, in the first column. Now, that citation——

Mr. FEELY. I will say to the gentleman that the citation made was not important and was not regarded as important in this discussion. The citation to which I referred was the letter of Hamilton Fish, which I pointed out as being an important document. I would say to the gentleman, further, that if I did ascribe to him the fact of his having gone to the secret archives of the Government, I will state to him that he was compelled to do so or he would not have found citations which he quoted. And I certainly do not intend to question in any way his right to go there as an individual, the same as anyone else would have done.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I did not go to any secret archives, and have not been near the State Department in investigating this subject. I want to say to the gentleman that if he had taken the pains to look up my citation he would have found this whole correspondence, and I cited nothing that was not therein contained.

Mr. FEELY. That does not contain the letter of Hamilton Fish that I had read.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. That is contained in Wharton's Digest of International Law.

Mr. FEELY. This letter which I read in connection with my remarks?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I do not know what letter you read.

Mr. FEELY. I am informed by the officials of the State Department that it was never published. Part of the letter was published as Document 215, Foreign Relations, but the part of the letter which bears on this question was not published, but was expressly omitted.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I did not cite anything that was never published, and the letter from Mr. Fish which I cited was published in Wharton's Digest. I do not think it is consistent in the gentleman to criticise me for citing from the secret archives when it appears that the gentleman has been doing that himself. I did not quote anything not printed in an official document or in the Digest of International Law.

Mr. FEELY. I did not mean that in any sense of criticism, but I was looking up especially that matter, upon which we may possibly learn much more later on.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I do not criticise the gentleman for looking up the secret archives, and if he did not mean to criticise me I am contented; but he cited it as a fact, and what he cites as a fact was an error. If the gentleman in reading my remarks had looked up the citation I gave, he would have discovered everything which I referred to. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman contends that our right as a neutral was not defined by the interpretation which the two Governments agreed to of rule 2 of the treaty of Washington. There again I think the gentleman is quite wrong in his view of international law. The United States and Great Britain agreed upon the meaning of this rule 2, which says that neutrals shall not allow belligerents to augment supplies or use their ports as naval bases.

That was in the treaty of Washington, between the United States and Great Britain. Consequently the only nations that were bound by that statement were the United States and Great Britain. No other nation in the world was bound by it. We said that for the purpose of the Alabama claims we will recognize that rule, and we will also call the attention of other European nations to it; will put an interpretation on it and try to get them to ultimately adopt the same rule for the future.

Mr. FEELY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts this: He has stated other nations are not bound by the interpretations which we and the English Government placed upon that rule. Admitting that we did, for the sake of argument, are other nations limited to that construction?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Why, of course they are not limited at all by that rule. It is not a rule of international law; it is a rule of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain.

Mr. FEELY. But then, Mr. Chairman, the interpretation placed upon that rule by the British Government can not be considered a part of international law.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Certainly not, Mr. Chairman. The interpretation put upon it by Great Britain and the United States only interpreted that rule of the treaty and made that rule between those two nations a part of the law, and that only. I say that nobody can contend here that the rule can have a different meaning, inasmuch as the United States and Great Britain, the only two parties to the treaty, afterwards stated exactly what they meant by it, both nations taking pains to say that they did not mean that it should be interpreted in the way in which the gentleman is now contending that it should be and gentlemen on that side have before contended, but these two nations have explicitly stated what was the meaning of the rule, and they went on to reduce to writing their understanding, in order when it came to the consideration of other nations their meaning should be clear.

Any other nation can accept that rule or not. Up to date no nation has been willing to accept it, and therefore it is simply a rule between the United States and Great Britain. Those two powers have interpreted the treaty, and it only means what they have interpreted it to mean.

Mr. FEELY. I would like to ask the gentleman how far a power like Germany would be bound by that interpretation?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Not at all; Germany does not recognize the rule.

Mr. FEELY. How can the gentleman rely upon that interpretation as a part of the international law when he says that no other government would be bound or limited by it?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Illinois either does not or will not understand me. I stated explicitly that I did not claim it was a part of the international law; it is simply a treaty between the United States and Great Britain. These two powers have made a treaty, and have interpreted it, and have put in writing what they mean by it. When Great Britain adopted it and asked us what we meant by it, and we stated that we meant what we now claim, and she agreed to that meaning, after that neither of these powers can claim anything else. If any other nation should adopt it, they can interpret it as they please.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois. I would like to ask the gentleman if this war was between Germany and England instead of between England and the South African Republic, and this country was allowing its ports to be used as a source of military supplies, supplying horses and mules to Germany, would the gentleman then put the interpretation on the treaty that he now does?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Of course I would; certainly I would. That is the only interpretation that either the United States or England ever have a right to put on this treaty, the interpretation that we put upon it at the time, and which both nations have said that it meant. After that we are both bound by it and can not put any other interpretation upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FEELY].

Mr. FEELY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state that the gentleman from Massachusetts relies on an interpretation of the rule of the treaty of Washington that is only a declaration of what national neutrality is.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. That is where the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. FEELY. One moment; if I am mistaken the gentleman from Massachusetts will have time to criticise my remarks. We are discussing the laws of neutrality, and he relies upon the declaration of the law of neutrality insisted upon by Great Britain, refused to be acceded to by the United States Senate and by the Secretary of State, and one which he admits that the maritime powers of the world would scoff at and pay no attention to.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I will now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the House river and harbor bill appropriated $175,000 for the completion of lock and dam at Harpeth Shoals, known as Lock A, and $5,000 for maintenance. Harpeth Shoals is officially known as Lock A, and is the beginning of what is known as the "Lower Cumberland" improvement. The work on this part of the river is to erect locks and dams, five in number, from A to G, both inclusive.

The "Upper Cumberland" begins at Lock No. 1. This lock is located 2 miles below Nashville. The House river and harbor bill carried $105,000 to complete the lock and dam at Lock No. 1.

The Senate has amended this provision by striking out the words "for the completion of Lock and Dam No. 1 and for maintenance, $105,000," and substituted the words "continuing improvement and for maintenance, $205,000," which amount is for "improving Cumberland River, Tennessee, above Nashville," as the bill states: that is, for improving the Upper Cumberland, which begins at Lock 1.

It will be observed the Senate has added $95,000 to the House bill for the "Upper Cumberland."

It is my purpose now to show why Congress should appropriate money to continue the work on both the Lower and Upper Cumberland at the same time. I must be brief, as my time is short, and state tersely the salient facts. The Senate report accompanying the bill as it stands amended in the Senate, at page 343, states:

> The masonry of lock walls and abutment Nos. 1, 5, 6, and 7 is completed; Lock No. 2 will require no dam abutment, and the dam abutment of Locks 3 and 4 are still to be provided.
> With the completion of the operation now in progress at Locks 1 and 5, the work remaining to be done in order that the seven locks (1 to 7, inclusive) may be made operative is estimated to cost $398,740.15.

As the bill left the House work is being done on both the Upper and Lower Cumberland, while, as stated, the Senate, seeing the importance of at least continuing the work on Locks 2 to 7, inclusive, has added $95,000 to the Upper Cumberland appropriation.

Congress has already spent nearly a million and a half dollars on the Upper Cumberland and the work done is doing no one any good. It is a dead investment as it stands, a loss to the people and the Government.

The official report last issued by the War Department, part 3, states that from January 1 to December 31, 1900, in the Upper Cumberland the total tonnage was 289,218 and that, "as far as ascertainable," the "estimated value" of this tonnage was $8,395,055; passengers carried, 17,906; vessels plying thereon, 31. During the fiscal year 1896 there were only 48,393 on the Upper Cumberland; 1897, 82,675; 1898, 89,776, and that in 1899 it rose to 294,763 tons for the calendar year, and in 1900 (calendar year), 289,218.

The total tonnage by this same report for the lower Cumberland from January 1, 1900, to December 31, 1900, was 407,088; estimated value, $1,140,616; passengers carried, 11,000. For the entire river, then, we have for the year 1900 a total tonnage of 696,306 tons, with an estimated value of $13,535,671. This tonnage and its value I am satisfied are incomplete and give less than the total value of this tonnage.

We see the official report states that the value of the upper Cumberland tonnage, "as far as ascertainable," is $8,395,055. In other words, the tonnage and its value of the Cumberland has not been fully ascertained, and I may add the possibilities of this river as a commercial stream are incalculable, and will be, so rich is the country this river taps, until possibly these locks and dams as planned are completed.

These figures show that this river "is worthy of the attention and fostering care of the Government," and that the Cumberland is not an "insignificant" stream.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], in his speech on the river and harbor bill, found at page 3091 of the RECORD, recently said:

> I think it will be conceded by all that when a waterway has attained a tonnage of over 100,000 tons per annum it is worthy of the attention and fostering care of the Government.

The tonnage, I have shown, aggregates 696,306, exclusive of 98,906 passengers, and I am satisfied if the true tonnage was known the tonnage alone would amount to more than that given in this war report. So, on the question of tonnage, this river deserves "the attention and fostering care of the Government."

Again. I read the language of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], as follows:

> I think it will be again conceded that when the value of commerce on a waterway exceeds $1,000,000 per annum it is taken out of the category of streams which are insignificant.

I have shown that the estimated value of the tonnage on this river is $13,535,671. So that by this official data and the words of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] the Cumberland River can not be placed in the list of "insignificant waterways."

So much in making, from indisputable data, the Cumberland River "a stream worthy of the fostering care of the Government."

If Congress would complete the locks and dams on the Upper Cumberland, where practically only the dams are needed, except as stated, the work could be done in a year or two, great benefit would be derived by the people of Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio, and Mississippi valleys.

At the same time Congress should appropriate money to continue the work on the Lower Cumberland. This plan the friends of the Cumberland all insist upon, and I am glad to see the Senate has determined to go up and down this river at the same time in improving and has taken a step further than the House in going farther up the river by appropriating $95,000 additional over and above the House appropriation.

The policy of the House committee seems to have been, and to be, to complete the first lock on the Upper Cumberland, No. 1, and then go on down the river, completing the work lock by lock, A to G, which would take many years the slow way the work has been done by reason of small appropriations.

The work on the Upper Cumberland to Lock 7 could be completed in about two years if money was appropriated for that purpose.

The hidden wealth of the country drained by the Upper Cumberland has never been utilized and will not be until river access to the Cumberland is given by improving it with these locks and dams. Almost mountains of coal, unbroken forests, and immense cornfields in this section are now rendered practically valueless as to the outside world for want of this river improvement. Nashville alone buys millions of agricultural products from Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Missouri, when the Cumberland River is navigable, or the rainy season, while there is more or less of such traffic throughout the year in its present condition and low water. The farms of Davidson County are known all over the world for raising the finest of horses and blooded stock, while Montgomery, Robertson, Cheatham, Stewart, Houston, and Dickson counties in Tennessee and many in Kentucky grow millions and millions of tobacco for direct foreign trade.

Why, Mr. Chairman, as a matter of fact, "Nashville is the fourth city in the Union in grinding what is known as winter wheat, the capital so invested ten years ago amounting to $5,931,137, and the value of the product, 20,797,279 tons"—more, sir, than every other Southern State, including West Virginia, Kentucky, Maryland, including also Oklahoma, New Mexico, and the Indian Territory.

But, Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to enter into a comparison of the city of Nashville or the State of Tennessee with sister cities or States. I simply wish to show the great importance of improving this river that starts in the mountains of Kentucky and sweeps through the blue-grass region of Tennessee to its mouth in western Kentucky.

I may add that the mouth of the river has been improved by the Government since Congress has undertaken to improve the Cumberland River.

But let me now bring forward some additional official data which will surprise those who are not conversant with the facts, as they were indeed a surprise to me. I have taken the pains for weeks and weeks, if not months, to search for these statistics. The Cumberland River Improvement Association, composed of patriotic and intelligent Tennesseeans, were asked to furnish this data by the chairman of the River and Harbor Committee. But the figures which I now have cover more territory than those the association submitted to the committee some weeks ago. I have here the population, and true and assessed valuation of all property, of 65 counties in Kentucky and Tennessee, located in what is well termed the Cumberland River Valley and drained by the Cumberland River.

The total population for these 65 counties was, in 1900, 1,149,586; in 1890, 991,900.

The true value of the real estate and improvements in these counties in 1890 was $241,712,846, while the assessed value of the same in 1890 was $144,048,041.

The assessed value of the personalty in 1890 was $62,990,593, while the total assessed valuation of this real and personal property in 1890 was $207,038,634.

This was the true and assessed valuation of this property ten years ago. Of course the value now is much greater. I regret not having these values for the year 1900.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire at this point to ask unanimous consent to insert this table in my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to print the table to which he refers as part of his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have had five minutes more yielded to me. Certainly I have not occupied ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has occupied eleven minutes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I had five minutes additional yielded to me by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman from Tennessee has four minutes left.

The table referred to by Mr. GAINES of Tennessee is as follows:

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, just a word or two more. I received a day or two ago a very valuable communication—a letter from the secretary of the Ohio Valley

Improvement Association—insisting on the improvement of the Cumberland River. The letter contains also a petition, signed by a great number of river men, who own many boats, and so forth, operating on the Cumberland and Ohio rivers. The letter reads as follows:

PADUCAH, April 17, 1902.

Hon. JOHN W. GAINES, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We notice by the papers that the Cumberland River has been passed by the present Congress almost unnoticed, and that you are making a hard fight to get in good work when the conference of the two Houses meets.

We have hurriedly gotten up the inclosed petition, but find many of our boat owners absent, and can not obtain their signatures in time to go with this.

We enjoy the distinction of having more steamboat and barge tonnage here than any other city in the valley, excepting Pittsburg and Cincinnati, and we greatly feel the need of river improvement on the Cumberland. We trust this may be of some little service to you; would like to have sent it via Nashville, where many others would have signed.

Yours, very truly,

F. M. DOUGHERTY, General Agent.

The petition, Mr. Chairman, is signed by a large number of the leading boatmen who live in the neighborhood of Paducah owning various boat lines.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert this petition as a part of my remarks. It speaks of many logs and snags in the river and urges immediate relief.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to print the documents to which he refers in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The petition referred to is as follows:

PADUCAH, KY., April 17, 1902.

To the honorable Senators and Members of Congress of the United States:

Be it petitioned by the business men and boatmen of this immediate vicinity, living and dwelling at the nearest point to the mouth of the Cumberland River, it having come to our knowledge that there is a possibility that the Cumberland River will not share largely in the appropriations of the present Congress:

We desire to set forth in a brief manner the necessity of improvement of that stream. But more especially the lower portion of it, from Nashville, Tenn., to its mouth. There is a great volume of business done on the lower end of the stream that may not be known to the people generally living on the upper end of this stream above Nashville. The packet lines running from Nashville, Tenn., to Evansville, Ind., and from Nashville, Tenn., to Paducah, Ky., do a large business when the stage of water permits navigation. The log and lumber business from that stream is large. But the largest industry is that of railroad ties taken to the North and great Northwest, amounting in the aggregate to many millions per annum.

There is much complaints from the boat owners and their captains and pilots on account of the logs and snags in the channel of the stream, which at a very small cost could be removed, giving a wider channel, to enable the towing steamers with their fleets of barges to pass in safety.

We are glad to be able to commend the work already done on the lower end of the river, and will be pleased to see a continuance of the same.

W. Baker, manager Ayer & Lord Tie Company steamers Russell Lord, Jim T. Duffy, jr., Pavonia, Inverness, and Hosmer, with fleet of 65 barges; Henry A. Pettu, president Paducah Dry Dock Company; Walter Hoagland, manager Tennessee Towing Company; James Hogan, superintendent St. Louis and Tennessee River Packet Company; J. D. Render, superintendent steamers I. N. Hook and Wilford; J. T. Bishop, superintendent J. B. A. and Mary N; Ed Woolfolk, secretary Paducah Towing Company steamers Woolfolk, and Monie Bauer; Wm. Rutledge, agent Standard Tie Company; G. F. McCabe, general agent of the Holcomb-Lobb Company steamer Lyda.

J. F. Beaty, agent Bradley-Watkins Tie Company; I. H. Fowler, president Evansville, Paducah and Cairo Packet Company; J. L. Kilgore, owner steamer Maude Kilgore; John McCaffrey, owner steamer Ten Broeck; D. A. Geiser, mayor of Paducah, Ky.; J. W. McKnight, president Paducah Marine Railways; C. E. Bostwick, president Pittsburg Mining Company, on Cumberland River; Jas. Owen, owner Paducah Ferry Company and mining properties on Lower Cumberland River, with 3,000 acres, and shippers of 50,000 to 60,000 bushels corn, chiefly up Cumberland River, annually, also large shippers for his neighboring farmers.

Mr. SIBLEY. Mr. Chairman, the members of this House are not unaware of the fact that I have been an earnest advocate of expansion, that I have favored the acquisition of the Philippine Archipelago, and have attempted to defend the policy of the Administration, if any defense were necessary, in its efforts for the pacification of those islands.

It has been my belief that not alone honor, but duty, justifies our position there; that an all-wise and overruling Providence has committed to us the task of carrying the arts of peace and the story of the cross to the remotest and darkest regions of the globe, and that our standards, moral and civic, are to permeate and bless the downtrodden of God's children wherever found. It has been my belief that the commercial welfare of our nation demands that we should control that archipelago, standing as it does as the gateway of the oriental world. It is the judgment of all investigators that Manila is destined to become one of the greatest commercial cities of the globe; that there will be assembled at that port the products of the teeming millions of the Far East, and therefrom distribution to the markets of the world, and that our nation will profit from the acquisition of this archipelago beyond the imagination of man at the present time to conceive.

Not infrequently have we read or listened to the charges that American soldiers were cruel in the conduct of the warfare in the archipelago. Often these statements were made, at least so it seemed to me, for partisan purposes. But, Mr. Chairman, when we have read, as we have in the past twenty-four hours, that a general, wearing the uniform of the Army of the United States, one who stands under the shadow of the banner of freedom, issues orders, not to conciliate a province, but to leave it a howling wilderness, and to kill all above 10 years of age, then humanity must stand aghast and look backward for more than eighteen centuries for the prototype of the modern Herod.

In the veins of what boy has the blood not run cold as he has read of such world-scourges as Timour the Tartar, Attila, "the scourge of God," or of the atrocities of the invading Saracens? If the public press correctly reports the general's admission that these were his orders, then we can thank our God that it has taken eighteen centuries to produce another Attila, another Timour the Tartar; and we blush that such a one should be called an American.

We have heard much of the "water cure," and have believed that these statements were untrue, or at least exaggerated. But within the last few days attempts have been made to explain away or minimize the terrible features of such a torture.

Can any man whose blood bounds in his pulses, any man who has read his Bible or has been reared at the knee of a Christian mother, justify the perpetration of such cruelties upon any being who wears the guise and image of his Creator? Men attempting to justify pumping a man full of water, drowning him, and then bringing him back to life by thumping upon his distended stomach with the butts of muskets! This is not civilization. This is barbarism. This is not Christianizing the world. This is not leading humanity toward the higher summits of life. This is searing and blighting the life, brutalizing the instincts of those who must participate in or witness such methods. When American soldiers are compelled to even witness the infliction of such cruelties under the command of a general officer, then we are taking the boys who left Christian homes, full of love of country, of patriotism, and of humanity, and brutalizing them. This will bring them back not the better qualified, as they should be, for the higher duties of citizenship, but with contempt for the sanctity of human life and insensible to human suffering. This is the turning back of the hands upon the dial which marks the advancing steps of a Christian civilization. This is the defilement of the temple which Christianity erects in the lives of good men.

We can all rejoice that the case before us is exceptional, that this cruelty has not marked the general conduct of our arms in the East, and that but few Americans have participated in the perpetration of such outrages. During the past winter Governor Taft has been before the committee of which I have the honor to be a member, and I am sure that each member of the committee enjoyed, as I did, listening to his testimony, to hear of his success in the pacification of the provinces; and all fair-minded men recognize the grand and good work that that Commission has been doing and has so well-nigh accomplished in the pacification of nearly all of these provinces.

But, Mr. Chairman, it is my judgment that no race of human beings upon this earth can be permanently pacified through methods of drowning and then bringing them back to life by the thumps of the butt of a musket upon the distended stomach. So long as a generation shall live within that province which shall be told of those cruelties, told of the edict which put to death—innocent and guilty alike—those above 10 years of age, will not the memory of that wrong rankle, and will those people ever look with confidence upon the people of this Republic? As one who stands upon the Republican side of this Chamber; as one who believes that he voices the sentiment of men upon both sides of this Chamber; as one who trusts he belongs, not alone in the Republican ranks, but in the ranks of the brotherhood of man the wide world round, I wish to voice the protest from members upon both sides of this Chamber when we declare against such abuses of power. [Applause.]

A friend of mine said to me but a moment ago, "You had better wait until you hear the General's defense before you make your protest." If the General is correctly reported and stands by the declaration with which he is credited, assuming the responsibility for such orders, then I desire to say that there is no defense; and I hope the President of the United States will have the courage, upon this man's admission, to discharge him dishonorably from the service which he has thus disgraced. [Applause.]

If he is correctly reported as admitting that he issued orders to leave that province a howling waste and wilderness and to kill all above 10 years of age, the innocent with the guilty, that man ought never to be permitted to stay in the service of the United States until the sun goes down. He is a blot not alone upon the army in the Philippines; he is a disgrace to every man who ever wore the uniform of the United States, and he is a blot and a disgrace upon our present civilization. Wait and hear what his justification may be! That man does not live who can justify such orders! [Applause.] There is no justification. There can be no justification. I care not how adroit may be his lawyers, how subtle may be their reasoning, or how cunningly they may frame their plea; the fact, admitted by his own mouth, that he issued such orders is sufficient for me to hope that there is the courage and the patriotism, the humanity and the Christianity, at the other end of this avenue that will not permit him to wear the Federal uniform twenty-four hours hence.

This is no question of party. This rises above all party levels. In the name of humanity we protest. For the fame of our civilization; for the honor of those who wore both the blue and the gray during the long years of civic strife; in the name of those who wore the nation's uniform and marched to glory and to honor beneath the folds of the American flag in Cuba, in Porto Rico, and in the Philippines; in the name of the compassionate Christ, whose followers we profess to be, we protest and deny the right of any man to wear the American uniform under a commission from this Government and place such a blot upon the banner of freedom. Nor can we believe that the God of battles can march with us where such practices are permitted to prevail. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. OTEY].

Mr. OTEY. Mr. Chairman, in considering the matter of the agricultural bill the following bill introduced by me should, in my opinion, have the most prominent place, for nothing can be so essential for the well-being and progress of the great farming interest of this country as good roads:

A bill (H. R. 12650) to provide good roads in the 45 States and 4 Territories of the United States.

Whereas it is of the greatest importance that there should be a uniform system of good roads in the 45 States and 4 Territories of the United States, to the end that there may be increased facilities for the dissemination of knowledge by means of rural free delivery and more intimate and efficient interstate commerce; and

Whereas the people of the United States demand good roads as part compensation for the burdens of taxation which they bear for foreign commerce: Now, therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the sum of $100,000,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be set aside by the Secretary of the Treasury, to be known as the "good-roads fund:" Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may, if no money is available unappropriated, sell bonds for the purposes of this act, rate of interest not to exceed 2 per cent per annum, under such rules and regulations as he may deem proper.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to apply the said amount, or so much thereof as hereinafter provided, in the construction of good roads and highways in the 45 States and 4 Territories on such plans and specifications as he may adopt as being fitted to secure permanent, good, and substantial highways in the respective localities, such roads and highways to be varied in construction only as may be demanded in the character of material in different sections.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer from said fund so much of the said good-roads fund as the Secretary of Agriculture may from time to time call for to pay for the said construction of said highways.

SEC. 4. That the said construction shall proceed contemporaneously in the aforesaid States and Territories as nearly as practicable: Provided, That after $1 per capita has been expended in any State or States or Territory or Territories no further expenditure is to be made until work is completed in all the aforesaid States and Territories: Provided, That any section of road not exceeding 25 miles may be completed in excess of the aforesaid per capita to prevent deterioration and loss.

SEC. 5. That condemnation proceedings must be had under the existing laws of the respective States and Territories, and all damages assessed must be charged to and paid out of that State's quota of the good-roads fund in which the damage is assessed.

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to organize a force of engineers to superintend the construction of said roads and highways, which shall consist of one chief engineer to every —— miles, at a salary of —— dollars, and one assistant engineer to every —— miles, at a salary of —— dollars, with such camp allowance and equipage as may be approved by him (the Secretary of Agriculture), and such other clerks, operatives, and laborers below the grade of $1,200 as he may determine: Provided, That all such appointments must be distributed in the respective States in proportion to population, if practicable, and such total number of employees shall not exceed —— in number to every —— miles under construction.

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall construct said roads by letting to contract to lowest bidder, unless, in his opinion, the work may be done more satisfactorily otherwise, and he is authorized to do any part or the whole of the work in any or all of the aforesaid States and Territories by Government force or contract, as it may appear to him best for the public interest.

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall provide all instruments, stationery, appliances, utensils, camp equipage, live stock, vehicles, and other articles, and shall cause all necessary printing to be done, the cost of all of which and the salaries of all engineers and operatives shall be paid out of the general fund and be chargeable to the quota of the good-roads fund of no State or Territory: Provided, That the salaries of all engineers, assistant engineers, and other employees while actually engaged in work in any State or Territory shall be charged to the said State's quota of the good-roads fund.

SEC. 9. That the balance of the $100,000,000 remaining after the general expenditures and the expenditure of $1 per capita in said States and Territories shall constitute a reserve fund to be dealt with by Congress.

SEC. 10. That for purposes of this act the census of 1900 is to be the basis, and this appropriation shall be available July 1, 1902.

SEC. 11. That nothing in this act shall be construed as authorizing the improvement of any part of a road or street within the corporate limits of any incorporated town or city.

SEC. 12. That the Secretary of Agriculture may, if he deems it advisable, establish under his supervision a bureau of good roads, with a chief with a salary of —— dollars, to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

SEC. 13. That all roads constructed under this act when completed are to become the property of the respective States and Territories and subject to the laws and regulations of said States and Territories.

SEC. 14. That no work shall be done in any State or Territory under this act until the legislatures of said States and Territories shall have passed resolutions accepting and approving of its terms.

SEC. 15. That the Secretaries of the Treasury and Agriculture are hereby directed to enforce the provisions of this act without delay, and all acts or parts of acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

In my opinion the most important question before the American people to-day is that of good roads. Before it Nicaraguan Canal, ship subsidy, Cuban, or any other reciprocity sinks into insignificance.

Good roads, like all other good things, cost. Cheap articles are of inferior quality, hence our bad roads.

If we are to have good roads, we must pay for them. To pay for them we must be taxed. Then, if taxed, how? By the Federal or State government? I am in favor of the whole system of roads in this country being placed under Government construction, to be paid for out of the United States Treasury.

In a word, as you will observe, my bill provides for the direct appropriation of $100,000,000 to be expended in the 45 States and 4 Territories of the United States in proportion to population, the census of 1900 to be the basis, and in no State to be expended more than $1 per capita of population. Construction to be under Department of Agriculture; work to be done contemporaneously in all sections as nearly as practicable. Secretary of Agriculture may let by contract or construct otherwise, as he may determine, under specifications and plans to be uniform except as to variation to suit climatic and local conditions, but in all cases good and substantial highways. Legislature of States and Territories to approve and accept the provisions of this act before work shall begin. Appropriation to be available July 1, 1902; purpose of the act to facilitate dissemination of knowledge by means of mail delivery to every man's door, to foster education by facilitating school attendance, and to promote more intimate interstate relations.

It will be observed that if the Government would issue bonds, $100,000,000 at 2 per cent, it would be a tax of 2½ cents per capita to meet this annual charge, a mere bagatelle.

Will anybody tell me why the United States Government should not construct good roads in the various States and Territories? Is there any difference in thus applying public money and applying it to creeks, branches, and rivers? Both are to expedite transportation, to help interstate and foreign commerce.

Suppose the $400,000,000 (perhaps more) spent in the Philippine acquisition had been turned loose, under the well-directed efforts of some executive department of the Government, for construction of good roads, does anyone for a moment question which would have been the more beneficial to the people of this country? We have spent $450,000,000 on rivers and harbors, millions for railroads, immigration, irrigation, foreign commerce, mail facilities, and are going to spend hundreds of millions for an isthmian canal—all worthy objects—and yet not a cent in a century for good roads. Public health appeals for it. It is no exaggeration to say that public roads leading to our towns and cities contain cesspools of disease, microbe incubators, and germ-life preservers.

I repeat, tell me why we should not have good roads constructed under the supervision of the Government. Are not creeks, bayous, spring branches made navigable by the magic touch of the river and harbor bill? Only about $80,000,000 was appropriated last week. Do they not dam and lock streams to improve transportation? Is it not for the public good? But any more than would be public roads?

Submit to-day to the voters of the United States taxpayers a proposition for appropriation of $200,000,000 for good roads on the one hand, or for an isthmian canal on the other, as popular as the latter is, and good roads would win 10 to 1.

As much good as the great canal would do, it shrinks into diminutive proportions compared with the enthusiasm for good roads.

As said a man of distinction respecting this great question:

Our people lead the world in almost everything else, but in this matter of building common roads they bring up the very rear of the procession. For instance, it is only 14 or 15 miles from the national capital to Mount Vernon, the home and final resting place of Washington. Though he has been dead more than a hundred years, the road between the capital and Mount Vernon has not been improved to any perceptible degree since he died. It is circuitous and at times almost impassable. The time has come when the General Government should again take up this work and expend some reasonable proportion of its great revenues in building up the main roads of the country. This is especially desirable in view of the fact that new and wonderful inventions have been brought forward within the last two years by which inanimate power can be applied in place of animal power upon these highways. With the bicycle, the automobile, the traction engine, and the suburban street car, we have many new vehicles the like of which was never known in the earlier days.

Now, when we remember that New York is nearer to San Francisco than it was to Baltimore seventy years ago, when the one exchanges goods with the other every hour of the day, when we can travel more miles in a day than we could in sixty days then, when we can now whisper across the continent, we may think that it was the inventive genius alone of such men as Watt, Stephenson, Fulton, Bell, and Edison; but not so. "We have directed the national hand and loosened the national purse strings" to the encouragement of improved industrial methods, to the establishment of great commercial and mechanical centers, and in certain directions have so extended national aid as to enlarge and quicken the means of all transportation except that on public roads, and have expended millions to provide outlets for the accumulating inland trade. It was good statesmanship to do it. Yet it was less statesmanship that inspired it than it was the insistence of capital for Government aid.

As said a writer on this subject, in substance:

The Government has saved time, lightened labor, abridged distance in the operations of the banker, the merchant, the professional man, the manufacturer, yet has done practically nothing to allay the complaint of the farmer or to elevate his industrial condition.

He is too far from the Government; he is not in touch with it. He still travels the same road in some sections that was a better highway twenty-five to one hundred years ago than it is to-day. A precedent has already been set by the Government, even were it needed, to establish its right to enter into such construction.

During the early years of the Republic the National Government appropriated only about $14,000,000 for the construction of the national highways to connect the capital with the distant parts of the country. The longest straight road ever built by any government in any country in the world was built by the United States from Cumberland, Md., through Maryland, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, to St. Louis. This was not only the longest straight road ever built, but the best road ever built in America. It was productive of the greatest good in its day and generation, but owing to the differences in the minds of the leading statesmen of that day the work was finally abandoned, and for two generations past the General Government has done but very little or almost nothing toward the construction and maintenance of the highways of the country. As a result the great Cumberland road has fallen into decay, and there has been less progress made in the science and art of public road building in the United States from that day to this than in any other industry or department of knowledge.

The concentration of population and wealth in great cities would be largely overcome if the country districts should have their fair share of the appropriation of public money, and the consequent improvement of the country roads that would follow.

Transportation is the prime factor of civilization and wealth. No country can afford to neglect it, and no country can afford to neglect its agricultural interests—least of all can the United States do so.

This great interest is declining in the United States. If nothing else indicated it the steady increase of the percentage of urban population demonstrates it. In the beginning of the Nineteenth century one-twentieth of our population was urban, to-day one-third live in cities of 8,000 inhabitants and over, and there was 100 per cent increase between 1880 and 1890. To the want of good country roads is this condition largely attributable.

To the Congress of the United States the question of public roads seems a matter of small concern. But it is because its attention has not been invited and invoked to it by the great farming interest of the country. They must organize as manufacturers do—make their requests known and, in a business way, be heard.

Their produce can be and is moved thousands of miles at a less cost than it costs them to haul the same weight from their barns to their railroad station. In the great State of New York, according to the census of 1890, the value of the farm crops was exceeded by only four States, and the disproportion between the wealth of country and town was such that the value of farm lands was less than 8 per cent, and that of incorporated cities and towns was 92 per cent of all the taxable values. Certainly good public roads would have improved these conditions.

It must be obvious that improved means of transportation to local markets would give great relief to the farmer. Such difficulties as beset him in the wagon road—the necessity of light loads, wear and tear on live stock, long delays, mud blockades, broken axles, extra trips—would be tolerated by no other class of our citizens.

Yet public roads are placed in his immediate care, as if he alone had any more special interest in them than other classes, as if he alone should keep up repairs at his expense, when the truth is the public is quite as much interested as he and should as much as he bear the burden of construction and repair. Public roads, unlike the magnificent lines of transportation, unlike telephone and telegraph lines, are institutions of the body politic, and yet thus far the General Government has denied them even a modicum of support that it has showered upon schemes of private capital.

Again, the great volume of internal trade goes over the common public dirt road. It exceeds all the countless tons of freight of all the railroads in the country, as well as of the steamboats, for besides this freight which is first hauled over dirt roads to railroad stations and river wharves, there is still a large tonnage that never reaches either the station or the wharf, but is carted to local markets for home consumption.

With these views, which may be crude, I shall continue so long as I have the mental capacity and physical force to press for Government construction of public highways, believing, as I do, that it is just and right, and that under the operation of such a law good roads would be an accomplished fact; the country people—the farmers of this country—would receive some portion of that consideration that is due them, and that prosperity would not be piebald and in patches, but the whole country would blossom like a rose.

As illustrating what I would desire to say on the subject of good roads, I take the liberty of inserting herein an able address delivered at Charlottesville, Va., on April 4 last, before the Jefferson Memorial Good Roads Association, by Hon. Binger Hermann, of Oregon, who represented the State in Congress for a number of years, and who is at present the Commissioner of the General Land Office of the United States. He has given this subject much careful thought, and I invite the attention of the House to his address, which now follows:

THE BENEFIT OF GOOD ROADS.

Mr. President and gentlemen of the Jefferson Memorial Association of Virginia, in this age of inventive genius, wonderful industrial development, and marvelous riches, and with a nation of people unexcelled for their energy, public spirit, and patriotism, incredible strides have been accomplished in almost every conceivable direction whereby the comforts and conveniences of all our people have been the happy result.

Among these advances something has also been done in a few sections of our country as to an improvement in our road systems. Various counties and some States have actively entered upon a campaign of education along these lines, and satisfactory results have ensued, and the good work still goes on, but in most of the States of the Union, however, a sad deficiency is manifest, and even the last century has not contributed for good roads the proportionate stimulus which it has conferred on other material and industrial development. We justly boast of our magnificent railway and waterway communication, but let it not be forgotten that these are of little avail to the one who can not conveniently and cheaply reach them. This is evidenced in the difference between fairly good roads and railways.

The average cost of transportation by rail is now one-half of a cent a ton a mile, while that by the wagon road is ten and twenty times as high, while on some roads the cost of transportation is prohibitive. There is a lack of uniformity in the road systems of the different counties and States, which vary as much as the condition of the numerous roadways themselves. Unless this is remedied there will continue to exist indefinitely an obstacle to improved facilities for road travel whereby permanent, continuous, and easy transit may be assured direct from one community to another and from one portion of the lines of travel to the remotest confines of our common country. To that individual or corporation that may achieve this success there will be due the lasting gratitude and the devout blessings of endless posterity. If I were possessed of the gift of prophecy I should say that the hour of relief is near at hand and that to the National Good Roads Association shall we be indebted for the consummation of the end so long desired.

It is not so much the construction of roads that is needed as it is the construction of good roads. As an economic proposition, it may said that a bad road is decidedly more costly than a good road. If I were asked my opinion of any section of country, I should first desire to know as to the system and condition of its roadways. Communities are poor in proportion as they are remote from transportation facilities. Cheap transportation means freer competition, and freer competition forbids unjust combination. Good roads are the advance agents of prosperity as well as equality. Good roads mean good markets, and they also mean cheaper and quicker transit between the market place, the farm, and the factory. Good roads mean a larger margin of profit to the producer and the manufacturer and also an easier rate to the consumer. Good roads mean appreciation in land values. Good roads also encourage production and induce population and social advantages. Good roads invite improved vehicles and require less power. It is estimated that 15 cents a ton per mile represents the difference between first-class good roads and the common country road. By authority of the Agricultural Department officials the significant assertion is made that 99 per cent of the entire roadway mileage of this country is practically unimproved so far as we may define good roads. If this be only partially true, the hour can not strike too soon for the people to awaken to the real situation which confronts them. The great railways have been liberally aided by our Government, and the waterways have received a generous recognition also. Let the next problem be, What shall we do for the people's roadways?

PIONEER ROADWAYS.

It was my lot to have been one of the early pioneers in the country west of the Rocky Mountains and in the dense forests facing the waters of the Pacific Ocean. It was necessary that we cross the rugged Coast Range to penetrate the interior, first upon Indian trails and often along the well-beaten highway traversed by the elk, then so frequently seen upon the western confines of the Republic. Later on, as the pioneer element increased, we blazed, cut out, and established our own trails, following easier gradients than those of our aboriginal neighbors. Thereafter followed the rude wagon road upon grades and curves still better, though often the vehicles were elevated and lowered over precipitous cliffs and carried around mountain sides. Even this crude beginning indicated an advanced stage in the pioneer settlement. The cross-cut saw, the shovel and the pick, and the grubbing hoe, with the ax and handspike, represented the implements in use. These, with the muscle and energy of the hopeful American pioneer, prepared the way from one community to another, and thence to the highway of the territory. Imperfect implements, scanty means, few neighbors, and general lack of skill and uniformity made slow progress. Even as population increased and improved methods and more plentiful means were obtainable there was yet missing the essential method requisite for good roads.

Necessity is the mother of invention, it is said, and to the pioneer this same necessity is often a blessing in disguise. It enabled us to reach the most inaccessible places and to establish routes which at first seemed impossible. Yet, with increased demands and with fifty years' expenditure of labor and liberal contributions of money, the roads continue rough, unsatisfactory, and costly to the people who use them. While the advances of improved methods are noticeable everywhere and bring ease and comfort and success in all other enterprises, yet, with few exceptions, the country at large still moves upon roadways discreditable in the fair weather of summer and almost impassable and too often invisible in the inclement season of winter.

Though the United States is abreast of all other nations in the industrial problems of mankind, there is, as I have before remarked, one exception, and that is the wagon road. In this we are behind all other nations. Our people patiently endure the inconvenience and cost of traveling between the farm and the market place, and the reason improvement has been slow may too often be found in the old saying that what is everybody's business is nobody's business. It is too often the case that when one has safely worked his way over the hilly, rocky, or muddy road he forgets the effort another must make who follows him. Often he condemns the one who had preceded him for his lack of public spirit in the matter of internal improvements. In the main one depends upon the other and looks to him for an incentive, for a system, and for a start. Railroad corporations should be among the first to encourage and aid in such an awakening of the road conscience, as no interest is so much affected by good wagon roads as the railway. The better and the easier the transportation from the harvest field, the factory, the forest, and the mine to the railway station, the greater the traffic for the corporation. If it were not for the rural wagon road the railway could not exist.

A good road is a good investment to the county, State, or nation. Good roads lower taxation. This is history. The reason is obvious. The better the road, the greater the increase of property valuation and the greater the revenue from taxation. Heretofore we have given much of our attention and untold millions in aid to the long-distance transportation by rail and by water, and we have overlooked the shorter route which connects with our dooryards. It often costs as much to haul 1 ton from the barn to the depot or wharf as it does from there across the continent or over the ocean to the foreign market. The issue is imperative. How shall we improve transportation on the people's roads?

RECENT STATE LEGISLATION.

Many suggestions are offered and each worthy of serious consideration. In some States it is coming to be conceded that to leave the roadmaking to road districts or townships, or even to counties, is too burdensome, as but little progress is made. The local authorities there are unable to grapple with the situation. In some States there is a cooperation between the State and local authorities, and this plan is increasing in popular favor.

In New York, as an illustration, the county authorities submit a resolution to the State engineer describing the roadway improvement, and he investigates the same and certifies whether the road will be of sufficient importance for common traffic and travel. If he approves the highway, it is mapped in outline and profile and specifications and plans are prepared for such roadway as the climate, soil, and material in the vicinity and the nature of the traffic will require. Estimate is then made and sent the county board, and if approved the State engineer advertises for bids. The county engineer, if there be one, has charge of the work under the direction of the State engineer and shall report to him. One-half the cost of construction is paid by the State treasurer and one-half is a county charge.

If the county authorities recommend the road without a petition from the owners of the majority of the linear feet fronting on the highway, then 35 per cent of the cost becomes a legal county charge, and 15 per cent shall be a charge upon the town in which the improved highway may be. If, however, the authorities recommend to the State engineer on petition of property owners, then the county is still charged with one-half the cost, but 15 per cent shall be assessed upon the lands of such owners in proportion to the value of the lands fronting or abutting the highway, and the amounts are collected in the same manner as other taxes. Thereafter the county maintains the road as other county roads.

The State engineer may be consulted by any of the road authorities of the county, and he shall furnish all necessary information, plans, and direction for roadways and bridges upon request. He shall also hold one public meeting during the year in each county and report annually to the legislature as to the year's operations. This law has been recommended to the Industrial Commission as the "most suitable State-aid law passed by any State."

That of New Jersey is next in efficiency if not the equal of the New York law. They both follow practically along the same lines. New Jersey was the first to revive road building, and New York has imitated her system closely. Massachusetts has done much, and Ohio has a good record. In Massachusetts, however, the burden of improvement is virtually borne by the entire State.

Summing up this phase of the subject it seems reasonable to conclude that Congress should be urged to consider the advisability and the practicability of national cooperation with State and local authorities in roadway improvement, under such wise supervision and regulation as to extent and character of roadway, amount and proportion of aid, as would be just and consistent. At least let the matter be investigated by proper committees and report made.

HOW ARE GOOD ROADS CONSTRUCTED?

The first consideration in the establishment of a good road is the location, next the grade, then the cost of construction, and lastly the cost of maintenance. While at first glance a level road may be preferable, yet for permanency and endurance even a 1 per cent grade is better than a level; since superior drainage can be had which is so essential to the solidity and maintenance of the roadbed. Doubly important is this in a country where rainfall is excessive. The sun is also a valuable aid in road preservation. The good road maker will always seek the sunny side of the hill or forest. But the chief requisite is the grade, and to obtain this we can afford to sacrifice distance and incur extra cost. On all embankments we are advised as a first principle to make ditches so as to avoid washes. Bermuda grass, when planted on embankments is found a good protector in holding them in place. The roadbed when thoroughly rolled and with a proper crown is ready to receive a first layer of small crushed rock, with the next layer of rock smaller than the first; and with a final covering of screenings or fine crushed stone; and last, it should be rolled until firm and compact.

A serious error in most communities is said to be in using clay or loam as a bond, and in making the first or bed-rock layer of large stone or bowlders instead of such as have passed the jaws of the crusher. A further advice is to shun the narrow-tired wagon, as it is the enemy to the good road. As to economy in construction, we are also advised that a portable 15-horsepower, a portable crusher, a road machine, a large plow, a harrow, and a steam roller, the latter of about 13 tons, with scrapers and a sprinkler, are necessary. For an ordinary county it is estimated that this outfit would cost about $6,500. Wagons and teams are not included in this estimate. These are the suggestions offered by good road makers for first-class, good roads. When so constructed a 2-horse team can do the same work as that previously done by a 4-horse team. Evidence taken before the Industrial Commission tends to show that the issuance of long-time bonds has become very popular as a means to raise funds, and that prison labor is also resorted to in some of the States in the making of public roads, being utilized largely in preparing the material and in such class of labor as would not ordinarily come in competition with manufacturers and laboring men.

Much as first-class, good roads are desired it is recognized that their construction must be slow because of the cost involved. But few localities, perhaps, and those nearer the large towns and cities, can at present undertake such work. It therefore behooves other communities to seek a less expensive, but yet a systematic improvement. The necessity for better roads still continues, and it is incumbent upon society to contrive the best plan practicable, according to the conditions which prevail.

The demonstration we witness here to-day is an impressive object lesson, and it, with others which have preceded it upon a smaller scale in some favored States in the South and West, indicates unmistakably that there is a quickening of the road conscience of the people, not only in many counties and States, but that it is also invoking a national interest. Education is coming to the rescue, advanced methods and improved implements and machinery are being adopted, engineering principles and thoughtful experiments upon new lines are being applied, steam and electricity multiply the motive power, and good roads—not merely roads—are coming, surely coming, to gladden the twentieth century.

NATIONAL AID.

It is claimed by many that the subject involves within it a project so vast that to be of uniform and efficient service throughout the various States a greater aid than that heretofore contributed by voluntary contributions, individual labor, or by road district and county or State taxes, is required. That the aid should not only be in material form but should embrace a concentration of effort as well as of idea. It is urged that this aid can best be accomplished through the cooperation of the General Government and that such assistance is indispensable, especially upon the principal routes of travel in the States and Territories. That a judicious system, carefully devised by eminent engineers and applied to the more important and necessary routes, as may be mutually agreed upon between the State and national authorities, should be adopted.

For years the Government has extended its generous attention to the improvement of the navigable waterways of the country in order that facilities for cheap transportation may be increased and improved, and it is further claimed that Congress unjustly discriminates in failing to provide for the landways of the country. This is the reasoning which later on may have consideration in the National Legislature. It may be said partly in reply that the General Government in later years has manifested a very generous disposition to our railways, and contributed some aid to wagon roads, by grants of public lands through Congressional legislation. To railroads 197,000,000 acres have been granted, while of wagon roads 3,273,816 acres have been granted directly and indirectly to various corporations and States. Here it may be said as to this generosity toward wagon-road grants that they were open to the serious objection that many of them in character and safeguard were grossly improvident, and were secured more for speculative purposes than for subserving the greatest possible good for the greatest possible number.

Even where in good faith attempts have been made to establish roadways, based on such beneficence of the Government, the construction has been operated upon a mistaken principle and upon incorrect and extravagant methods, and the instances are exceedingly rare where any one of such roadways has answered the real purpose for which it was intended, especially after the grantee had secured an approved title from the Government. If this national aid in the recent past was justified and politic, it is vastly more so now, since the country has expanded to such gigantic proportions, and with such close relations and intermingling between all the parts. Interstate commerce has grown immensely, and the domestic traffic among our people is enormous. The people and the Government are also nearer to each other. The generous policy of rural free delivery is the best evidence of this. The rural community is more than ever interested and anxious to be connected with the main highways and with the metropolis in the different counties in order to secure a free and regular delivery of the United States mails to their immediate homes. Never before has the General Government approached so close to the fireside of the agricultural classes.

Then, again, the introduction of the automobile, the locomobile, and the bicycle has already induced a travel between the States which bids soon to become of great magnitude, and this attracts a public interest as well as a favorable sentiment to the condition of the roadways even in remote localities. Heretofore it has been machinery on the railway and machinery on the waterway, but now it is machinery on the roadway. We have indeed entered upon a new era; an era which could not have been anticipated even twenty years ago. What was before a mere general interest will henceforth become the special interest of all classes and of the General Government itself. It is now being considered by many eminent statesmen whether a comprehensive system can possibly be devised having in view permanency, uniformity, durability, and, above all, intelligent design as to the nation's roadways. A project for improved navigation on the waterways is approved at the central office of the engineer department at Washington City, and hence it is asked why, from the same central point, a national and interstate road system for the whole country might not also be formulated and approved with State cooperation and why competent engineering and scientific superintendence could not equally and satisfactorily follow.

It must be conceded that the difficulty at present is in the lack of a uniform and approved road system between the States, as we find when we pass from the good and well-designed roads of one State upon the ill-constructed and wretched highways of another, and, worse still, where each county has an independent system of its own, for then we travel over as many different kinds of roads in a State as there are counties or road districts within it. Now, almost every road supervisor has a system of his own, while some have no system at all. This suggestion of national aid and national supervision of roadways as made by many good road's advocates would not necessarily relieve the State or local authorities from road construction. There could still be recognized a distinction between the national and interstate roads selected and approved by the national authorities in cooperation with the State and local authorities, and those not so selected and improved might be left exclusively to the State and local authorities. In a brief time the system and superior method provided for the greater highways would invite general approval among the people and would be applied to the local roads constructed everywhere. The spirit of improvement set by the greater system would penetrate and permeate the most remote communities. How far these views can be demonstrated to be practical time must tell. It must be admitted, however, that the subject is gradually becoming a national question. It was once local, but now it is general. All classes and all sections of our country have an interest in the roadways of widely distant parts.

There is much in the criticism of the good road's advocates as to existing conditions and much in their advocation for national aid which should enlist the hearty sympathy of every good citizen. The careful and economic administration of national aid for national roadways exhibited by our forefathers one hundred years ago should have been a more valuable lesson to those who legislated seventy years later. Should the Government again be induced to return to its former participation in good-road construction the most comprehensive system (practicable as well as uniform) should be adopted, and with such skillful directors as will be equal to the task and who will consecrate their best endeavors to the conscientious performance of the public trust. In the earlier days of the Indian wars—in the famous but ill-fated Braddock march from the Potomac to the Ohio—a Virginia roadmaker and surveyor, Colonel Washington, but later the founder of our nation, gave the colonies a lasting remembrance of the perilous disadvantages in time of war of bad roads and as an obstacle in time of peace in reaching our extended frontier.

THE FAMOUS NATIONAL PIKE.

The construction later of the famous national road or pike, almost a century ago, extending from certain navigable streams entering the Atlantic to the waters of the Ohio, traversing seven different States of the Union and covering 800 miles, is a model for good roads building of the present day. It followed the Braddock route long distances, and though costly in its construction, it was enduring and designed upon the best approved models. It affords an illustration not only of how good roads should be made and what good roads can accomplish in any community, but what they can do in the upbuilding of a nation. Before its completion from four to six weeks were required to transport goods from Baltimore to the Ohio River, and the freight varied from $6 to $20 per hundred, while after the completion the time, as well as the cost, was reduced to one-half from Baltimore to Wheeling, and comfortable stagecoaches carried mails and passengers between these points in forty-eight hours' time. This road was the first through national highway ever constructed by this Government, and it is significant in having had its initiation under the patronage of the immortal Thomas Jefferson and having been constructed to completion under the administrations of the three illustrious Virginians—Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe.

JEFFERSON, THE ROAD BUILDER.

It seems, therefore, to be eminently appropriate that this great demonstration should be held at this point, near the line of that famous highway and almost in sight of the homes of these great Presidents. Thomas Jefferson himself was born near this route. He appreciated the necessity for good roads, and further realized that to make a system uniform and complete for all the country it must have national aid and appropriate legislation. He lived to see it a success and saw conveyed upon its well-planned grades and over its smooth and hard surface hundreds of thousands of people and millions of wealth. He saw it break the barrier of the Appalachian Mountains and also become a bond of union between the East and West.

He saw it when as many as 20 4-horse coaches could have been counted in line at one time, and when large broad-wheeled wagons covered with white canvas and carrying often 10 tons of merchandise, drawn by 6 Conestoga horses of superb form and strength, were plainly seen at all hours of the day and at all points of the road, moving slowly, but surely, to the promised land of the West. It was indeed one vast and continuous caravan. He saw towns and villages spring up as if by magic, and substantial brick and stone taverns constructed at convenient points for the accommodation of the enormous traffic. He saw fulfilled to perfection the missions for which the road was designed. Twenty-five years after his time, the steam locomotive entered upon the scene and competed for the constantly increasing transportation. Parallel highways for the iron horse quickly followed, and the glory and utility of this well-remembered road largely ceased. One of the old residents along the route expressed his farewell in these lines:

"We hear no more of the clanging hoof
And the stagecoach rattling by;
For the steam king rules the troubled world,
And the old pike's left to die."

This was the American Appian way between the East and the West in the early years of our country's history. It was not built, like the Roman Way, to gratify the vanity of kings and princes, emperors and empires, but wholly to aid in the development and upbuilding of a great republic. The old Roman highway, however, early gave proof of what good roads' advocates claim to-day. It did a splendid part later on in adding to the material aggrandizement of the Empire which was foremost among the nations of the earth in its liberality and public spirit in the construction of good roads. Panthon, the ancient classic author, informs us of the manifold benefits derived by localities along this famous route, and Horace and Virgil have testified their gratitude for many pleasures experienced in their travels over the Appian Way. It has come down to us as one of the monuments of the Roman people. It was so well built that it survived long after the country that built it had perished from the nations of the earth.

Of Jefferson's historic national road it may be said that while it has gone out of existence and is largely but a memory, yet the benefits which it achieved in its day in aid of the mighty growth and expansion of our beloved country have left an impress which will continue to the end of time.

FORMER CONGRESSIONAL LEGISLATION.

Virginia was the pioneer in urging and advocating a national system of good roads. The first official suggestion as to the old national pike was contained in a report made by Governor Giles, of Virginia, in 1802, and in the Congress of 1803 following a similar report was made by Mr. Randolph, of Virginia, and this was approved. The act of April 30, 1802, for the admission of Ohio, provided that one-twentieth part of the net proceeds of the public lands within that State sold by Congress should be applied to public roads leading from navigable waters emptying into the Atlantic Ocean to the State of Ohio and through that State, to be laid out by authority of Congress. In 1803 Congress appropriated 3 per cent of the 5 per cent of the sales of public lands for constructing roads within the State of Ohio, leaving the 2 per cent for roads leading to that State.

Similar acts were passed in 1816, on the admission of Indiana, and in 1818, on the admission of Illinois, and also in 1820, on the admission of Missouri.

On March 29, 1806, President Jefferson approved the act of Congress which formally authorized the construction of the great road. It was he who appointed the commissioners to lay out the road, and he who secured the consent of Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Virginia for its construction through those States. In their report to Mr. Jefferson, dated December 20, 1806, the commissioners say that—

"They can not withhold assurance of a firm belief that the purse of the nation can not be more seasonably opened or more happily applied than in promoting the speedy and effectual establishment of a great, easy road on the way contemplated."

And they expressed the opinion that—

"Nothing short of a firm, substantial, well-formed stone-cap road can remove the causes which lead to the measure of improvement."

THE ROAD TO THE PACIFIC.

This great enterprise seems to have been but an object lesson for Virginia and for Jefferson, as it led about the same time to that memorable exploitation for another road greater and to regions more remote than the world had as yet dreamed—to the far-away waters of the Pacific Ocean—under the command of the two famous Virginia pathfinders, Capts. Meriweather Lewis and William Clark.

The centennial anniversary of this world-renowned expedition and of the memorable winter camp of the Virginia explorers near the great Columbia River, in what is now the State of Oregon, will be celebrated in 1905 at Portland, the flourishing metropolis of that, my home State, with a splendor and a liberality that will be worthy of the event which it commemorates. In what was once known as the Oregon country there are now three great States of the Republic and portions of two others.

In that fair land you will now behold more than a million of prosperous and contented American citizens producing and exporting to all quarters of the earth by sea and by land vast quantities of wheat, flour, salmon, lumber, hops, fruits, and live stock, and receiving in return the multiplied products of other lands. Thus Virginia and the far-away Pacific Northwest, bound together by an association, made memorable by the sons of the Old Dominion, can meet in reciprocal union on that joyous occasion.

As if these glorious epochs were not enough for one State, there was still held in reserve another renown which should eclipse all the rest. A prophetic vision of the immortal Jefferson beheld beyond the Mississippi a vast empire, reaching in seemingly endless expanse to the lofty summit of the Rocky Mountains, and all under the sovereign power of another nation. With his penetrating judgment he realized the value of this domain to the permanent peace and safety, the prosperity, and the happiness of the nation.

With the public sentiment and with a Congress in cordial sympathy with his views, his purpose, and his efforts, he succeeded in acquiring from France this expansive area, which now contains, in whole or in part, thirteen States and Territories of this our unrivaled nation, and being seven times the area of Great Britain and Ireland, more than four times that of Germany, and exceeding the combined area of Great Britain, Germany, France, Spain, Portugal, and Italy. The story is a long one, but as splendid as it is long, and the historic page contains no achievement in the art of diplomacy or in the course of honorable peace more resplendent and more far reaching in its results or more potent in the welfare of millions of mankind than in the purchase of the Louisiana province, soon to be commemorated by the St. Louis Exposition Association in a manner worthy of the nation and worthy of that proud event; and when there shall assemble in that city in the coming year the legions of grateful and patriotic Americans and the multitudes who will gather there from the utmost limits of the earth the proudest plaudits from heart and tongue will be those to the memory of the sage of Monticello.

ILLUSTRIOUS VIRGINIA ROADMAKERS.

In the fullness of our obligations to old Virginia for its gallant men and the priceless heritage they have left us, we must still remember that near this noted place another leader of those times was born, that heroic representative of the pioneer, the explorer, and the self-sacrificing patriot, Gen. John Rogers Clarke, he to whose daring and timely deeds, more than to any other one, we owe our possession of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, and a portion of Michigan.

From a certain mountain summit in this region we can view the birthplaces of three of these Virginians who were instrumental in acquiring to the United States more than one-half of its present enormous domain, and almost in sight are the hills upon the Potomac where rests the illustrious Pater Patria, the one who laid the enduring foundation for all.

As I seem to behold before me the shadowy forms of these immortals there likewise appears to view in the majestic procession yet another, the stately presence of that renowned jurist, Chief Justice Marshall, whose home was also in this vicinity. We delight to dwell upon this glorious roll of honor—Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, Lewis and Clark, John Rodgers Clarke, and the peerless and classic Marshall, whose habitations and associations were all within a radius of not many miles from this spot. How revered are such memories to every true American! Let me voice the wish that this road, which henceforth is to mark a magnificent way to the hallowed precincts of Monticello, will ere long be extended to the near-by localities which were the homes also of Presidents Madison and Monroe; and still further, to the remaining places, not far away, where the restive spirits of the intrepid Lewis and Clark impatiently awaited the call of Jefferson to depart upon their perilous journey across the trackless wilds:

"* * * where rolls the Oregon
And hears no sound save his own dashings."

Many of our fellow-citizens are prompted to make annual pilgrimages to foreign lands, there to pay their homage to the kingly graves within Westminster Abbey, to gaze upon the Pyramids, to revel upon the bright waters of Lucerne and Geneva, or to climb the mountain summits of the Alps, forgetting that in this our own land there are natural wonders and scenic grandeur, both in mountain and lake, unsurpassed by any other portions of the earth; and there are also sacred memories which attach to the tombs of American sovereigns—the heroic defenders of liberty—and whose names are imperishably inscrolled upon the temple of fame. We have a Mount Vernon, a Monticello, a Hermitage, and a Springfield, and other hallowed places, which to every American heart should be dearly cherished and more zealously sought for than the tombs and pyramids of the emperors and kings of the Old World.

Let this fond hope be realized that the meditative pilgrim may approach these shrines from anear and afar to testify in devout adoration to the blessed memories so precious to our countrymen, and while doing so that he may be inspired with somewhat of the exalted spirit which animated these patriot forefathers, pioneers, roadmakers, and American empire builders.

Where are they now? Of this glorious constellation not one remains to shed upon us their mellow luster. They have all set—

"* * * Not obscurely bright,
But one unclouded blaze of living light."

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I now yield fifteen minutes to my colleague [Mr. SPIGHT].

Mr. SPIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to talk about the bill now pending, because I believe that it needs no argument to commend it to the American Congress; but I want to talk about a subject that ought to be of interest and of pride to every member upon this floor.

During the four years that I have held a seat in this House I have had pending from time to time before the Committee on Pensions a bill to increase the pensions of the Mexican war veterans from eight to twelve dollars a month without regard to their financial and physical ability to earn a support.

There is such a bill now pending before the committee of this House. On the 14th of February of this year the Senate passed a bill of similar import, which has been sleeping in the House committee for more than two months. I am not here to criticise the action of that committee, but simply to call their attention and the attention of the House to some facts in that connection.

It is known to everyone that the few who are left of those old soldiers can not now be less than 70 years of age, most of them perhaps 75 or more. It has been about fifty-five years since the end of the Mexican war. Fifty-five and fifteen make seventy, and putting the soldiers at only 15 years of age—mere boys—they would now be 70 or past 70 years of age.

Unfortunately, most of these soldiers are poor men, and under the present law there is no chance to pay them more than $8 a month unless they can take the paupers' oath. In other words, they must both swear and prove that by reason of their poverty and their physical disabilities they are not able to live on $8 a month. Many of them are too proud to take that oath and to make that proof by their neighbors, and I say it is but a matter of justice to these old men that the increase should be made from $8 to $12 a month.

Let us look at some of the facts that I have taken some pains to gather from the official records and see how this would affect the public Treasury.

The last report of the Commissioner of Pensions says that on the 30th of June, 1901, there were only 7,568 survivors of the Mexican war. This number has been decreasing at the rate of from seven to nine hundred a year since 1888. There are now, or was at the time of the closing of this report, 3,889 who are receiving only $8 per month. At the rate of decrease during the last ten years, and especially taking the last year, when nearly 800 dropped out, there would be a little more than 3,000, or possibly 3,500, of those who are receiving $8, and for whom we are asking $4 more. Putting it at 3,500, an increase of $4 a month would make $14,000 a month, or for the whole number there would be $168,000 for the first year. The highest amount ever spent for pensions to the Mexican war veterans was in 1888, when there was paid $1,861,756.07. The last year, coming down to the last of June, 1901, the total for this class of old soldiers was only $921,052.18.

Now this decrease in appropriations for the survivors of the Mexican war has been at the rate of from $60,000 or $65,000 to $100,000 a year. So I say that $160,000 or $170,000 would be the maximum expenditure on account of this increase from $8 to $12 a month for the first year and would rapidly decrease annually thereafter. And can not we afford, out of the abundance of our means, to do this tardy justice to those old men? I believe that if the bill could ever be reported to the House that this House would pass the Senate bill without hesitation. I said awhile ago I did not intend to criticise the committee, but I call attention to these facts that the members of this House may bring to bear such influences as they may control upon the Committee on Pensions to induce them to take some action and report this bill. These old soldiers are scattered all over the country. They are in every State of the Union.

I find in the Commissioner's report that the largest agency, or the agency where the largest number are paid, is the Knoxville agency, and the number paid there during the last fiscal year was 2,107. The next largest agency is San Francisco, where there were paid 1,257. The next largest is at Topeka, where there were 1,031. I mention this to show how they are scattered all over the country, and that in granting this relief we give it to no particular State, but to survivors in all States of the Union.

Now, Mr. Chairman, by the valor of these grand old men there was added to our domain a vast territory, rounding out the symmetry of our great Republic and uniting the Atlantic and the Pacific oceans, with nothing intervening except American soil, American homes, American manhood and womanhood, and over all floating the American flag.

These old men can not last much longer. They are the remnants of the grand army who wrote bright pages in the martial history of the world and carried our flag to victory at Buena Vista, Vera Cruz, Chapultepec, and Mexico and won for us this territory, of which we have been so proud during all these years. Let us do justice to these old men. In a few years more the Mexican-war soldier will be known only in history and in the hearts of his countrymen. Let us smooth their rugged way along the balance of the journey of their short lives and bid them a last farewell with the assurance that even republics are not always ungrateful.

I hope that influences will be brought to bear that will induce this committee to report this bill and that this tardy justice will be done to these old soldiers. [Loud applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, how much time has the minority remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Eleven minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I now yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Mr. Chairman, one of the greatest crying needs of this great country is good roads. No argument can be needed to establish this proposition because it is self-evident. We may legislate to benefit our cities and towns by erecting great public buildings; we may legislate to bring them traffic and commerce by voting great appropriations for river and harbor improvements, but if we stop short of building good roads to them we fail in that which would be of greatest benefit. [Applause.]

No only so, but we fail in our duty to the great rural population of the country as well.

"An honest peasantry is the country's pride;" an intelligent, prosperous, contented, rural population is the country's hope. It is vain to build great cities and network them with railroads, and canals, and to improve their rivers and harbors unless we can give them the backing of a great tributary, rural, agricultural population. A nation of cities would be an anomaly, an impossibility, a failure. As well think of fountains without contributing streams, of mills without motive power. How shall the problem of relieving the congestion of the cities be solved?

How shall the question of making farm life more pleasant and attractive, of keeping the farmer on his farm, and his bright boy with him, be answered? How shall the isolation of the farmer's wife be relieved and her yearnings for social intercourse with neighbors be gratified? How shall it be made possible for the products of the farm, the forest, the mill, the mine, to reach markets where railroads, rivers, and canals are not available?

How shall every acre of arable land in this country be trebled in value and the national wealth correspondingly increased? The answer to each and every of these potent questions is the same—good roads and better postal facilities. [Applause.] No man can doubt or gainsay it. With the establishment and rapid extension of rural free delivery one of these great problems is in course of solution, but even this can not be fully successful, can not complete its beneficent work, without the other—without good roads over which to carry the mails to the very doors of the farmers.

Especially is this so in sparsely settled mountainous sections of the country. No better, braver, or more loyal and deserving people live, but their very sparseness and poverty render the building of good roads by them, either by labor or taxation, impossible. And the same is largely true of the South, as a whole. We have a magnificent country, with every variety of soil, climate, and production. We have a population intelligent, enterprising, patriotic, hospitable, and self-reliant.

We are trying to do our duty by ourselves, our country, and our posterity. That we guard the graves and the memories of our ancestral dead, the purity of our race, the sanctity of our firesides, the virtue of our womanhood, and the sacredness of our institutions with jealous care, should be counted to our credit. These things we have done and will do, whatever may betide, God helping us in the same.

Mr. Chairman, I have recently seen the statement, from an apparently reliable source, that statistics show that the material wealth of the Southern States in 1900 was, approximately, just what it was in 1860. Can I make it plain what this portentous fact means? I was but a boy, sir, when hostilities began in 1860. I know, sir, what the happy, smiling, prosperous South was then. I know, too, all the horrors of that four years of devastation and blood. I know the sorrow and death and poverty that came to almost every Southern home.

God forbid, sir, that the hand of brother should ever again be raised against brother, that of section against section. May this great, reunited country never again suffer the horrors of internecine war!

I saw the old veterans of Lee and Jackson return to desolated homes and fields, to begin again the work of life. I saw the sincere efforts of my people to adapt themselves to new environments. They could not, they would not, forget the past, yet they turned uncomplainingly and hopefully toward the seemingly hopeless future.

Then I saw the inauguration of reconstruction and the advent of the carpetbagger. Would God I could forget those days. I shall not dwell upon them. No brave, loyal, proud people were ever subjected to such a carnival of loot and humiliation. Plundered, outraged, loaded with debts for improvements which were never inaugurated, for railroads which were never built, taxed beyond endurance, standing guard at night over our women and our weal, deprived of the right of suffrage, while it was conferred on our recent slaves—oh, sir, the cup of the South was full and running over.

Yet, Mr. Chairman, like a giant refreshed with new wine, like the Phœnix from her ashes, the South has arisen. The purest Anglo-Saxon blood in the world could not be kept down. Catching the quickstep of the great march of progress, she has done wonderful things, which are but the presage of the more glorious things of the future.

And yet, with a record which is marvelous in men's eyes, with all the millions of looms and spindles which she has set whirring, with all the marvelous developments in city, town, and country, with all the throbbing energy which she has put forth, with all the improvements in railroads, in rivers, and canals, in mill and mine and field, this great South has but just recouped her losses, has but now attained her position of forty years ago.

With forty years lost, let me ask you gentlemen of more favored sections, is it any wonder that we have not kept up, that we are not now up, with you in the matter of education, of roads, of material advancement?

We have lost forty long years by the results of a war which enriched you.

We have not educated our people as well as you, because we have not been able to do so, and because one race in its poverty has been burdened with the education of two.

Nor, for the same reasons, have we been able to build roads as you have done. The teeming, throbbing life about us now demands, and demands imperatively, that good roads be built from our farms to our thriving towns. The antiquated system of keeping up the roads by a few days' holiday labor in each year by those living along them will no longer answer. The road problem is upon us. The town which would continue to thrive must have good roads leading to it; the farming community which would thrive must have good roads leading to nearby markets. The spokes of the wheel must converge to the hub.

We have done, we are doing, all that we can in this direction. We are taxing ourselves to the last limit, and yet we are doing and can do but little in comparison with what is urgently needed to be done. Our people are aroused to the necessity for good roads, but a calculation of the necessary cost is sufficient to unnerve them.

The General Government, under the direction of our present admirable and progressive Secretary of Agriculture, has done and is doing much, through the Bureau of Public-Road Inquiries, to intelligently arouse and direct public attention upon this great question. I believe, however, that the time is ripe for greater things. I believe that the General Government should go farther, and, either by direct appropriation to, or cooperation with the States of the Union, inaugurate and push forward a great system of road building throughout the country.

I shall cheerfully support the Beidler bill for the appointment of a commission to investigate and report upon this whole subject, but I should prefer to support the Otey bill or some similar perfected measure, which would mean something, appropriate something, and do something without delay.

The constitutional argument troubles me little. The Constitution is all right for rivers, creeks, harbors, canals, and public buildings, but all wrong, say gentlemen, for public roads.

In round numbers, as I am informed, about $500,000,000 have been expended by this country for the improvement of rivers and harbors, and at this session the Congress will in all probability appropriate something like seventy millions more for the same purpose. That much of this good money has been and will be wasted, so far as permanent improvement is concerned, goes without saying.

Insignificant creeks and rivers in unknown and uncommercial localities share, perhaps more than equally, with great and meritorious rivers and harbors. Under the present system it perhaps must needs be so, for the "pork" must be so distributed as to secure the passage of the bill, and States which are not represented on the great Committee on Rivers and Harbors, or which by failure of reciprocal representation on other great committees of the House have nothing to trade, fare but poorly in the distribution. My own good State of North Carolina is thus a sufferer.

My purpose now, however, is not to complain of the amounts appropriated for rivers and harbors. An enlightened public policy demands and sanctions such appropriations and the abuses are the fault of our legislative system.

Time was when such appropriations were denounced, fulminated against, and vetoed. The strict letter of the Constitution was invoked by Madison, Monroe, Jackson, Polk, and Pierce in sounding rhetoric against such a supposedly unwarranted use of the Federal funds.

The question of the express, implied, and incidental powers of the General Government and of the reserved rights of the States will be found learnedly discussed in the veto messages of all these venerated Presidents, and always resolved against the rightfulness of appropriations for internal improvements—rivers, harbors, canals, and public highways being always joined in the same condemnation. The very first of these, the veto message of President Monroe, dated March 3, 1817, says:

> Having considered the bill this day presented to me, entitled "An act to set apart and pledge certain funds for internal improvements," and which sets apart and pledges certain funds for "constructing roads and canals, and improving the navigation of water courses, in order to facilitate, promote, and give security to internal commerce, and to render more easy and less expensive the means and provisions for the common defense," I am constrained by the insuperable difficulty I feel in reconciling the bill with the Constitution of the United States to return it with that objection to the House in which it originated.

No distinction appears here, and the veto applies equally to rivers and harbors, to roads and canals. It is worthy of note, too, that this veto message was sustained only by a vote of 56 against 60 in this early Congress of the fathers of the Republic.

Next comes the message of President Monroe vetoing the act for the preservation and repair of the Cumberland road, dated May 4, 1822, accompanied by a lengthy and learned paper of many pages, the conclusion of the whole being that Congress has no constitutional power to make appropriations for any internal improvements.

Here, again, it is noticeable that this veto was also sustained only by a vote of 72 against 68. Following next comes the message of President Jackson, dated May 27, 1830, vetoing the Maysville turnpike bill, which equally reprobates appropriations for roads and canals, and which was sustained by the narrow margin of 96 to 92. Again, on December 6, 1832, President Jackson gives at length his reasons for withholding his signature from "An act for the improvement of certain harbors and the navigation of certain rivers," affirming his veto message of the Maysville road bill.

President Tyler, on June 11, 1844, vetoed an act making appropriations for the improvement of certain rivers and harbors, giving substantially the same constitutional objections as given by his predecessors, and there were 104 votes against to only 84 for sustaining the veto.

President Polk, on August 3, 1846, vetoed a river and harbor bill, giving as reasons therefor the same constitutional objections to such legislation, and his veto was only sustained by a minority vote of 91 against 97.

Again, on December 15, 1847, Mr. Polk, in an elaborate message, vetoed a bill for certain internal improvements in Wisconsin, which was presented to Congress too late for reversal.

President Pierce, on August 4, 1854, vetoed a bill for the repair, preservation, etc., of certain public parks, and was only sustained by a minority vote, 80 against 95.

Then follow thick and fast similar veto messages from Mr. Pierce. May 19, 1856, he vetoed a bill to remove obstructions to navigation in the mouth of the Mississippi; May 19, 1856, he vetoed the bill for deepening the channel over the St. Clair flats, in the State of Michigan; May 22, 1856, he vetoed a bill for deepening the channel over St. Marys flats, in the same State; on August 11, 1856, one for the improvement of the Des Moines Rapids, and on August 14, 1856, one for improving the Patapsco River at Baltimore, all of which bills were passed over his veto.

President Buchanan, on February 1, 1860, gave his reasons for withholding his signature from the St. Clair flats bill, and on February 6, 1860, for refusing to sign the bill for removing obstructions from the mouth of the Mississippi. Both these bills had passed the preceding session of Congress, so his veto messages were too late for action and were simply ordered printed and laid on the table.

President Arthur vetoed a river and harbor bill August 1, 1882, and it was promptly passed over his veto. Since that time the constitutional argument seems to have been settled in favor of rivers and harbors, but by a sort of acquiescence, against public roads and highways, though the argument and condemnation of all the veto messages was equally against both.

A study of these veto messages and the legislation which evoked them shows conclusively that while the Presidential conscience has been opposed to appropriations for internal improvements, the legislative conscience has always been in favor of them. This policy, then, being settled now by executive, legislative, and judicial authority in favor of river and harbor improvement, what reason remains for objection to Federal appropriations for highways and post-roads? What constitutional objection can be urged against them which does not lie equally against the other? The need is certainly at least as great, and the time for action, it seems to me, has come.

If it is constitutional to make appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors, it is equally constitutional to do so for post roads and public highways, for these are equally highways of commerce. Public roads are the great arteries of commerce which reach out into the country, gathering up and bringing to the rivers, the canals, the harbors of the cities, as well as to the railroads, the very primary elements and constituents of commerce.

I said, Mr. Chairman, that the constitutional argument does not trouble me. Surely the Constitution is a wonderful instrument. I have the very profoundest respect for it as the most masterly production to be found in political history. It is somewhat remarkable, however, sir, that its provisions can be, and are invoked, for or against any particular legislation, as interest or prejudice may dictate.

However, sir, even if gentlemen consider the constitutional objection to appropriations for public highways insuperable, what can be their objection to a division of the groaning surplus to the States for this purpose? Surely this is constitutional and democratic. The surplus was distributed among the States under Jackson, and all that would need to be added to this precedent would be the limitation that each State's dividend should be expended solely for public roads.

I am wedded to no particular plan. I do not want the General Government itself to go into the business of road building, except for educational and object-lesson purposes. I want none of the rights or duties of the several States invaded. I believe, however, that the General Government constitutionally can, and that it ought to, aid and supplement the work of the people of all the States in this important matter.

I believe that every dollar so expended would be returned tenfold in the enhancement of farm values, in the better and more economical distribution of the mails, in preventing the hegira of our rural population to the already congested cities and towns, in encouraging a reverse flow from city and town to the pure air, fertile fields, and moral surroundings of the farm, and in the increased happiness, loyalty, and gratitude of all the people. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I listened with very much pleasure to the denunciation by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIBLEY] of a brute in uniform in the Philippine Islands. I am a little bit afraid that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not striking at the evil in the right quarter. It is the system that must be struck at, and not the man who instinctively and unconsciously carries to a logical result the principles of the system itself. Wherever a strong, white, civilized people undertakes a war of conquest against a weak and colored people, in the estimation of the conquerors far their inferiors and almost upon the level of savages, deeds of brutality and savagery are as necessary as the sum of 5 is a consequence of taking 2 and 1 and yet another 2.

Mr. Chairman, just as long as we pursue that policy the chief danger from it is not the butchery of the weak race, bad as that is, but the temptation to tyranny that reacts upon the strong race. It is the brutalizing effect upon our soldiery, our own people, that must follow from waging savage warfare with partially savage people. And for that very reason war by great, strong, civilized, white nations against weak, impotent, uncivilized, half savage, colored peoples ought to be avoided wherever possible. Wherever you have such a system there will exist a Smith, under that name or some other, to issue brutal orders and to perpetrate crime, and there will exist a Funston, under that name or some other, to justify it. Avoid the real evil—wars of conquest against alien and inferior peoples weaker than you. The gentleman from Pennsylvania was right when he said there can be no justification for a civilized man with a heart and conscience for an order to lay waste an entire country and "make it a howling wilderness," and to "kill everybody, including children 10 years of age and over." I am afraid that in a war of that character, where the very worst passions of humanity are necessarily excited, where people do not treat one another with that courtesy and chivalry that two civilized nations treat one another, such orders and crimes and brutes are a necessary consequence.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words about this bill, because I want the House to understand some things about the bill before we proceed to consider it. We have brought you in an appropriation bill for the Department of Agriculture containing the largest increase ever made on any agricultural appropriation bill:

For 1897-98 the appropriation was $3,182,902.
For 1898-99 it was $3,509,202, an increase of $326,300.
For 1899-1900 it was $3,725,022, an increase of $216,820.
For 1900-1901 it was $4,023,500, an increase of $297,478.
For 1901-2 it was $4,582,420, an increase of $558,920.
This bill carries $5,158,570, an increase of $576,150.

Now, Mr. Chairman, some of this increase in some departments has been very remarkable. I am glad to say that Congress and the committee and the country are waking up to the necessity of increasing the appropriations for the Agricultural Department by leaps and bounds every year. We have increased the bill this year $576,000, as I stated a moment ago.

Let us take one of the departments, the Department of Soils. It began a few years ago, an obscure subdivision in a division. It has grown now to be a great bureau. It began with an appropriation of $15,500 in 1895 and 1896, and it increased in 1901 to $26,300; then it went up to $109,140, and we have increased it this year to $168,900, which is an increase of 59 per cent.

The following table shows the appropriations for this Bureau since 1895:

Year.	Appropriation.
1895-96	$15,500
1896-97	15,300
1897-98	16,300
1898-99	16,300
1900-1901	26,300
1901-2	31,300
1902-3	109,140
Appropriation this bill	168,900

I want this House to know that this committee, while it is not an extravagant committee, and while it does not believe that the entire Government consists in carrying on the Agricultural Department, it does believe that that Department should be kept equipped and armed, so as to be well in advance of the needs and demands of the country upon the Department. Now, Mr. Chairman, such time as I have I surrender back to the Chair. [Applause.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BOREING].

Mr. BOREING. Mr. Chairman, my attention has just been called to a speech made by my colleague, Mr. GILBERT, the other day when I was absent—a speech ostensibly to defend Kentucky and the Kentuckians—but he took occasion to reflect upon eastern Kentucky and upon the Republican party.

I always like to stand with my colleagues in the defense of my people. As between the Americans and other people I am for the Americans. As between the Kentuckians and other people I am for Kentuckians, and as between the Eleventh district and other districts I am for the Eleventh district.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I regret that there is a disposition manifested by some of our Democratic politicians to create a prejudice of one section of Kentucky against another. I want to say for myself and my constituents, although nature has placed us upon a plane higher than that upon which my colleague and his constituents move, we have always treated them with the same courtesy and the same consideration as though they moved upon the same high plane upon which we move. [Laughter.] We live upon the mountains, where we have pure air, pure scenes, and pure politics. [Laughter.] Why, any negro in the Eleventh district can vote the Democratic ticket and have his vote counted the way it is cast, and when we elect a Democratic governor, we let him serve.

The gentleman says that Kentucky was the first State in the Union to tax all the property for the education of all the children of Kentucky. That may be true, but how did it come about? First, a Democratic legislature passed an act submitting a vote to the people of Kentucky, after the close of the civil war, to increase the school tax 20 cents upon each $100 worth of property for the education of the white children alone. But the Federal court decided that this was a discrimination on account of race, color, and previous condition, and that it was in conflict with the Constitution of the United States, or the amendment thereto, and they were compelled then to put an additional tax for the benefit of the colored people. This is a fact, and while the colored children get as much as the white children, they are taught in separate schools in Kentucky, and it is eminently satisfactory to both the white and the colored people of Kentucky, for the colored seek culture and not new social relations.

Why, Mr. Chairman, we have but one school in Kentucky where the white and black are taught together, and that is in the gentleman's own district, Berea College, endowed by money contributed largely by Northern States—I believe the State of Massachusetts and perhaps New York and Ohio—an institution located in Madison County, in the gentleman's district. I do not know why it was located there, whether they invited it or whether it was placed there on account of the amount of illiteracy in that district; but it is there.

What I want to call attention to more particularly, however, is what the gentleman says in regard to the Republicans from the mountains. I read from his speech:

Let me remind the gentleman that politics became the damnedest in Kentucky only when a lot of Republicans came from the mountains to Frankfort, armed with pistols and Winchester rifles, loaded up with mean whisky, and in utter defiance of the law forcibly drove the legislature from the capitol, chased the members from place to place at the point of the bayonet, and wound up their drunken orgy by a cowardly assassination of the governor of the State.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this statement is either true or false. I denounce it as false. There may be one truth in it. He says in regard to the whisky that it was "mean." I do not doubt that it was mean Democratic whisky—one of the chief products of the gentleman's district—whisky made by Democratic distilleries and protected by a Democratic "trust." I grant that it was "mean."

But were the men who chased that legislature mountain Republicans? I deny it. They were the State militia—not Republicans from the Eleventh district. They were not commanded by a mountain man. They were commanded—by whom? By General Collier, of Garrard County, Ky.—a county in the very heart of the gentleman's own district.

Why was that legislature "chased?" I do not like to speak disrespectfully of the legislature of my own State. An Arkansas man once said that a drove of mules passed through Frankfort and jumped into the statehouse yard, and they could not separate them from the members of the legislature. But you know Colonel Rice, in response, said that a drove of mules got mixed with the legislature of Arkansas and they turned out the legislature and kept the mules. I do not vouch for any of these statements, but let me tell you that was the occasion of a memorable contest between Goebel and Taylor which will forever disgrace the record of Kentucky. What had that legislature done? It was composed of 38 senators and 100 members of the lower house.

Mr. Goebel was himself a member of the senate; he could not act. There was absent 1 other Goebel senator. That left 36, of whom there were 18 Republicans and Democrats who were anti-Goebel. That left 18 members who were regarded as Goebel senators. They drew a committee to try this contest, and they drew 3 straight Goebel senators. They drew from the house a committee of 8 to act in conjunction with these senators to try that case. There were 42 Republican members of the lower house and 8 Democrats who were unfriendly to Goebel. That left about an equal division. But what was the result? They drew 7 straight Goebel Democrats and 1 Republican, the youngest member in that house, who sits by me here to-day.

In the light of this discrimination and unfairness the mountain Republicans naturally believed that they were going to be robbed. They did go to Frankfort, and on the steps of the capitol they were presided over by an ex-Confederate soldier from Lexington, Ky. They entered a solemn protest against such high-handed proceedings. They were not heard, and they returned to their homes. They were not in the city at the time the legislature was "chased," but I am here to defend General Collier, if he needs any defense. He is a man of character, a man of intelligence, a man of courage, a gallant soldier of the civil war. He chased the Confederates in that war, and he was adjutant-general of the State under Governor Bradley. He needs no defense.

But I must hasten on. The gentleman on the other side says, further:

> There is no State in the Union with a better and cleaner record than Kentucky. We have scarcely any criminal classes at all, outside of the negro population and a few lawless counties in the mountains, "hopelessly dominated by the Republican party."

Is that true? Is it true that the spirit of lawlessness has existed or now exists in the mountain counties alone, "dominated by the Republican party?" I deny it. I do not like to point out any of the shortcomings of any of the people of Kentucky, and what I say now I say in defense of my own people.

When I was a boy I read of the feuds between the Hills and the Evanses in the heart of the gentleman's district. At the close of the war this district was the scene of the Kuklux operations. Read the history of Kentucky of that period. It was then called the "dark and bloody ground" on account of these transactions. Not only so: when you talk about lawlessness in Kentucky, I invite the gentleman's attention to the tollgate raiders of recent date in central Kentucky.

I read now, Mr. Chairman, a note handed me by a person from his district, calling attention to the fact that within one mile and a quarter of Shelbyville, the gentleman's own home, one tollgate was blown up three times, and there was carried on a spirit of lawlessness in central Kentucky, and especially in the Eighth district, until they battered down the tollgates in that district. Why, Mr. Chairman, I can tell when I get out of the Eleventh and into the Eighth district now by the tollgates. They stand in the Eleventh district and they are gone in the Eighth. The counties have been forced in some instance to buy out the pikes and to throw the gates open.

I am not here to say whether the laws in these counties are oppressive, or whether the charters granted to turnpike corporations by the Democratic legislatures are unfair or oppressive, or whether the gentleman's constituency is irrepressible. Be that as it may, the spirit of overriding the law is present in his district more than it is in mine. These are recent occurrences. Yes; and I have another item here which I will read, that in the year 1899 two negroes were lynched from his own county seat at a time when a Methodist conference was going on in that town. Are they not, I ask, in nice shape to come here and talk about lawlessness in the mountains, where they are domineered by Republican administrations? I regret that we ever had feuds in Kentucky.

I believe there is no living feud there now, but if you believe for a moment that the Republican party is responsible for the feuds in our State read the history of Rowan County, a Democratic county, and learn of the feuds which took place there, and read the history of the feuds in the Democratic county of Breathitt. They have come along after the Kuklux days. Of course, I might refer to the Courier-Journal, which published Grove Kennedy as the most celebrated outlaw in Kentucky, and he was a resident of the Eight district of Kentucky.

Now, my fellow-citizens, I am proud that I represent the mountains. The gentleman paid us one high compliment inadvertently when he placed Chief Justice Miller next to John Marshall upon the Supreme Bench. Perhaps he did not know that Justice Miller was a native of Knox County, in the Eleventh district. Perhaps he did not know that he commenced his brilliant career just where Caleb Powers commenced his—born, like Caleb Powers, in the mountains, an intelligent, courageous, and promising young man as was Caleb Powers, who was fortunate in not having to go up against the Goebel election law. Justice Miller, when he practiced in Knox County, and when he held other honorable positions, was not deprived of the honor that the people conferred upon him by the operation of the Goebel election law as was Caleb Powers.

Caleb Powers was elected secretary of state, and received his commission and entered upon the duties of his office. That office was taken from him under the operations of the Goebel law. A serious charge was made against him, charging him with complicity in the Goebel murder. He was arrested and abused, hit in the face by the guards, put in jail at Lexington, and then without any warrant of law at midnight he was taken out and spirited over the country to Frankfort in a private conveyance, not knowing what was to happen to him.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BOREING. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. Will he not be fair enough to the committee to state that when Caleb Powers was struck, as the gentleman has detailed, he was disguised and fleeing from the accusation of murder and resisted arrest? Is not that the fact?

Mr. BOREING. I do not know whether it is true or not.

Mr. WHEELER. Well, it is true.

Mr. BOREING. But I do know that under the laws of Kentucky the guards had no right to strike him.

Mr. WHEELER. When he was resisting arrest?

Mr. BOREING. He was not resisting arrest.

Mr. WHEELER. If the gentleman does not know anything about the incident, how does he know he was not resisting arrest?

Mr. BOREING. How does the gentleman know he was?

Mr. WHEELER. I have the sworn statement of officers, which was given in a court of justice.

Mr. BOREING. Yes; and I will ask the gentleman if the officers were not proceeded against for the taking away of Caleb Powers without warrant of law?

Mr. WHEELER. No, sir; the officers were acting under the instructions from the police and sheriff of Franklin County.

Mr. BOREING. How did it happen, then, that warrants were sworn out against the parties who took him from the jail in Lexington? Police and sheriff at Frankfort had no jurisdiction.

Mr. WHEELER. Caleb Powers had disguised himself as a militiaman, shaved off his beard, put on a wig, slipped on a train, and was trying to escape to the mountains of Kentucky, when he was apprehended. He resisted arrest and was arrested.

Mr. BOREING. If the gentleman knew as much about the matter as he ought to know before he puts in, he would know that Caleb Powers never wore a beard in his life. He was a beardless boy; he was not disguised.

Mr. WHEELER. I understood the gentleman to say that he did not know anything about the incident.

Mr. BOREING. I am not responsible for the gentleman's understanding. I may give the gentleman information, but God Almighty alone can give him understanding. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER. I am thoroughly aware of that fact, and that there are some men who have neither information nor understanding; but I took the gentleman at his word when he stated that he did not know anything about what the conditions were when he was struck.

Mr. BOREING. I know only what the gentleman knows, and know what I have heard and what I read. I was not present.

Mr. WHEELER. Nor was I.

Mr. BOREING. I will ask the gentleman a question, and I will ask the gentleman from the Eighth district a question. Do you gentlemen indorse the act of the courts or officials that put Caleb Powers in a cell with the negroes at Frankfort?

Mr. WHEELER. No, sir; if that were true, I would not indorse it.

Mr. BOREING. Well, is it true?

Mr. WHEELER. My information is that it is not true.

Mr. BOREING. Your information?

Mr. WHEELER. He is sufficiently infamous, in my judgment, to go into a cell with the worst element of mankind, but I should not have put him in a cell with anybody. I should have kept him in a cell by himself if the matter had been left to me.

Mr. BOREING. My information is to the contrary, and I think I am rightly informed. Now, if it is true that the men who chased the legislature killed Goebel, why did not the gentlemen go before the grand jury and indict them and not stand upon the floor of this House and make representations to deceive the country as to the facts?

Mr. GILBERT. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. BOREING. Certainly.

Mr. GILBERT. Why do you not return those that have already been indicted?

Mr. BOREING. You will find a full answer to your question in the statement made by Governor Durbin, of Indiana. Now, I will ask you, How it is that when you try Caleb Powers you can draw Democratic juries from a box that has Republicans and Democrats both in it?

Mr. GILBERT. Did not a Democratic jury acquit one of those fellows the other day? That is not an answer to my question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I believe that closes the general debate.

Mr. BOREING. I am very sorry that I have not time to complete what I have to say.

Mr. KLUTTZ. I ask that the time of the gentleman from Kentucky be extended to allow him to conclude his remarks.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We have had six hours' general debate on this bill, and I think that is enough.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that we proceed now under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for general debate having expired, the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Office of the Secretary: For compensation of Secretary of Agriculture, $8,000; Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, $4,500; chief clerk, who shall be superintendent of the Department buildings, $2,500; private secretary to the Secretary of Agriculture, $2,250; stenographer to the Secretary of Agriculture, $1,400; private secretary to the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, $1,600; 1 appointment clerk, $2,000; 1 Chief of Supply Division, $2,000; 1 telegraph and telephone operator, $1,200; 1 clerk class 4, $1,800; 2 clerks class 3, $3,200; 2 clerks class 2, $2,800; 7 clerks class 1, $8,400; 5 clerks, at $1,000 each, $5,000; 1 clerk, $840; 1 engineer, who shall be captain of the watch, $1,600; 1 fireman, who shall be steam fitter, $900; 1 assistant fireman, $720; 1 assistant fireman, $600; 1 electrician, $900; 1 plumber, $900; 1 blacksmith, $840; 9 night watchmen, at $720 each, $6,480; 2 day watchmen, at $720 each, $1,440; 1 mechanic, $1,100; 6 messengers, at $840 each, $5,040; 2 assistant messengers, at $720 each, $1,440; in all, $69,450.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, in line 12, page 2, I move to strike out the word "five" and to insert the word "four."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 12, strike out "five" and insert "four."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to know which word "five" the gentleman proposes to strike out. The word "five" occurs twice in line 12.

Mr. CANNON. Where it first occurs.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the attention of the gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. WADSWORTH]. I can not state in five minutes all that I have to say.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Well, I will extend the gentleman's time.

Mr. CANNON. I do not know that I want it extended at this point. There are other points where the very thing that I have in view occurs where I may want a little more than five minutes. I hold in my hand the report that accompanies this bill, and read the following paragraph from it:

The apparent increase in the salary rolls of the several bureaus and divisions of the Department is not an actual increase either of salary or clerical force, but is accounted for by the transfer to the statutory rolls of clerks who have heretofore been paid from the lump-sum rolls, and who were then, as now, part of the permanent force of the Department. These transfers were made on the recommendations of the Agricultural Committees of both the Senate and the House.

Now, I have run through this bill and ascertained the number. The report is silent as to the number and amount. I find that there are specifically appropriated for in this bill on this salary list 89 people, aggregating salaries of $103,390. Well, now, if that was the whole story, there could not be much objection to it, except that from general appropriations, where the Secretary or the various bureaus had discretion, they have employed a number of people who were covered up. Those people, for anything that I have so far discovered in the bill, are not entitled to thirty days' leave of absence or thirty days' sick leave. So that this innocent transfer picks up these 89 people that nobody knew anything about until they were picked up, and puts them in this additional favorable position. But perhaps if they are really performing the duties that are usual to the Government, that would not be an objection.

Now, I crave the attention of the gentleman to the statement of an additional fact. One would suppose if you picked up $113,000 worth of people who were paid from lump-sum appropriations, that that would provide for the service, and it ought to. I will submit to the Committee of the Whole that it ought to, and that that should cover the whole ground. But now what do we have? Why, the lump-sum appropriations, in every case, after you relieve them of this $113,000 worth of people, are largely increased—in every case, so far as I have been able to examine.

Mr. WADSWORTH. You have not gone through the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Well, pretty closely. The report ought to have gone through the bill, but instead of that, there it is. It is some labor to go through the bill, and I have gone through it and had it gone through very thoroughly. He makes various general appropriations with authorization of employment of personal service, and it shows that no one of them has been in the appropriation of the last law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The salary?

Mr. CANNON. No; the general appropriation. You pick up $103,000 and make it specific, and say in your report that it is paid from the general appropriation. Now, you add them specifically and increase your general appropriation in the bill. With the same power you could go on and add a hundred thousand or five hundred thousand, if you please, and add them from the lump appropriation. That is my criticism. Let me be a little more specific. In the Bureau of Animal Industry there are six——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended five or ten minutes, whatever he pleases.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended for five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Well, ten minutes. I do not think I will take five.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON. Six employees in the Bureau of Animal Industry are picked up specifically at a cost of $7,400, whereas the general appropriation for the Bureau of Animal Industry is increased $110,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Where do you get those figures?

Mr. CANNON. From your bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I want to correct the gentleman right there. The total increase for the Bureau of Animal Industry is $93,150. That is the total increase—the increase of salaries and lump sum.

Mr. CANNON. Well?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Your figures are wrong.

Mr. CANNON. I think my figures are right.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are wrong, I want to say to the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. Well, the amount of your bill is $1,160,000; the current law is $1,050,000. That is a difference of $110,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The item for the Bureau of Animal Industry carried in the bill for 1902–3 is $1,247,180. The bill of 1901 carried $1,154,030. That is a difference of $93,150.

Mr. CANNON. I am speaking of this one appropriation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am speaking of the total expenditure for the Bureau of Animal Industry.

Mr. CANNON. I am speaking of the lump sum, where this abuse comes in. The matter that I am talking to I want to be pat on, and I say upon the lump sum the appropriation for the Bureau of Animal Industry is by this bill $1,160,000, and the lump sum appropriated in the current law—that is, the law that was enacted a year ago—is $1,050,000. In other words, in this one Bureau you pick up $7,000 plus for specific clerical service, and you increase the lump sum $110,000. Well, now, what language do you put in? Here is the clause on page 12:

And for this purpose to employ as many persons in the city of Washington or elsewhere as he may deem necessary.

And so on. You can take that whole increase of $110,000, and then you can take the $7,000, and then you can take more. Now, all I mean to say is, you run through these various bureaus and you hold out to the casual reader that you are picking up all your clerical force and putting it on here specifically. You do that, and you retain the power to appoint additional employees without limit, limited only by the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me call the gentleman's attention to this, and I read from the report what it says:

The apparent increase in the salary rolls of the several bureaus and divisions of the Department is not an actual increase either in salary or of clerical force, but is accounted for by the transfer to the statutory rolls of clerks who have heretofore been paid from the lump-sum rolls and who were then, as now, a part of the permanent force of the Department.

These men that are transferred to the statutory rolls are men who are looked upon now in the Agricultural Department as permanently necessary for the work of the Department.

Mr. CANNON. Well, now, why do you put in these words, and why do you increase your appropriation specifically $110,000?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me answer.

Mr. CANNON. Let me finish my question. And why do you put in these words, under which there can be any other people employed for this purpose?—

And for this purpose to employ as many persons in the city of Washington or elsewhere as he may deem necessary.

I want to say that you can search in vain in every other appropriation and you can not find that power anywhere, and you ought not to find it anywhere.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The gentleman must remember the work of the other departments is practically all done here in the city of Washington, while the largest per cent of the whole work of the Department of Agriculture is done all over the country.

Mr. CANNON. Oh.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Inspecting the diseases of fruit trees and cattle, and but very little of the work is done practically in the city of Washington. All these men on the statutory rolls go out through the country inspecting diseases of fruit, of cattle, and hogs, and they are not permanently employed here.

Mr. CANNON. Why do you put in this language?—

And for this purpose to employ as many persons in the city of Washington——

Mr. WADSWORTH. In the city of Washington and elsewhere.

Mr. CANNON. Why did you put that in?

Mr. WADSWORTH. To give the Secretary of Agriculture leeway so that he can employ them here or send them elsewhere. If they were sent elsewhere the Comptroller might object to the item and there would be trouble.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, there is now in permanent law, enacted in 1883-84, a provision that runs to the whole public service, that no man shall be employed in the city of Washington in departmental service unless he is specifically appropriated for. Now, the necessity for that, after a scandal, was that the various departments would use the various appropriations to fill up the departmental service, and we put that into fixed law. Yet here the gentleman evades that by taking up that $113,000 worth specifically, and instead of curing the abuse he increases, in this one instance, the appropriation by $110,000, and provides that they can go on and commit that abuse.

Now, I am getting tired that in the name of agriculture, in the name of the farmers—and I represent an agricultural district—that this Department of Agriculture with its bureaus, which run the Department, in my judgment, instead of the Department running the bureaus—in the name of agriculture I am getting tired of this kind of abuse. Therefore I shall move to amend from point to point and try to correct the bill in this respect.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry to see the gentleman from Illinois use his great powers in opposition to the farmers.

Mr. CANNON. I am not; I am protesting against the abuse in the name of agriculture and the farmers that exists in this Department and abounds throughout this bill.

Mr. TALBERT. Well, the gentleman can call it by any name he chooses; a rose by any other name would smell as sweet. [Laughter.] At any rate, the gentleman seems to be in favor of cutting down the amounts herein contained.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words in defense of this Department and to show some statistics or figures.

During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1901, the exportation of agricultural products from the United States reached a total value of $950,000,000. In other words, fully 65 per cent of the domestic merchandise sent abroad during the year originated on the farm. As to the percentage of our population that depends, directly or indirectly, upon agriculture for its livelihood, I have not the exact figures by me, but it is certainly a conservative estimate to place it between 50 and 60 per cent.

The exact relation of the Department of Agriculture to this vast interest is defined by the act approved forty years ago (May 15, 1862), establishing the Department, which act provides that—

The general design and duties of which (the Department of Agriculture) shall be to acquire and diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture in the most general and comprehensive sense of that word.

And to this end the Secretary of Agriculture is—to acquire and preserve in his Department all information concerning agriculture which he can obtain by means of books and correspondence and by practical and scientific experiments, * * * by the collection of statistics, and by any other appropriate means within his power.

So much for the Department's duties. Now, then, to enable the Department of Agriculture to execute the task thus laid upon it annual appropriations have been made which, at the end of the fiscal year 1901, amounted in round numbers to $38,600,000 for the forty years of the Department's existence. With this total in mind, it is of interest to turn to page 401 of the Letter of the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting Estimates of Appropriations required for the Fiscal Year ending June 30, 1903 (Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, House of Representatives Document No. 12), from which it appears that for the fiscal year 1902, out of a total of appropriations for the support of the Government reaching $606,596,877.55, the Department of Agriculture received but $4,582,758.16, or seven-tenths of 1 per cent. The total of the estimates for 1903 is $610,827,688.47, of which the Department of Agriculture asks $5,509,540, or a very little over nine-tenths of 1 per cent. The appropriations asked for each of three other Departments of the Government for the year 1903 are more than four times the total of appropriations for the Department of Agriculture from 1862 to 1901, inclusive. Then it seems to me that everyone on this floor should stand by this Department in the interest of agriculture.

It should be added here that of the $5,509,540 estimated for the Department of Agriculture for 1903, $720,000 is for the State experiment stations, and over this sum the Department exercises only a supervisory control. Even including it, however, he has asked for less than 1 per cent of the total estimated for the support of the Government.

If the Secretary of Agriculture had based his estimates upon the demands for experimentation and investigation made by various agricultural interests (such as cotton interests, cattlemen, fruit raisers, tobacco growers, etc.) he could have largely increased the total without in the least exceeding the wishes of the people engaged in these important industries. The Secretary of Agriculture in every case asked for no more money than he felt the Department could wisely use, and for this reason he no doubt felt disposed to regard as unjustified the criticism that the Department of Agriculture is growing too fast.

It is said that this Department is growing too fast. Why, Mr. Chairman, is not every other department of this great Government growing every hour, every day, and is not every other industry dependent upon this one in a measure? Then why not make the foundation stronger and stronger?

That is the only criticism, perhaps, Mr. Chairman, we have in this Department, and it seems to be the determination of the House to begin to economize on the farmer. I would like to submit here some things that this Department has done. Let us first take cotton and see what the Department is doing along that line.

Cotton.—For several years the Department has been working on cotton in the South, particularly in South Carolina, in connection with the fine sea island varieties. Several years ago this industry was seriously threatened by a number of very destructive diseases, but as a result of the Department's work these have in a measure been overcome. New and resistant varieties have been developed by crossbreeding and selection, and improved methods of cultivation have been put into operation. Some striking results have been obtained in the way of securing crossbred cottons. The fine, long staple, sea island varieties have been crossed with the upland forms, and as a result cottons have been secured adapted to the uplands much superior to the general varieties now in use. These are being grown in quantities and will be distributed in such a way as to enable the farmers of the South to determine their advantages.

Egyptian cotton.—The United States imports about six and a half million dollars' worth of Egyptian cotton every year, and for some time efforts have been made with a view to growing this important crop in the United States. The past two or three years' work has given very promising results in this direction, and it is believed that sooner or later conditions will be found suitable for the production of very high grade Egyptian cotton. "This year," I quote from the report of the Secretary of Agriculture, "a bale of Egyptian cotton grown from imported seed in southern Georgia was given a thorough spinning test in a mill in Connecticut, and was pronounced equal to the best imported grades." Egyptian cotton has already proved very valuable as a means of getting hybrid varieties adapted to many parts of the South. The crossing of the Egyptian forms with the upland varieties has been successful, and their adaptation to different sections is now being tried.

Now, let us see about the cowpea, the great forage and fertilizer crop of the country.

Resistant cowpea.—The cowpea forms an important link in connection with the work on cotton, especially in the Sea Island regions, where it is used in rotation. In recent years the cowpea has been subject to several serious diseases, but recently the Department has secured a hardy sort which withstands several destructive enemies, and which will put into the farmers' hands a means of bringing their lands to a higher state of fertility than ever before. The resistant cowpea, combined with the hybrid cottons, will, it is believed, work a revolution in the production of cotton in certain parts of the South.

As to lilies, what are the facts in the case?

The growing of lilies.—In all the large cities of the United States there is an immense demand for flowers at certain seasons of the year and equally so in the country. This is especially the case with lilies, the bulbs of which are for the most part being grown in the Bermuda Islands. Probably one-half million dollars is devoted to this industry in Bermuda, and it has long been believed that there are many parts of the South where work of this kind could be successfully carried on. Investigations and experiments with this object in view have been inaugurated in a number of places with promising results. The Department is maintaining a station at Miami, Fla., for the study of questions of this kind and many others of importance to the farming interests of the Southern States. At this station many problems pertaining to the truck industry, the growing of citrous fruits, and the growing of other valuable products for Northern markets are being considered.

Then comes a fruit universally used and enjoyed.

Hardy oranges.—Soon after the great freeze a few years ago the Department inaugurated a series of investigations and experiments, having in mind the production of varieties of oranges and other citrus fruits more hardy than those in existence. Some very striking results have been obtained in this direction by crossing a hardy nonedible orange from Japan with the tender edible varieties from Florida. More than 5,000 hybrids have been obtained and have now been growing for two or three years. In all probability these oranges will fruit the present season, and we will then be able to see definitely the result. If only one hardy orange is secured, it will be a great thing for the people of the South, for it will enable them in a large measure to reestablish the important industry which was so severely injured a few years ago. Florida has many advantages in the production of citrus fruits, and if it were not for the great risk in the matter of cold the work would be exceedingly profitable. The hybrids secured as a result of breeding are now being grown in many parts of the South and have already proved their hardiness, and, as already indicated, their value, so far as fruit is concerned, will in all probability be determined the present year. Now, as to the markets for these products.

Opening foreign markets for fruits.—Down through the entire Appalachian region, extending from northern Virginia into central Georgia and Alabama, there is a growing interest in the production of fruits, especially peaches, pears, etc. With the extensive plantings that are now being made the question will soon arise as to what is to become of the products. Last year the Department inaugurated some work, having in mind the extension of our fruit markets into foreign countries. Through careful attention to the details of picking, packing, storage, etc., various perishable fruits have been successfully sent into foreign markets and there sold at very remunerative prices. Altogether there is a most promising outlook for a further continuation of this work, as its success largely depends on putting into operation practical methods of handling the crops. Then comes a product much used and enjoyed by old and young everywhere.

Tea.—Very nearly everyone in South Carolina is familiar with the efforts for the production of tea in the State. All are not familiar, however, with the success which has recently attended this work. There are now nearly 100 acres of tea on the plantation at Summerville, and steps have been taken toward the establishment of a large plantation near Charleston, covering something like a thousand acres. All through the South there is a growing interest in this work, and with proper attention to details it is believed that success will be assured. There is a great deal yet to learn in the methods of handling the tea, and for this reason the work will have to be continued at a number of points. Fine grades of green teas can now be made; in fact, the teas produced last year at Summerville have been pronounced by experts equal and in many cases superior to the best imported varieties. Through the perfection of machinery tea can be picked on Monday and put into the New York market on Thursday at a total cost of 15 to 20 cents a pound. The labor problem, of course, is important in this connection; but it is believed that all through the South this can be met by the utilization of idle colored help under proper management. In the utilization of such help the cultivation of silk could also, in all probability, be introduced.

Rice.—As to rice, a great product for all, through recent work great advances have been made in the rice industry, especially in Texas and Louisiana. Several years ago it was difficult to arouse interest in this crop, but through the importation of foreign and more desirable varieties the whole industry has been put on a new basis. More than a million dollars was brought into the States of Louisiana and Texas alone last year as a result of this work, and it is estimated that $20,000,000 has been invested in the industry, covering lands, mills, etc. During the last three years the imports of rice in the United States have fallen from 150,000,000 pounds to 73,000,000 pounds. This marked decrease in importation has gone hand in hand with our own increased production, and is not due to any falling off in the consumption of rice in the United States.

Forage crops for the South.—One of the most striking needs of the Southern States is to secure more and better forage crops. The Department has been putting forth efforts in this direction for some time and promising results are being secured. There is now in the Orient a gentleman who has been prominently identified with the agricultural interests of the South, collecting seed of all kinds for distribution and getting facts which will enable him, on his return, to teach the farmers of the Southern States the use of forage crops and the diversification of their work. This gentleman is also charged with securing new varieties of rice for planting on the uplands and any other new crops that may be of value to this region. The Department is cooperating with the State experiment stations in nearly all the States, and all are working together to the end of building up the agricultural industries and enabling the farmer to produce more than has ever been done before.

These are only a few of the many advances along these lines the Agricultural Department has made, which speaks well indeed for the very efficient man who is now the head of that arm of the Government, the Hon. James Wilson.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not think anyone should rise and ask to cut down what the Secretary of Agriculture asks for. I think he has been moderate and reasonable, and only asks for what he can utilize for the benefit of the agricultural sections of this country in common with all other parts of the same, and I hope that none of them will be cut down, and I hope that some will be raised back to the recommendation that he made in his report, for he certainly has demonstrated by his wise policies that he knows his business.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I will only touch on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, and when we reach the Bureau of Animal Industry I will have something to say about that. This is not an increase of salary; it is a transfer of a clerk from the lump-sum roll. Previous to this he has been paid for from the lump-sum roll. It had been the wish of the Secretary to put on the statutory roll all those who are needed permanently in the Department. In doing that we have transferred a number from the lump-sum roll to the statutory roll, and it is stated in the report that this is not an increase in salary, but simply a transfer from one roll to the other. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I made this amendment for the purpose of making a statement to the House. I have no objection to the transfer from the lump-sum roll of the $103,000 worth of people to the specific roll in the Department in the city of Washington. What I object to is that after you transfer them as provided for that service in the Department here—I am not talking about the service throughout the country—you still leave on the lump-sum roll available for more lump-sum employees in the Department here.

Now, that is what I object to, and therefore I will withdraw my amendment after calling attention to it and accomplishing my object and make my amendment at the various lump-sum appropriations as they are reached.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, a great many men employed outside of the city of Washington are on the statutory roll, and the Secretary must have some leeway. For instance, take the Bureau that the gentleman has called attention to, and it employs many microscopists, and many employees in the abattoirs of St. Louis, Chicago, and other places. If the demand for inspection ceases, he discharges them; if it increases, he has power to reemploy them.

Mr. CANNON. That is all right.

Mr. WADSWORTH. He must have this leeway in order to transact properly the business of the Department. In other words, these employees can not all go upon the statutory roll, but only those that are permanently needed.

Mr. CANNON. I do not think there is any material difference of opinion between the gentleman and myself. I would not propose any amendment that would interfere with the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture to employ all needful persons for the purposes that he specifies or for any other purpose under the law outside of the Department in Washington. When it is proposed to expend $103,000 in the employment of clerks, to be paid from the lump sum, and to be employed here in the Department at Washington, as provided for the coming year, I make no objection to that.

But what I do object to, as I shall point out later on, is to continuing this lump-sum appropriation and making it available for the employment of more clerks down here in this Department. I want this Department here in Washington to be "on all fours" with the Treasury Department, the Post-Office Department, the Interior Department, and every other department. I think, if the gentleman understands what I am trying to accomplish, there will be no serious difference of opinion between us. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Secretary: Laborers and charwomen: One laborer, $600; 3 charwomen, at $480 each, $1,440; 5 charwomen, at $240 each, $1,200; for extra laborers and emergency employment, $1,000; in all, $4,240.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move to amend the paragraph just read by inserting after the word "women," in line 5, page 3, the words "one messenger or laborer, $720." This is to correct an omission. It was in the bill of last year.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I request that the Clerk be authorized to change the total in accordance with the amendment just adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be done if there be no objection.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the next paragraph, containing the following:

Salaries of the Weather Bureau: Office of Chief of Weather Bureau: One Chief of Bureau, $5,000; one assistant chief of bureau, $3,000, etc.

Mr. CANNON. I make a point of order upon these words in line 16, page 3: "One assistant chief of bureau, $3,000."

Mr. Chairman, so far as I am aware, there is no "assistant chief of bureau" authorized by law. There is no law to support this recommendation. It appears now for the first time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is true. The clause is subject to a point of order. The committee inserted it in good faith, on the request and recommendation of the Chief of the Weather Bureau, as absolutely necessary for the proper performance of his work.

When he is absent on duty there is no one to take his place until you get down to the chief clerk. It was thought desirable that there should be an assistant chief, to be associated with the chief, and to be responsible for the work in the absence of the chief. I acknowledge that the clause is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

All other expenses, itemized as follows: Maps, bulletins, stationery, and scientific and other publications for stations, and the maintenance of a printing office in the District of Columbia for printing the necessary circulars, weather maps, bulletins, and monthly weather reviews (including the hire of printers, lithographers, and other necessary working force); for traveling expenses; for freight and express charges; for instruments and shelters therefor; for telegraphing or telephoning reports and messages, the rates to be fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture by agreement with the companies performing the services; for rents and other incidental expenses of offices maintained as stations of observation; for maintenance and repair of seacoast telegraph lines; for experiments in wireless telegraphy, including all necessary expenses; for river observations and reports; for storm and other signals; for cotton-region observations and reports; for corn and wheat observations and reports; for aerial observations and reports; for supplies for climate and crop services, and for investigations on climatology, including assistance and all necessary expenses, $486,000.

Mr. CANNON. I move to amend by striking out the last word. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill how much of this $486,000 and other appropriations is to be used in the Weather Bureau for crop and other statistics?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can not tell the exact amount that is used for that purpose. These crop reporters receive, I believe, a very small sum from the Weather Bureau. They make their reports almost gratuitously; in some cases absolutely so.

Mr. CANNON. My reason for asking the question is that when we turn over to page 41 we find an appropriation for the statistics of the Statistical Division of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I know what the gentleman is coming to.

Mr. CANNON. What I want to say is that it costs $177,980 for "statistics in the Division of Statistics" in this Department, whereas the whole division of statistics in the Treasury Department costs, I believe, $60,000, and the whole Department of Labor expends for this purpose only $177,000. I believe that in undertaking to state the appropriation for the Division of Statistics I stated the amount too small. When all the items are put together, it will amount to more than I stated.

Now, what I want to know is this: In addition to this enormous sum for getting statistics in one division of the Agricultural department, how much is paid to the Weather Bureau division for duplicating those statistics? I think I am entitled to know this, because here is an appropriation of nearly half a million dollars in this one item, and I want to see to what extent two divisions in a single department are doing the same work and how much money may be thrown away in that manner. I want to see whether there is not somewhere in Congress or in some department the power to prevent duplication of that kind.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the subject to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] refers had full consideration by the committee, and they heard the Secretary of Agriculture on that very point. I myself took the ground that that work could be done and done more economically by the Weather Bureau, and that there was no need of the Division of Statistics in the Department of Agriculture. Indeed, I think there is no need of the Bureau either in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury. The Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department and of the Agricultural Department ought to be transferred to the Census Bureau. That is where it properly belongs. But the Secretary of Agriculture told the committee very positively that he was not ready to make the transfer, that he had had it under consideration, and that the matter would be brought up and adjusted by the following year, and the matter was left in abeyance, in that shape, in deference to his wishes in the matter.

Mr. CANNON. Now, for the sake of argument, I will make a statement. I am accurate, I think, as to what the Division of Statistics in the Agricultural Department costs. It is nearly up to $200,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. CANNON. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars, the gentleman says, but he will find it something more. That is nearly three times what the statistics cost in the great Treasury Department. It is nearly as much as the whole Department of Labor costs, and that gathers statistics about everything, almost, and I undertake to say that I have no doubt that there is over $100,000 expended in gathering statistics in the Weather Bureau and for their publication, which statistics duplicate the statistics gathered in the Division of Statistics in this Department, and that has been so for three or four years, and attention has been called to it time and time again, and yet in the name of the farmer we are to have this abuse going on, and when you call attention to it somebody gets up and opens his mouth and says that you are discriminating against the farmer. Now, I am a farmer and I represent farmers, and I want to say again that I am tired of that kind of thing. There is not a farmer that I represent, or, in my judgment, that anybody else represents, unless he wants to get into this Department, who has any patience with this duplication.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. KLUTTZ. I will ask the gentleman if it is not true that the statistics and observations of the Weather Department are given to the public much earlier and more rapidly than those of the other department—given to them at once and at a time when they are of use?

Mr. CANNON. I think very likely it is true that the Weather Bureau Division does its work more promptly than the Statistical Division in the Agricultural Department. What I want to do is to cut out one or the other. Shall we cut out the Division of Statistics?

Mr. KLUTTZ. Of the two I would say yes.

Mr. CANNON. Well, they duplicate work, and what is the use of the duplication? And the Weather Bureau is first with the people, as I understand it. What possible excuse is there for it? I am acquainted with the Secretary of Agriculture, and I served in this House with him and esteemed him very highly; but let me tell you what I think—and that covers myself—there are a few laymen who may be in the public service who come in contact with the alleged scientists, who do not go to the wall when they come in contact with names that we do not understand, and there you have got it. I believe it would be wise to recommit this bill to the Committee on Agriculture with instructions to put in the pruning knife and cut out one or the other of these useless divisions. I do not mean that it is useless so far as the information is concerned. That is good, but it is worse than useless when you come to duplicate it.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Is it not true that the statistics gathered by the Weather Bureau are those that are immediately given to the public and published over the country, as to the condition of the crops in consequence of the weather, and all that? As I understand it, the work is not duplicated in a sense. That is to say, the weather observer here, there, and yonder gives every other local weather observer the condition of the climate, rainfall, state of crops, and all that sort of thing and reports it. The country gets that through the Associated Press at once for whatever it is worth, whereas if it went to the statistical department of the Agricultural Department you would get it next year.

Mr. CANNON. Now, my information from experts is that this work is duplicated and that the valuable part of it is done by the Weather Bureau, and that with very slight additional expense it could do promptly all that the Division of Statistics does, and that there would be a great saving of money, and then we would have this scandal disappear from one small department by having these expenditures do double work.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to repeat, as one member of the committee, that I was heartily in favor of it, as some other members were also, and I simply wish to say that in deference to the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture—it being a mere question of administration in his Department—we did not wish to go directly contrary to his wishes.

Mr. CANNON. Now, we have waited for him four years. In the name of all that is good how much longer have we to wait?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The gentleman must ask the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. CANNON. Then I will move to strike out the Division of Statistics when we reach it and test the sense of the House in regard to it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Illinois tell us whether or not this information in the two bureaus is given out simultaneously?

Mr. CANNON. I do not understand it so. I understand the Weather Bureau is first.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is every day, as I understand it.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, and every week and every month.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is it not every day?

Mr. CANNON. I think so, as to some things.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am inclined to believe with the gentleman from Illinois, but I want to get at whether the facts are published simultaneously. The gentleman says they are not. Then the statistics that come from the other part of the Weather Bureau or the other part of the Department are publised later on, and possibly, as the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GARDNER] says, the next year, so Congress and the people would not get these statistics, if that be true, until next year, if your amendment obtains.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I want to correct a statement that I made to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. I stated to him that I thought the climate and crop reporters of the Weather Bureau received a small compensation. It seems that they do not receive any, except in the way of receiving the Weather Bureau Reports.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman enlighten us on the proposition as to when these statistics go out from the two branches of the Bureau? Which goes out first in point of time?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Weather Bureau reports naturally would go out first.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. When do the other statistics go out? When are they distributed among the people?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The crop reports are distributed and announced once a month by the Division of Statistics.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How?

Mr. WADSWORTH. By publication by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They are published by the Department and distributed through members of Congress?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; but they are also sent out by the Department, and the information goes out to the country through the press.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I move to strike out the last word. Will the gentleman explain now exactly how this very vital information is published?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I stated to the gentleman that the Statistical Division issued its reports once a month.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Distributed how?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are given out for publication by the Department. The report of the Weather Bureau in regard to weather comes out and is distributed all over the country, every day.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How?

Mr. WADSWORTH. By these cards that you see everywhere, and in the newspapers and by telegraph.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And the other is sent through the mail?

Mr. KLUTTZ. I move to strike out the last two words.

With every deference for the opinion of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], I hope his amendment will not prevail. There may be duplication in this work, but just at this time I agree with the Secretary of Agriculture, who, I want to say, is the best that this country has ever had, that this is not the proper time to make a change. We have just made the Census Bureau a permanent one. We are just about, I hope, to establish a new department of labor and commerce, where all these matters of statistics can be consolidated and put in the proper place and be given to the public in the proper way. I think it would be premature now to strike out this section or any part of it, and thus cripple the work of statistics. I want to call attention, too, to the fact that in this section there are a great number of matters which do not come within the province of the Weather Bureau, and if this section were stricken out or emasculated or the appropriation for the same cut down they would be seriously crippled.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 5, line 14, to correct the total. It should be $165,260. It is simply the correction of the total, owing to the striking out on a point of order of one assistant chief of bureau at $3,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintaining the Weather Bureau stations already established by the Secretary of Agriculture, or to be established by the Secretary of Agriculture, in Bermuda, in the West Indies, or on adjacent coasts, and for establishing and equipping meteorological stations in the Hawaiian Islands for taking daily observations of meteorological phenomena; for collecting reports thereof by cable and otherwise; for disseminating information based thereon of the approach of tropical hurricanes and other storms; and for collecting and publishing such climatological data as may be of public benefit, including salaries of 1 professor of meteorology, at not exceeding $3,000; 1 forecast official, at not exceeding $2,000; section directors, observers, and other necessary employees (all for duty at the places named in this act or at such points in the United States as the exigencies of the weather service may require); rent of offices, stationery, furniture, and instrumental supplies; traveling expenses; freight and express charges: cablegrams and telegrams; and all other necessary expenses, $60,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "islands," line 20, page 7, insert the words "and if practicable in the Aleutian Islands."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to that amendment that I would like to have inserted. After the words "if practicable" insert the words "and useful."

Mr. CANNON. I want to make the point of order before it is too late.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington accept the amendment of the gentleman from New York? The Clerk will state the gentleman's amendment, as it will be amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "islands," in line 20, "and if practicable and useful in the Aleutian Islands."

Mr. CANNON. Well, now, to both amendments I make the point of order, and the gentleman from New York acknowledges it. It seems to me that that disposes of it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is new legislation, and it increases the expense practically.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York acknowledge it is new legislation?

Mr. CANNON. I make the point of order that this appropriation is to establish by the Secretary of Agriculture in the Aleutian Islands meteorological stations, and to equip them and so on. Now, then, for these new establishments it may or may not be necessary to buy a site on which to construct a building. It is not authorized by law. It is like unto a public building or lighthouse; it is like unto a great many other things that have to be authorized by law before the appropriation is in order upon a general appropriation bill. Now, there is no legislation that authorizes it, and, therefore, whether it is proper or not—I will not discuss the propriety of it—there being no legislation, I make the point of order, and it is so perfectly plain that the gentleman from New York has no doubt about it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It seems that this amendment is right in line with the provision of the section here to which this amendment is offered. It provides for the establishment and equipment of meteorological stations in the Hawaiian Islands. Now, if that is in order, it seems to me that this amendment would also be in order. It is right in line with the object of this section of the bill.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. A parliamentary inquiry. Has the section been read and is it subject to amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The section has been read.

Mr. CANNON. Well, this is the current law from line 16 down to line 10, on page 8.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois make the point of order against the section? The Chair has not fully comprehended the point of order made by the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. No. I doubt if the section is subject to the point of order, because a year ago and the year before that these words were in the law. Now, this is for the extension of this service; it is for the establishing of new stations. I will say to the Chair it is like unto the case of the Light-House Service, and yet the rule is well understood and it has always been that it is not in order on a general appropriation bill to move to build a light-house until the legislation establishing the light-house has been enacted.

Mr. JONES of Washington. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. This provision is in the bill, "and for establishing and equipping meteorological stations in the Hawaiian Islands."

Mr. CANNON. Yes; and that has been there for two years.

Mr. JONES of Washington. And my amendment is to that portion of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That really under the fact is subject to the point of order because no general legislation has been enacted providing for it, but no point of order is made against that.

Mr. CANNON. Very well. If it is subject to the point of order, it is in the power of the gentleman to make it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not desire to make it.

Mr. CANNON. But it would appear to me that it was not subject to the point of order because this provision has been in the appropriation bill a year ago and two years ago.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Three years. Ever since the Spanish war.

Mr. CANNON. Whether subject to the point of order or not, it is perfectly patent that any provision that now appears for the first time that would render necessary the acquisition of a site and the construction of a building, and so on, is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair understand the gentleman from Illinois. He does not make the point of order against establishing the stations in the Hawaiian Islands?

Mr. CANNON. No.

The CHAIRMAN. There was an amendment offered and an amendment to that relating to the Aleutian Islands.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair will rule.

Mr. JONES of Washington. May I suggest this, Mr. Chairman. The gentleman says that this clause, "and for establishing and equipping meteorological stations in the Hawaiian Islands" has been in the last two appropriation bills. Now, I understand it to be a fact that this does not make it legislation, and it would still be subject to the point of order that no original law provided for it. Now, then, the point of order was not made to it, and any amendment can be offered to it that is germane, and that certainly would be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Any amendment that is germane would be in order; but is it necessarily germane to establish a station on the Aleutian Islands?

Mr. JONES of Washington. To establish a meteorological station would certainly be germane to the provision in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If it was for a continuation of a public work, it might be germane. The Chair thinks the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington is subject to the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois; and sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of sites and the erection of not less than six buildings for use as Weather Bureau observatories, and for all necessary labor, materials, and expenses, plans and specifications to be prepared and approved by the Secretary of Agriculture, and work done under the supervision of the Chief of the Weather Bureau, including the purchase of instruments, furniture, supplies, flagstaffs, and storm-warning towers to properly equip these stations, $50,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, to that portion of the paragraph, lines 11 to 18 inclusive, I make the point of order that they are new items, not authorized by any legislation, not in order under Rule XXI on a general appropriation bill. "For the purchase of sites and the erection of not less than six buildings for use as Weather Bureau observatories." Why, it is just like a public buildings bill in the sundry civil bill. It would not be contended for a moment that it would be in order to insert an item for the purchase of sites for six public buildings. It is precisely on all fours, no law to authorize it, and under the rule as universally applied upon all bills, in the absence of legislation establishing the observatories and authorizing the purchase of sites on a general appropriation bill, it is not in order because it is legislation as well as appropriations.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, the law under which the Weather Bureau was first established in 1891 contains this item:

It shall be the duty of the Secretary of Agriculture to prepare future estimates for the Weather Bureau, which shall be hereafter specially developed and extended in the interests of agriculture.

Under that clause, according to the law under which the Weather Bureau was originally established, the weather stations of the Bureau have been built. The Bureau of last year contained these items for the purchase of a site and the erection of small brick and wood buildings at each of the following-named places for the use of the Weather Bureau: Atlantic City, N. J.; Hatteras, N. C.; Fort Canby, Wash.; Port Crescent, Wash.; Tatoosh Island, Wash., and Port Reyes, Cal.

All I can say is that if it is subject to a point of order this year, it has never been made subject to a point of order heretofore. Under that clause in the law we have reported all the improvements in the Weather Bureau which have been going on for the last ten or twelve years. I insist that the law as just quoted gives the Weather Bureau the authority to do this work in the interest of agriculture.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, they have the same authority that every other department has, namely, to recommend to Congress and to submit items; the same authority as has the Post-Office Department, the Treasury Department, and all of them. Now, the gentleman says that last year an appropriation like this went through.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; and the year before, and the year before that, and for the last seven or eight years.

Mr. CANNON. For the last seven or eight years! For the sake of the argument, admitted; they went on because nobody rose in his place and made the point of order. Practice without objection can not be invoked to do away with the law and the rule. I will say to the gentleman frankly I did not make the point of order because I expect I did not notice it, and in the first instance I would not have made it because the abuse that has grown up in this Department had not then developed itself. Now, that it has developed, it is not only my privilege but my duty to say to the gentleman that if the point of order will stop this matter under the rules of the House, I think it is my duty to make it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The gentleman does not think this is an abuse; it is in line with the improvement of the Weather Bureau Service as it has gone on for years in the past. I do not see how the Weather Bureau can meet the necessities of the country in any other way.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, without expressing any opinion on the point of order, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if there is any difference in principle between continuing the equipment of the Weather Bureau in this way and the growing up of the Fish Commission under appropriations in bills which he annually reports without any more authority than there is for this item.

I want to call attention to the ruling made in the last Congress by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] in the Chair upon the argument of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that there might be increased continuing appropriations for the Fish Commission under authority of law no stronger, it seems to me, than there is for this item under discussion.

Mr. CANNON. I recollect the ruling very well, and it was perfectly proper; but the gentleman fails to see the point. That was not where a fish station was authorized. On the contrary, the gentleman will recollect that he himself offered the amendment to build a fish-culture station, and I made the point of order against it, and it was sustained by the Chair on the ground that a purchase of the site and construction of the station must first be authorized by legislation, and then when once authorized appropriations would follow. This is on all fours; it is a proposition to purchase sites and to build observatories where none now exist. If this is in order, then it is in order on general appropriation bills without legislation to construct a public building at every crossroads in the country.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to the fact that the bill last year contained almost identical appropriations at different points. It provided for the purchase and laying of a cable between the mainland and Tatoosh Island, and for general repairs to telegraph lines from Port Crescent to Tatoosh Island, Washington, including all necessary labor, materials, and other expenses.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has read the statute upon which the gentleman from New York bases the claim that the committee has authority to report in this bill appropriations of this kind. It seems to the Chair that section 9 of that statute simply directs what shall be the duty of the Bureau in a certain contingency. The Chair does not think the statute was intended to ever confer the power upon the Committee on Agriculture to include in an appropriation bill an appropriation authorizing the Department to purchase sites and erect buildings.

The object of an appropriation bill is to make appropriations for certain specific objects where laws recognizing the necessity and conferring the power to make them already exists. It has been held that the enlargement or continuation of a work previously authorized by law is permissible upon an appropriation bill and is not subject to a point of order.

But the Chair has not had his attention called to any ruling by which it has been held that under the exceptional clause of the rule it is legitimate or proper to authorize the purchase of a new site and the erection of a building thereon. On the other hand it has been held distinctly that the erection of a laboratory building for the Department of Agriculture was not to be regarded as a continuation of a public work already in progress and that an appropriation for that purpose was subject to a point of order. The purchase of an adjoining building for a hospital already established was held to be such a continuation of a public work as came within the exception to the rule. But there is nothing of that sort here. And it has also been held that an appropriation undertaking to authorize the purchase of land was, under this language of the rule, subject to a point of order, where the land proposed to be purchased was separate and distinct from other land owned by the Government.

The Chair is therefore inclined to adopt the view of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that this provision is distinctly legislation upon an appropriation bill; that the wisdom or unwisdom of establishing these sites and erecting buildings thereon—the decision of the question of their necessity or the contrary—is a matter to be determined on a proper bill, considered properly under the rules, and coming from a proper committee. Therefore the Chair holds that this provision upon this, a general appropriation bill, is subject to the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], and the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois is sustained.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to correct the totals of this paragraph.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the next paragraph of the bill, including the following:

To purchase, establish, improve, and maintain quarantine stations, and to provide proper shelter and equipment for the care of neat cattle, domestic and other animals imported at such ports as may be deemed necessary.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to make a point of order on the words "purchase, establish," in line 12, page 12. If the point of order should be sustained, the language would read:

"To improve and maintain quarantine stations," etc.

I submit that the authority to "purchase and establish," which would be carried by the words on which I raise my point of order, is legislation. This question involves the same principle as that decided on the previous point of order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In the act of last year this item was carried as a separate clause:

Animal quarantine stations: To purchase, establish, and maintain quarantine stations, and to provide proper shelter and equipment for the care of neat cattle and domestic animals imported, at such ports as may be deemed necessary, $25,000.

In this provision is found authority for the language now under consideration, which I claim provides merely for the continuation of a work already begun by authority of law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] what constitutes a "quarantine station?"

Mr. WADSWORTH. A piece of ground with suitable buildings and properly fenced in, to exclude all animals not intended to be domiciled there, so that no animals from the outside can come in contact with those thus fenced in. The grounds and buildings thus used may be either purchased or rented. I have read the clause contained in the bill of last year, in which authority was given to purchase.

Mr. CANNON. That was a mere appropriation—not legislation at all. The language now under consideration does not apply to anything that may have been purchased under that appropriation. What I propose to accomplish by striking out the words I have designated upon the point of order is to prevent legislation for the purchase and establishment of new quarantine stations. The language on which I have raised my point of order is, I insist, legislation, and is not in order on this bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does not the gentleman think it is a continuation of the work of the bureau as already established?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; no more than the building of a new custom-house is continuing the work of the customs service, or the building of a new post-office the continuation of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Well, Mr. Chairman, I have read the only authority I have—the clause contained in the bill of last year. These things have always been provided for in this way. If the provision of this bill is subject to a point of order, the committee, of course, will have to submit; but I think the provision in question is simply a continuation of the work of the bureau as already established, and is in order under the clause of last year's bill as I have read it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from New York that under the ruling made a few moments ago the Chair believes it would hardly be competent to authorize the purchase of ground for a new station; but the establishment of such a station on land already owned by the Government, might, it seems to the Chair, be in order.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I will make it against each one separately.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order as to the word "purchase," and will not sustain it as to the other word.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Do I understand that the Chair sustains the point of order in regard to the word "purchase."

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. Then, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order upon the words "two thousand five hundred," at the end of line 1 and the beginning of line 2, on page 10. The salary of the zoologist as fixed heretofore is $2,250.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I would simply say in answer to the gentleman from Illinois that it is subject to the point of order, but the committee had stated in its report that it increased the salaries of some of the scientific corps because after careful inquiry they were convinced that the salaries of those gentlemen were not equal to the salaries paid by educational institutions throughout the country nor by foreign governments, and that they were entitled to a little increase, and we granted it. We have not granted nearly as much as the Secretary of Agriculture recommended, however.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon the statement of the gentleman from New York the Chair rules the point of order is well taken.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think, however, Mr. Chairman, that these scientists should be treated alike, and therefore I myself will raise the point of order on the salary of the Chief of that Bureau. I think he is one of the most capable servants in the employ of the Government. The Bureau of Animal Industry deals with all the export meats of this country, and Dr. Salmon, who is at the head of it, I think is one of the most worthy men in that Department. He has drawn a salary of $4,000 for years, and has never himself asked for an increase. An increase to five thousand was suggested by the Secretary of Agriculture, but the committee did not take his suggestion, increasing the salary only $500. I think it is only fair that the scientists, chiefs of bureaus, should be all treated alike, though I regret it exceedingly.

Mr. CANNON. I think this apology of the gentleman ought to be accepted. He makes the point of order, and for one I am in favor of accepting his apology.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not think it is treating these other gentlemen fairly, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, was not this bill to be read and acted upon by paragraphs?

The CHAIRMAN. By paragraphs.

Mr. HASKINS. And, after the close of the reading of a paragraph, and no objection or point of order being made, and the Clerk having passed to the reading of another, can the gentleman then go back and raise the point of order upon a paragraph that has been passed over?

The CHAIRMAN. Not if we have passed it and gone on to the reading of the next one.

Mr. HASKINS. Very well; we have passed it and gone on to the next paragraph before this point of order was made.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no.

Mr. HASKINS. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. It is all in one paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman's objection to raising points of order comes too late.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this is all one paragraph, from line 6 on page 9 down to line 4 on page 14; it is all one paragraph.

Mr. HASKINS. The first paragraph closes with line 23 on page 10. The next subject-matter is general expenses of the Bureau of Animal Industry, and the first paragraph has relation to salaries alone.

Mr. CANNON. Well, it is just a question of fact. I think it is all one paragraph beyond question, and the Chair will have to decide between us.

The CHAIRMAN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. The gentleman makes the point of order against the salary. How much should it be?

Mr. CANNON. I think it all goes out on the point of order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, no; only the increase. It is a statutory office.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman can move to insert in there the proper amount, if he desires to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The point of order does not lie against the statutory office. The position is statutory. The gentleman from Illinois simply raised the point of order againt the increase.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was raised against the salary. The Chair will have to rule that the point of order being sustained, it took the whole matter out of the bill, and it would have to be put back by amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then at this point, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to reinsert it at $2,250.

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimour consent to reinsert the part stricken out at $2,250. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, Mr. Chairman, to turn back to the salary of the chief of the Bureau, which is raised from $4,000 to $4,500, I feel very much inclined to withdraw my point of order, I have so high a regard and so much respect for the gentleman who occupies that position. My only reason for raising the point of order was that I did not think it was quite fair that some of the scientists chiefs of bureaus should be raised and not the others. The committee considered the whole thing together and made that recommendation to the House. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the point of order, at least temporarily.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to withdraw his point of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. I move to strike out, in lines 4 and 5 of page 12, the words "in the city of Washington or."

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 12, lines 4 and 5, strike out "in the city of Washington or."

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that the paragraph will not make sense with that amendment. That would leave them authorized to employ as many persons "elsewhere" as they saw fit.

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection to including the word "elsewhere," although I think the amendment would be good without it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman includes the word "elsewhere" in his amendment.

Mr. CANNON. The object of this motion, Mr. Chairman, is not to embarrass the Agricultural Department in the slightest degree. As I said half an hour ago, we pick up on this bill $103,000 worth of employees and appropriate for them specifically—clerks in the Department right here in Washington. Now, they had heretofore been paid from lump sums. It is very proper to pick them up, because that is the way that business is carried on in the District of Columbia, in the departments, and there is a general law that says no one shall be employed in the departments in the District of Columbia unless specially appropriated for or authorized.

Now, as we pick up this $100,000 worth of employees, they do not need this for the coming year. If you make this amendment it lets this appropriation go to the service everywhere outside of Washington wherever it is needed, for inspectors and everything; but for the coming year it will not let them use these general lump-sum appropriations of $2,000,000 in whole or in part in employing additional clerks in the Department here in Washington. It puts that Department precisely as every other department is.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the committee to the language of the act on page 11:

And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to use any part of this sum he may deem necessary or expedient, in such manner as he may think best, in the collection of information concerning live stock, dairy, and other animal products, and to prevent the spread of pleuro-pneumonia, blackleg, tuberculosis, sheep scab, glanders or farcy, hog cholera, and other diseases of animals, and for this purpose to employ as many persons in the city of Washington or elsewhere as he may deem necessary, and to expend any part of this sum in the purchase and destruction of diseased or exposed animals and the quarantine of the same whenever in his judgment it is essential to prevent the spread of pleuro-pneumonia, tuberculosis, or other diseases of animals from one State to another.

And so forth. The object is simply to give the Secretary that latitude which he thinks necessary for the proper discharge of the duties of the position.

Mr. CANNON. That is the very point. My object is to give the Secretary discretion also. I want to accomplish everything that the gentleman wants. It is a worthy appropriation, and a good one; but now that we pick up the $103,000 worth of employees, clerks down here in the Department, I do not want them to take this lump sum and employ more clerks there.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That you must leave to the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture. He must certainly have some discretion in the management of the details of his work.

Mr. CANNON. He has every discretion.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In emergencies, on the outbreak of contagious diseases in the country, he must have full power to act in accordance with his best judgment.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If he wants to employ men here or elsewhere he must have that authority, and I can see no good reason why the present Secretary of Agriculture should not have that discretion. We have got to trust somebody in this world.

Mr. CANNON. You do not let the Secretary of the Treasury have that discretion.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That may be so.

Mr. CANNON. Or the Secretary of War, or the Secretary of the Interior, and you might employ 10,000 clerks from this lump sum, if you had money enough, and set them to writing down here in the Department, and that would not discover or cure any glanders or sheep scab.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman state whether he thinks the Secretary of Agriculture has abused the power which he has had under this clause of the law?

Mr. CANNON. I want to say right here and now that I have no attack to make upon the Secretary of Agriculture. He is a very worthy man, but by the terms of this bill, as the practice has grown up, and with some of the scientists by whom he is surrounded duplicating work, he might be compared in this service to a cat in the hot place without claws. [Laughter.] And whether he is the best man that ever lived or the poorest man, I want to put that Department here in the city of Washington upon all fours with every other department. And I turn to the gentleman now and ask him if a single additional clerk in that Department is necessary for next year? If so, move an amendment and put it in. What I object to is putting in $2,000,000 in this general provision to employ clerks in the discretion of anybody.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Two million dollars.

Mr. CANNON. In the aggregate.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is not in the aggregate.

Mr. CANNON. In all the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The aggregate for the Bureau is only $1,247,000.

Mr. CANNON. In your bill. This provision runs through all these lump-sum appropriations.

Mr. WADSWORTH. You can not put the Agricultural Department on all fours with any other department. Its work is all over the country, scattered from California to Maine, and from Canada to the Gulf States. I think the gentleman is entirely mistaken in saying that the Secretary should not have this leeway. He has never abused it, not to my knowledge. He must have some discretion in the management of the details of his Department.

Mr. CANNON. Undoubtedly. I do not interfere with that discretion. But I will say to the gentleman that without my amendment the gentleman, or any other gentleman, under stress of occasion, could go down to the Secretary and say, "I want your two clerks." "Oh," he says, "I do not need them." You say, "You have got the money, and you can put them on if you want to." Now, that is something that you can not do with any other department.

Mr. WADSWORTH. For this employment?

Mr. CANNON. I want him to have the discretion about disease and to carry on his Department everywhere outside of Washington; and we have given him all the sums he wants.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. OLMSTED. Is it your idea to exclude the employment of persons in Washington?

Mr. CANNON. Unless under specific appropriations.

Mr. OLMSTED. Now, this authorizes him to employ as many persons in the city of Washington and elsewhere as he may deem necessary. If you simply strike out "city of Washington and elsewhere," do you not leave him the discretion to use them wherever he pleases?

Mr. CANNON. I think not; but if the gentleman thinks it subject to that construction, I will modify my amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If the gentleman will strike out the words "in the city of Washington," and then after the words "or elsewhere" insert "than in the city of Washington, as he may deem necessary," he will get what he wants.

Mr. CANNON. I will accept the suggestion, and modify the amendment in that way.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send up the modification of his amendment, so that the Clerk may make it.

Mr. CANNON. I will send it up.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "in the city of Washington or" and insert, after the word "elsewhere," "than in the city of Washington."

Mr. CANNON. That is right.

Mr. SCOTT. A parliamentary inquiry. I should be glad to ask the gentleman whether this amendment, in his judgment, would preclude the Secretary of Agriculture from employing emergency assistants in the District of Columbia?

Mr. CANNON. Now; yes.

Mr. SCOTT. It would exclude him for their employment now?

Mr. CANNON. For the next year.

Mr. SCOTT. My understanding is that there is an abattoir within the District of Columbia, outside of the city of Washington, where emergency inspections are likely to call for the services of the Department at any time.

Mr. CANNON. It does not interfere with that at all.

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman's former answer to my question was that they could not be employed in the District outside of the city of Washington.

Mr. CANNON. I may not have understood the gentleman to say the District, but it would not interfere with the employment the gentleman has referred to, in my judgment.

Mr. SCOTT. Not interfere with the employment of men in the District of Columbia? I understood the gentleman from Illinois a few moments ago to say that there was a general law upon the statute books prohibiting the employment of anyone in the District of Columbia if a specific appropriation was not made. Now, if that understanding of the law is correct this amendment certainly, if enacted, will preclude the Secretary of Agriculture from employing anybody in the District of Columbia outside of the city.

Mr. CANNON. There is a specific appropriation for the employment of a veterinarian at $1,600 and two veterinarians at $1,400.

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman thinks it will not interfere so far as concerns an emergency?

Mr. CANNON. In my judgment, outside the city of Washington and within the District this amendment does not interfere. That is my judgment about it. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois as modified.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. CANNON. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 40.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order upon the following words: Line 24, page 13, "Provided further, Not to exceed $10,000 of the amount hereby appropriated may be used for the purchase of additional land for Bureau of Experimental Stations."

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is subject to a point of order, Mr. Chairman, in the line of the previous rulings of the Chair.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this is not subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from New York if there is already a bureau established there where it is intended to purchase the land, and if the land lies adjacent to the station, and is necessary?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is for the purchase of additional land to the station that is already established at Bethesda, Md.

Mr. CANNON. If they are authorized to do that under this appropriation without legislation, why do you put in the legislation? There is nothing here to show that it is adjacent, either.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, the Chair has already ruled in two instances that appropriations to buy a piece of land would be subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is mistaken; the Chair has not so ruled.

Mr. LOUD. I think the Chair has determined that appropriations to purchase a piece of land would be subject to a point of order. Am I mistaken in that?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is not correct if he means in all cases. The Chair has not ruled that appropriations to purchase a piece of land would necessarily be subject to a point of order. The Chair has ruled that where it is proposed to purchase a plot of ground separate and distinct from any that the Government now owns and to establish a new station, it is subject to a point of order; but where it is to purchase land adjacent to something the Government now owns, and which is necessary for the continuation of the work, the Chair has not so ruled.

Mr. LOUD. I think I understood the ruling of the Chair, and the Chair and I will not disagree, although I may not put it in precisely the same words that the Chair has. I do hope—although I have no interest in this matter one way or the other—I hope the Chair will not be led to rule that you can not purchase a new piece of land, and yet you can purchase an additional piece of land. I hope the Chair will look at the question, because whether it is right or wrong goes way beyond the feelings of any individual member.

Now, the Government may own a piece of land here, but the purchase of a piece of land adjacent to it, to my mind, would be as clearly subject to a point of order as it would to purchase a new piece. Otherwise you might continue the purchase of land from the city of Washington down the Potomac River to Newport News, if you made it a continuous purchase.

Of course I understand what rulings may be put before the Chair—that this land is purchased as necessary to carry out an object already in process. I hope the Chair can see the distinction between the purchase of a new piece of land and the purchase of material or the employment of labor, or of the many other necessary things that would be necessary to purchase to carry out a work upon a piece of land already purchased. I hope the Chair will look at the question properly, because it goes beyond the measure before us now and will establish a precedent that will permit—on the Post-Office appropriation bill, if you please, where the Government may have a public building in a city—the purchase of a thousand acres adjacent to that. That is a radical supposition I know, and yet if it can purchase one foot additional, then it can purchase a thousand acres, if there be a thousand acres in that city, and the committee would be perfectly justified in reporting upon any appropriation bill a provision to purchase any amount of land that it might think necessary, because it already had a piece of land in that city.

Why, Mr. Chairman, what is the necessity for the public-building bill that you are about bringing in here? None whatever, to my mind, if we can put them on any appropriation bill we see fit. It is simply to purchase new pieces of land, some adjoining and some not adjoining, and what would be the distinction whether there was 1 or 2 feet between the piece of land that the Government now owns and that which it desires to purchase, or no distance if it was desired? It is a question of great and vital importance to my mind for the future of this House.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that just what the gentleman from California says that he hopes the Chair will not rule is a very well-expressed idea of what the Chair ought to rule, to wit, buying land for an entirely new project, like buying land to put up an additional building, buying land to add to an experimental station which is necessary for the proper continuance of the Government work which is to be done upon a farm for the improvement of the work there being done, ought to be in order. This is necessary for the progress of the work which is already instituted and established by existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say that this is not a new question. It has been ruled upon before. There are precedents where it has been held that the purchase and establishment of a distinct station where the Government has not one now is clearly subject to a point of order, but where it is necessary to purchase additional land that you may utilize and properly use a station that the Government has for any purpose it has been held that an appropriation of money to do that is not subject to a point of order.

The Chair has two cases before him. The purchase of adjoining land for a hospital already established was held to be a continuation of a public work and not subject to a point of order, while an amendment for acquiring a new site was ruled out.

The enlargement of the land and water rights of a fish-culture station was held to be a continuation of a public work and an appropriation for the same not subject to a point of order. The Chair thinks that that distinction has been maintained in the long line of precedents, and even the persuasive reasoning of the gentleman from California will not induce the Chair to go contrary to them and try to establish a new order of precedents.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I am familiar with all of those rulings, but I have always held that the rulings were wrong. [Laughter.] I was in hopes the Chair would see it in that way.

The CHAIRMAN. If it were an entirely new question, the Chair perhaps might see it that way, but in view of this distinction, well defined in many cases, the Chair thinks it will follow the precedents and overrule the point of order.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF PLANT INDUSTRY.

Bureau of Plant Industry, salaries: One plant physiologist and pathologist, who shall be Chief of Bureau, $3,500; 1 plant physiologist and pathologist, who shall be Chief of Bureau in absence of Chief, $2,500; 1 botanist, $2,500; 1 pomologist, $2,500; 1 agrostologist, $2,500; 1 assistant pathologist, $1,800; 1 assistant botanist, $1,800; 1 assistant pomologist, $1,800; 1 assistant agrostologist, $1,800; 1 chief clerk, $1,600; 4 clerks class 3, $6,400; 9 clerks class 2, $12,600; 9 clerks class 1, $10,800; 6 clerks, at $1,000 each, $6,000; 2 clerks, at $900 each, $1,800; 2 clerks, at $840 each, $1,680; in all, $61,780.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order upon the words "three thousand five hundred dollars" in line 8, after the words "Chief of Bureau." The statutory salary is $3,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, this is a case where the committee saw fit in their judgment to report an increase of the salary of scientist holding this position. The clause is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], as this clause is subject to a point of order, that he ask unanimous consent to change $3,500 to $3,000, making the sum conform to the salary as provided by law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Very well, I ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the appropriation in line 8, page 14, will be amended so as to read "$3,000" instead of "$3,500."

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. TAYLER of Ohio having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7018) for the relief of Robert J. Spottswood and the heirs of William C. McClellan, deceased.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 966. An act for the relief of Edward R. Stackable, collector of customs for the district of Hawaii.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

S. 3321. An act granting a pension to Patrick J. Murphy; and
S. 715. An act to provide for two additional associate justices of the supreme court of the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference and had further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 13031) to prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese and persons of Chinese descent, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PLATT of Connecticut, Mr. DILLINGHAM, and Mr. CLAY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4642. An act granting an increase of pension to Anne Dowery; and
S. 312. An act providing that the circuit court of appeals of the eighth judicial circuit of the United States shall hold at least one term of said court annually in the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado, or in the city of Cheyenne, in the State of Wyoming, on the first Monday in September in each year.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 11535) for the protection of game in Alaska, and for other purposes; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

General expenses, Bureau of Plant Industry: vegetable, pathological, and physiological investigations: Investigating the nature of diseases injurious to fruits, friut trees, grain, cotton, vegetable and other useful plants; experiments in the treatment of the same; the study of plant physiology in relation to crop production and the improvement of crops by breeding and selection; to investigate the diseases affecting citrus fruits, pineapples, and truck crops grown during the winter in the Southern States; to investigate canaigre and other tannin-bearing plants; to investigate and report upon the diseases affecting plants on the Pacific coast; to originate or introduce improved varieties of fruits and vegetables in cooperation with the section of seed and plant introduction; to study the relation of soil and climatic conditions to diseases of plants, particularly with reference to the California vine diseases and diseases of the sugar beet, in cooperation with the Bureau of Soils, and for other purposes connected with the discovery and practical application of improved methods of crop production; to continue the work of originating, by breeding and selection, in cooperation with the other divisions of the Department and the experiment stations, new varieties of oranges, lemons, and other tropical and subtropical fruits more resistant to cold and disease and of better quality; varieties of wheat and other cereals more resistant to rust and smut and better suited to the various sections of this country; varieties of cotton more resistant to disease and of longer and better staple, and varieties of pears and apples more resistant to blight and better adapted for export; to investigate the causes of decay in forest timber and timber used for construction purposes, and to devise means for preventing the decay of the same; to investigate the practical application in agriculture of the fixation of atmospheric nitrogen by bacteria and other micro-organisms in soils and in the root tubercles of leguminous and other plants; to cultivate and distribute these nitrogen fixers and to determine the conditions most favorable to their development; the employment of investigators, local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and student scientific aids at an annual salary of $480 each, and other labor required in conducting experiments in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and collating, digesting, reporting, and illustrating the results of such experiments; for gas and electric current; purchase of chemicals and apparatus required in the field and laboratory; necessary traveling expenses; the preparation of reports and illustrations; the rent and repairs of a building, not to exceed $2,000 per annum; all necessary office fixtures and supplies, and for other expenses connected with the practical work of the investigations, $100,000.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 15 and 16, on page 16, strike out the words "in the city of Washington and" and insert, after the word "elsewhere," in line 16, the words "than in the city of Washington;" so as to read: "in conducting experiments elsewhere than in the city of Washington."

Mr. WADSWORTH. This is the same kind of an amendment which the gentleman from Illinois offered to the paragraph in regard to the Bureau of Animal Industry. I think the House understands the situation exactly, and it is unnecesary for me to say anything more.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to say only a word. A little while ago——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Before the question is debated, I want to make a point of order upon the amendment. I submit that it changes existing law.

Mr. CANNON. Not at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I make the point. It can be argued later.

Mr. CANNON. I am ready to argue it now. Wherein does it change existing law?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Because the existing law is just as this bill is.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. This is the language of the previous appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] whether the clause which he cites in a previous appropriation bill does not expire with the termination of the year for which the appropriation was made?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes; I suppose it does.

The CHAIRMAN. This is for the year following.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, these are, in effect, the same words which were voted down in regard to the Bureau of Animal Industry. I want to take the sense of the committee in regard to this Bureau of Plant Industry. I do not suppose that "sheep scab" can attack a plant in the city of Washington. I fancy that the other amendment was voted down because it was conceived that the Secretary of Agriculture ought to have the power to employ the lump sum appropriation to meet some animal disease in the city of Washington. If that was the reason, that reason does not apply in this case.

I undertake to say that you provided specifically in the previous appropriation for meeting all these diseases that it is necessary for the Department to meet. This lump sum ought not to be available to do anything more in that direction.

If this amendment be not adopted, observe what may take place. Some gentleman walks down to the Department and says, "Appoint me a clerk here in the Bureau of Plant Industry." He may be answered, "All the clerks specifically provided for have been appointed." Then he may turn to this indefinite appropriation of a lump sum and may say, "Oh, no; you may appoint all of these clerks that you please." Now, there is no such authority in any other Department, and there ought not to be in this.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, the provision which the gentleman from Illinois proposes to strike out is even more important in reference to the Bureau of Plant Industry and the Bureau of Soils (to which we shall come shortly) than to the Bureau of Animal Industry. Under this provision scientific work is done all over the country by parties sent out from Washington during the summer months. That work is afterwards completed here in Washington. The employees come here and finish it up. To strike out these words, as proposed by the gentleman from Illinois, would certainly embarrass the work of these Bureaus.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, what the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HENRY] has just said is accentuated by evidence which I hold in my hand—a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wilson, which I will send to the desk and ask in a few moments to have read.

This letter was addressed to me a few days ago in reply to one I wrote Mr. Wilson since this bill was taken up. It shows that the reports of the employees of the Bureau of Soils are brought back, to use the words of Secretary Wilson, to be "digested at headquarters." The headquarters are in the city of Washington.

Employees of the Bureau of Soils are now going all over the country where tobacco is raised; they are bringing here to Washington specimens of the soil to be analyzed, so that the results may be embodied in their reports for the benefit of the farmers raising tobacco.

Now, if this amendment prevails—that is, if these words are stricken out, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]—I should say this work will have to stop.

That department of the Bureau of Soils which is examining the tobacco fields of Illinois, Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, Connecticut, and Massachusetts and Pennsylvania—indeed, all over this country—will have to stop work, and yet, I am told, great good will come from their work. Now, without saying more, I will ask the indulgence of the committee that this letter may be read, not only for the purpose of opposing the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, but for the purpose of enlightening the House on what this "Bureau of Soils" is doing.

The Clerk read as follows:

WORK OF THE BUREAU OF SOILS.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY, BUREAU OF SOILS,
Washington, D. C., April 26, 1902.

SIR: Your letter of April 25 has been received in reference to the work of the Bureau of Soils in Tennessee. I beg to inform you that the Bureau of Soils had a party of experts in Tennessee for some time last summer and made a soil survey of the whole of Montgomery County, which is in the center of the tobacco district, covering an area of 547 square miles, or 350,210 acres.

The map showing the distribution of the different kinds of soils and the report describing these soils and the agricultural conditions and possibilities of the county are in the hands of the Public Printer now, to come out in the Report of the Field Operations of the Bureau of Soils for 1901, which will probably be ready for distribution next September.

Our soil-survey party was under the charge of Mr. J. E. Lapham, and worked in close harmony with the tobacco men of the district. They were particularly fortunate in having very cordial relations with Mr. M. W. Clark, of Clarksville, and a number of other leaf dealers and tobacco growers throughout the district.

That more was not heard of this work through the papers is accounted for by the fact that the Department works quietly in these matters until the results of the work are thoroughly digested and the economic points brought out by the survey are seen, when suggestions are made of improved methods that can be used, or of new crops and new interests that can be introduced. Our field parties are invariably instructed to go quietly about their work and to have as little as possible to say for publication while in the area, for their reports must all be reviewed and digested at headquarters before any authorized statements can be made as to the results of the work or as to recommendations.

In regard to the result of the survey, our experts have classified the soils in five types, viz:

Clarksville silt loam, covering 233,410 acres, or two-thirds of the county, is the most important soil, being the best tobacco land; adapted also to corn, wheat, grass, and other cereal and forage crops.

Clarksville clay loam, covering only about 27,460 acres of what is locally known as the "barrens," yields a fair grade of tobacco, but rather inferior to that grown on the Clarksville silt loam. It is adapted to corn and grass; also wheat. Drainage is not all that could be desired, and underdrainage would undoubtedly prove beneficial.

Clarksville stony loam, covering 66,450 acres, has a hilly and broken surface, and is generally unproductive. It produces an inferior grade of tobacco, but it is believed that this soil could be advantageously used for fruits of various kinds, and that it will find a high place for special industries which have been developed on soils of similar character in other localities.

Clarksville loam, coving 17,090 acres, occupies the river bottoms along the Cumberland and Red rivers. It is an excellent soil for corn and grass, but is not adapted to tobacco, and is not so valuable for wheat as some of the other soils. It is liable to overflow in times of general freshets.

Guthrie clay, covering 5,800 acres, occurs in basin-like depressions and low flat areas with poor drainage. The soil is cold and generally acid and poorly adapted to cultivated crops. It is suggested that with underdrainage the greater portion of this land could be improved and adapted to wheat and corn.

The results of the soil survey indicate that with improved methods of cultivation and selection of seed the tobacco grown in this district could be considerably improved. It also seems probable that more diversified farming would be beneficial, and that the fruit industry could be developed upon the Clarksville stony loam. Too little attention seems to be paid to the raising of provisions either for the markets or for family supplies.

It was originally intended to send a party to Tennessee this year to make a soil survey of the Pikesville sheet of the United States Geological Survey in Cumberland County, on the Cumberland plateau, but the pressure for the work of the soil survey has been so great that it is probable that this area can not be entered this season, as our appropriations will permit us to have out only about fifteen or sixteen parties, and we have had to arrange for these parties to work in about twenty-five States.

I inclose a statement of the assignment of the soil-survey parties for the field season of 1902, so that you can see where the work is to be done and how it has been necessary for us to assign parties to a State only for three or six months, instead of giving them the full field season, as economy of time and labor would suggest. This assignment has been tentatively made on the basis of my estimates, in which I have provided for an increase of 5 field parties over our last season's assignment.

The soil survey in Montgomery County was made as a basis for tobacco investigations such as we have been carrying on in the past in Connecticut, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Texas. It was my plan to increase the tobacco parties next year, and allowance was made for this in my estimates, but as these estimates have been considerably reduced by the committee I have abandoned all plans for extending the tobacco investigations, at least, on the 1st of July as I had intended, and it may be necessary to reduce somewhat the work of the soil survey.

We have made these soil-survey maps now in quite a number of the tobacco districts of the United States as preliminary to sending parties of tobacco experts to investigate the possibilities of improving the quality of the leaf grown, but the interests are so large and from so many sources that we can not hope to follow up closely the work of the soil survey with the tobacco parties unless our appropriations are considerably increased.

These tobacco parties cost about $5,500 apiece, and the cigar interests, manufacturing tobacco interests, bright tobacco interests, and the export tobacco interests, are all clamoring for recognition. It rests with Congress entirely as to how rapidly this work can be developed, as we are ready now with a nucleus of trained observers to undertake the development of these lines of research to any extent that Congress may authorize.

In reference to your suggestion that the South has not benefited by the work of the soil survey, I beg to inform you that the work was carried on last year in Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas. Soil maps have been prepared for all of those States, and you will see from the inclosed assignment card that work is planned this year in Virginia, North Carolina, Kentucky, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Texas, and Arkansas.

We have tried to develop the work of the Bureau of Soils, as of the other bureaus and divisions, without regard to sectional or State lines, giving regard only to the possibilities of doing efficient and practical work for the country where, in our opinion, we can do the most good.

Very respectfully,

JAMES WILSON, Secretary.

Hon. JOHN W. GAINES,
House of Representatives.

During the reading of the foregoing letter the following proceedings occurred:

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the remaining portion of the letter be read.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I would like to inquire who wrote the letter?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. James Wilson, Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. To whom did he write it?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. To me.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I think, Mr. Chairman, that it ought to be read.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Chairman, just a word——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I move to strike out the last word. All this work has been done and is being done and it has to be all brought back here for final analysis to the city of Washington, and if the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois prevails, it will result in destroying the whole undertaking of this Bureau for next year. We should see what this Bureau can do before we strike at it or repeal the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that his time be extended, so that the Clerk may finish reading the letter. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk then concluded the reading of the letter.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I rise simply for the purpose of making an inquiry at this time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will state to the gentleman from New Jersey that there is a motion pending. Let us dispose of that first, and then I shall be glad to give any information in my power.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment rejected.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, there were representatives of sundry associations, particularly of the American Cranberry Growers' Association, here to secure for their specific industry, as I understand it, special appropriations, particularly the Cranberry Growers' Association desiring a specific item of $5,000 for the purpose of investigating the rot in that fruit. I would like to inquire if the committee took into consideration that specific request, and if the lump sum appropriated of $100,000 was considered large enough to cover that item so that that work might be done.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I will state to the gentleman that the matter of the diseases of the cranberry was brought before the committee, and we thought the language in the lump-sum appropriation was broad enough to cover the diseases of all plants. The lump-sum appropriation of $100,000 was deemed sufficient to cover everything that might come before the Department.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. It was not so much the breadth of the language as the breadth of the appropriation that I inquired about.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This sum is raised $38,000 from that of last year.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. And was considered by the committee large enough to cover that item?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Arlington experimental farm: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to continue the necessary improvements to establish and maintain a general experimental farm and agricultural station on the Arlington estate, in the State of Virginia, including employment of labor in the city of Washington or elsewhere, in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved April 18, 1900, entitled "An act to set apart a portion of the Arlington estate for experimental agricultural purposes, and to place said portion under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture and his successors in office," which act shall be construed to confer upon the Secretary of Agriculture and his successors jurisdiction over the land in the Arlington reservation lying between the Georgetown and Alexandria road and the old bed of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal and extending from the south line of the said reservation to a line beginning at a point on the east side of the public road and running thence at right angles with said road to the said canal bed, $15,000.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out, in line 5, all after the word "over" down to and including the word "bed," in line 10, and inserting the following, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

It seems that the description of the land in the bill is not correct. We have now quoted from the original law which set aside that portion of the Arlington estate to the care of the Secretary of Agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "over," in line 5, page 22, down to and including the word "bed," in line 10, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"So much of the Government land in Alexandria County, Va., known as the Arlington estate as lies east of the public road leading from the Aqueduct Bridge to Alexandria, Va., otherwise called the Georgetown and Alexandria road, and between said road to the Potomac River, containing about 400 acres, with the exception, however, of a strip of land as follows: Commencing at the point where the Georgetown and Alexandria road enters the Arlington estate on the north side; thence along said road 625 yards; thence, in a line perpendicular to said road, to the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal; thence along said canal to the north line of the reservation."

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9 to the bill (H. R. 9206) to make oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia into which they are transported, and to change the tax on oleomargarine, and to amend an act entitled "An act defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine," approved August 2, 1886.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 41.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound in cloth 3,500 additional copies of Senate Document No. 232, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, being the report of the Commissioner-General for the United States to the International Universal Exposition, Paris, 1900, in 6 volumes, 1,000 of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 500 for distribution by the office of the Commissioner-General.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 312) providing that the circuit court of appeals of the eighth judicial circuit of the United States shall hold at least one term of said court annually in the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado, or in the city of Cheyenne, in the State of Wyoming, on the first Monday in September in each year.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to expend the said sum, as nearly as practicable, in the purchase and distribution of such valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, the best he can obtain at public or private sale, and such as shall be suitable for the respective localities to which the same are to be apportioned, and in which same are to be distributed as hereinafter stated, and such seed so purchased shall include a variety of vegetable and flower seeds suitable for planting and culture in the various sections of the United States. An equal proportion of two-thirds of all seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants shall, upon their request, after due notification by the Secretary of Agriculture that the allotment to their respective districts is ready for distribution, be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution among their constituents, or mailed by the Department upon the receipt of their addressed franks; such franks to be furnished by the Public Printer as is now done for document slips with the names of Senators, Members, and Delegates printed thereon, and the words "United States Department of Agriculture, Congressional Seed Distribution," or such other phraseology as the Secretary may direct; and the person receiving such seeds shall be requested to inform the Department of the results of the experiments therewith: Provided, That all seeds, bulbs, plants, etc., emanating from the Department of Agriculture shall, when properly presented for mailing, be transmitted through the mails free without limit of weight, the same as printed or written official matter is now carried: Provided also, That all seeds, bulbs, plants, and cuttings herein allotted to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution remaining uncalled for on the 1st of April shall be distributed by the Secretary of Agriculture, giving preference to those persons whose names and addresses have been furnished by Senators and Representatives in Congress and who have not before, during the same season, been supplied by the Department: And provided also, That the Secretary shall report, as provided in this act, the place, quantity, and price of seeds purchased, and the date of purchase; but nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to prevent the Secretary of Agriculture from sending seeds to those who apply for the same. And the amount herein appropriated shall not be diverted or used for any other purpose but for the purchase, propagation, and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants: Provided, however, That upon each envelope or wrapper containing packages of seeds the contents thereof shall be plainly indicated, and the Secretary shall not distribute to any Senator, Representative, or Delegate seeds entirely unfit for the climate and locality he represents, but shall distribute the same so that each member may have seeds of equal value, as near as may be, and the best adapted to the locality he represents: Provided also, That the seeds allotted to Senators and Representatives for distribution in the districts embraced within the twenty-fifth and thirty-fourth parallels of latitude shall be ready for delivery not later than the 10th day of January: Provided further, That $20,000 of the sum thus appropriated, or so much thereof as the Secretary of Agriculture shall direct, may be used to collect, purchase, test, propagate, and distribute rare and valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants from foreign countries for experiments with reference to their introduction into this country; and the seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants thus collected, purchased, tested, and propagated shall not be included in general distribution, but shall be used for experimental tests to be carried on with the cooperation of the agricultural experiment stations, $270,000.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to raise a point of order against the words, beginning with the word "provided," in line 8, page 24, down to and including the word "carried," in line 13. I think the chairman of the committee admits that it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I admit the point of order, but I also would like to strike out the provision on its merits, because since inserting it I have received a letter from the Postmaster-General which convinces me that the item should not have been inserted in the bill. I will not detain the committee by reading that letter, but I should like to have it printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to print a letter in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., April 24, 1902.

HON. JAMES W. WADSWORTH,
Chairman of Committee on Agriculture,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to call your attention to the following proviso found upon page 24 of House bill (H. R. 13895) reported from the Committee on Agriculture on the 21st instant, namely:

"Provided, That all seeds, bulbs, plants, etc., emanating from the Department of Agriculture shall, when properly presented for mailing, be transmitted through the mails free without limit of weight, the same as printed or written official matter is now carried."

As this provision, if enacted into law, will change existing statute (modifying as it does the limit of weight of mail matter of the fourth class) and materially affect the conduct of the service in the matter of the receipt and transportation of articles which may be affected by it, I deem it advisable to call attention particularly to the matter and to the changes in the law and the practice of the Department which have resulted in the present status, and to point out to you that the enactment of this provision would be a reversion to conditions which this Department has at all times endeavored to relieve itself from, and which relief was partially secured by the enactment of the existing statute upon the subject.

Section 3879, Revised Statutes, limits the weight of mail matter as follows:

"No package weighing more than 4 pounds shall be received for conveyance by mail, except books published or circulated by order of Congress."

Under this statute the postal service was not burdened by the receipt and transmission of matter which either in its nature or in its bulk was more adapted to transportation by freight than by mail.

By the act of March 3, 1879 (20 Stats., 360), this section was amended so as to declare the limit of weight to be 4 pounds for each package, "except in case of single books weighing in excess of that amount, and except for books and documents published or circulated by order of Congress or official matter emanating from any of the departments of the Government or from the Smithsonian Institution."

The exceptions to the 4-pound limit in the above amendment were clearly defined, except with reference to "official matter." Inasmuch as it was in the province of each department of the Government to determine for itself what was to be regarded by it as its "official matter," there was considerable difference of opinion between the Post-Office Department and other Executive Departments with reference to the proper construction of that portion of the amendment, the Post-Office Department desiring to limit the construction to apply to such matter as is generally known or conceded to be mail matter; that is, matter that would naturally be sent by mail, while other Executive Departments inclined to include within the meaning of the term matter which either by its nature or by its bulk and weight was more properly the subject for transportation by freight.

This resulted in much embarrassment and inconvenience to the postal service, and upon proper representations relative thereto, made by this Department to the Committees on Post-Offices and Post-Roads in the two Houses of Congress, that body amended the then existing provision by the enactment of June 8, 1896, "An act to regulate mail matter of the fourth class." (29 Stats., 262.) This act, so far as pertinent to this inquiry, reads as follows:

* * * "That mailable matter of the fourth class shall embrace all matter not embraced in the first, second, or third class which is not in its form or nature liable to destroy, deface, or otherwise damage the contents of the mail bag or harm the person of anyone engaged in the postal service, and is not above the weight provided by law, which is hereby declared to be not exceeding 4 pounds for each package thereof, except in case of single books weighing in excess of that amount, and except for books and documents published or circulated by order of Congress, or printed or written official matter emanating from any of the departments of the Government or from the Smithsonian Institution." * * *

While this act did not divest matter which was obviously of a character more related to freight than to mail of its classification as mail matter, it did have the effect of limiting the matter which can be transported in the mails in packages exceeding 4 pounds in weight to "printed or written official matter emanating from any department of the Government or from the Smithsonian Institution."

The practice under this statute has resulted largely in relief of the postal service from the receipt and transmission by mail of large and bulky articles sent out by the Executive Departments, though it is still considerably inconvenienced by the frequent offer for transmission of such matter as seeds in larger packages than authorized by the statute which has been the subject of much correspondence between this Department and the Department of Agriculture.

Your attention is called to the fact that if the provision in the bill under consideration should become law it will, as far as the subject-matter involved is concerned, undo the results of the past efforts of this Department in the direction of a better classification and definition of fourth-class mail matter and the facilitation of the handling and prompt dispatch of other mails by the elimination of large and bulky packages.

Not only will this be the result, but the general terms used in the provision are so broad, as well as indefinite in some respects, that their interpretation by the Agricultural Department in their most liberal sense will subject the postal service to all the old abuses with reference to the transportation of implements, equipages, etc., from which the postal service suffered so much before the enactment of 1896. This Department deems it very important that this step be not taken.

The postal service does not propose to receive and transport matter which is, by its nature or by reason of the manner of its presentation, more properly classed as freight, nor has it the facilities for receiving or handling the same. It is not deemed expedient to make any exception in favor of any one class of articles, nor of any one department in the matter of the limit of weight of articles presented for handling in the mails.

It might be suggested that in the absence of a custom determining the same it is questionable whether such matter as is under consideration can properly be termed mail matter in any event. What is mail matter or official mail matter, within the intention of this statute, has not been defined otherwise than by a custom. In the absence of statute or custom it might well be contended that it should not include any matter excepting that which would naturally be sent by mail under ordinary circumstances by the public, and should not apply to articles that, by their nature or by reason of their bulk, can more properly be sent by freight and handled by railroad employees who are supplied with appliances, such as trucks, etc., for the handling of freight matter.

It has for some time been the purpose of this Department to eliminate from the mails, as far as practicable, all matter originating from its own service or its branches which must be presented and transported in bulky packages, and to provide for its transportation by the ordinary means of freight. In pursuance of this policy, and in accordance with statutory authorization, arrangements have been made for the transportation of postal cards and stamped envelopes between the postal card and the stamped envelope agencies and the large cities, and for the transportation of mail equipment between the larger post-offices of the country.

It would seem to be very proper for Congress to authorize the transportation of large and bulky packages and shipment of the matter now under consideration in the same manner as it has authorized the transportation by freight of the matter above referred to instead of providing for a manner of shipment through the mails, which will, in the opinion of this Department, seriously inconvenience the conduct of the postal service.

Very respectfully,

H. C. PAYNE, Postmaster-General.

Mr. LOUD. I have no objection to the gentleman striking out the provision.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the point of order withdrawn?

Mr. LOUD. I do not like to withdraw the point of order and then have the chairman of the committee beat me. I think it had better go out on the point of order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Very well; let it go out on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD].

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 6, page 24, after the word "direct," insert:

"Provided, That the relative proportion of vegetable, flower, and other seeds allotted to any district shall be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, in accordance with the written request of the Senator, Representative, or Delegate entitled to the same, filed with him at least sixty days prior to the time of advertisement for the purchase of such seeds: Provided, however, That the total cost of the seeds furnished under such written request shall not exceed the cost of the seeds that would otherwise be allotted to such Senator, Representative, or Delegate in Congress; nor shall the allotment of flower seeds of any other district be thereby curtailed.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, as a part of my remarks, and to be taken out of my time, I desire the following document to be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

ODE TO CONGRESSMAN ROBERTS.

Oh, ROBERTS, ERNEST ROBERTS, in D. C. far away,
I have received from you a letter, or a package, I should say,
And puzzled am I greatly to find out how I may
Thank you for this favor, which came postpaid to-day.

Did you mistake my calling, and, not meaning any harm,
Think that I was toiling upon some backwoods farm
Where I needed seed for onions, for cucumbers, and beans,
And a good receipt for raising prime dandelion greens?

I wonder if you are obliged to send these seeds by law;
The seed for grape and rye and corn, the first I ever saw.
If not, to do it would be a parliamentary abuse;
Then send the kind of seed that would raise them in the juice.

Next time you send me samples of seed from Uncle Sam—
Things for which I have no use and do not care a —— (Spinach, greens, and kidney beans will never cure our ills)—
Send us seed for raising Carter's little liver pills.

But, oh, an afterthought has struck me, and it fills my soul with grief;
Did you send them to me because of the advanced price of beef,
Thinking it had gone up quite beyond my means
And that hereafter I would have to live on pork and beans?

Oh, ROBERTS, ERNEST ROBERTS, I don't intend to die yet,
But if beef goes up so high that I can't afford to buy it,
And, through rigid economy, I am obliged to diet,
I will get a hoe and dig a hole and plant your stuff and try it.

Oh, ROBERTS, ERNEST ROBERTS, at these lines don't take alarm,
But send your seeds to some poor cuss who's living on a farm.
I never was in favor of making garden truck my feed,
While there are lots of folks who are in need of seed.

Oh, ROBERTS, ERNEST ROBERTS, in D. C. far away,
I hardly know what to do with the stuff I got to-day.
I am fearful, should I eat it, that I would have a cramp;
I almost wish you had inclosed a return stamp.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I think we had better rise and consider that overnight.

Mr. ROBERTS. I have two minutes.

I want to say to the members of this committee that the sentiment in that rhyme portrays quite faithfully the state of mind of constituents in the city districts who get packages of vegetable seeds. I want to send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a very short letter, which will give the other side—not the vegetable side, but the flower side.

The Clerk read as follows:

LYNN, MASS., April 16, 1902.

Mr. ROBERTS.

DEAR SIR: I am writing to ask you if you would kindly send me some flower seeds. I am 12 years old and go to the Burrill Grammar School, Lynn. I am in the sixth grade. My teacher's name is Miss Moran.

I am very fond of flowers, and am going to have a plot of ground for myself this summer.

I hope to have a great many flowers, so that I can give them to sick people.

I remain, yours, truly,

JESSIE BRITNER,
77 Wyman Street, Lynn, Mass.

Mr. ROBERTS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I suggest that these two documents present as concisely and as tersely as can be presented the reasons why city members should have the privilege of indicating to the Secretary of Agriculture, a sufficient time in advance of his purchase of seeds, the kinds they desire, either of flower or vegetable. I will say for the information of the committee that the Secretary of Agriculture told me a year ago, when this bill was under discussion, that the money cost of a package of vegetable seeds was greater than a package of flower seeds; so if the committee should see fit to adopt the amendment I have offered, it will not at all interfere with any member on this floor, and it would also be something in the way of saving to the Government in the matter of the expense for seeds.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have no objection, if the committee wishes to consider the amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee and several others. Let us rise.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. POWERS of Maine, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13895, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13031) to prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese and persons of Chinese descent.

RETURN OF BILL TO SENATE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following request of the Senate; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, April 28, 1902.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 312) providing that the circuit court of appeals of the eighth judicial circuit of the United States shall hold at least one term of said court annually in the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado, or in the city of Cheyenne, in the State of Wyoming, on the first Monday in September in each year.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. MORRELL for two days, on account of death in his family.

CHINESE-EXCLUSION BILL.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the Chinese bill that came from the Senate a moment since, and ask to have it considered by the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois calls up the conference report.

Mr. HITT. I submit the statement of the managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there a statement?

Mr. HITT. There is.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire the report and statement read?

Mr. HITT. Yes.

The report of the committee of conference was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13031) to prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese and persons of Chinese descent, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said Senate amendment insert the following:

"That all laws now in force prohibiting and regulating the coming of Chinese persons and persons of Chinese descent into the United States, and the residence of such persons therein, including sections 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, and 14, of the act entitled "An act to prohibit the coming of Chinese laborers into the United States," approved September 13, 1888, be, and the same are hereby, reenacted, extended, and continued so far as the same are not inconsistent with treaty obligations, until otherwise provided by law, and said laws shall also apply to the island territory under the jurisdiction of the United States, and prohibit the immigration of Chinese laborers not citizens of the United States from such island territory to the mainland territory of the United States, whether in such island territory at the time of cession or not, and from one portion of the island territory of the United States to another portion of said island territory: Provided, however, That said laws shall not apply to the transit of Chinese laborers from one island to another island of the same group, and any islands within the jurisdiction of any State or the District of Alaska shall be considered a part of the mainland under this section.

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and empowered to make and prescribe, and from time to time change such rules and regulations not inconsistent with the laws of the land as he may deem necessary and proper to execute the provisions of this act and of the acts hereby extended and continued, and of the treaty of December 8, 1894, between the United States and China, and, with the approval of the President, to appoint such agents as he may deem necessary for the efficient execution of said treaty and said acts.

"SEC. 3. That nothing in the provisions of this act or any other act shall be construed to prevent, hinder, or restrict any foreign exhibitor, representative, or citizen of any foreign nation, or the holder, who is a citizen of any foreign nation, of any concession or privilege from any fair or exposition authorized by act of Congress from bringing into the United States, under contract, such mechanics, artisans, agents, or other employees, natives of their respective foreign countries, as they or any of them may deem necessary for the purpose of making preparation for installing or conducting their exhibits, or of preparing for installing or conducting any business authorized or permitted under or by virtue of or pertaining to any concession or privilege which may have been or may be granted by any said fair or exposition in connection with such exposition, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, both as to the admission and return of such person or persons.

"SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of every Chinese laborer, other than a citizen, rightfully in and entitled to remain in any of the insular territory of the United States (Hawaii excepted) at the time of the passage of this act to obtain within one year thereafter a certificate of residence in the insular territory wherein he resides, which certificate shall entitle him to residence therein, and upon failure to obtain such certificate as herein provided he shall be deported from such insular territory; and the Philippine Commission is authorized and required to make all regulations and provisions necessary for the enforcement of this section in the Philippine Islands, including the form and substance of the certificate of residence, so that the same shall clearly and sufficiently identify the holder thereof and enable officials to prevent fraud in the transfer of the same: Provided, however, That if said Philippine Commission shall find that it is impossible to complete the registration herein provided for within one year from the passage of this act said Commission is hereby authorized and empowered to extend the time for such registration for a further period not exceeding one year."

And the Senate agreed to the same.

R. R. HITT,
J. B. PERKINS,
CHAMP CLARK,
Managers on the part of the House.
O. H. PLATT,
WM. P. DILLINGHAM,
A. S. CLAY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to H. R. 13031 submit the following written statement of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

The conference report as read indicates exactly how the statute will read if enacted as agreed upon.

R. R. HITT.
J. B. PERKINS.
CHAMP CLARK.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, the House is so familiar with the question of Chinese exclusion and all that related to it in the details of the House bill so long debated on this floor that I will not detain members in explanations, except to say that the Senate amendment or substitute endeavored to do in brief what the House had labored to accomplish by a very long bill—to continue and reenact the various existing laws excluding Chinese laborers. In the numerous discussions in conference over this disagreement between the two Houses we who were House conferees objected to a condition which the Senate had inserted, limiting the time to which these laws should be extended and in force to the year 1904, the date of the termination of the existing treaty, or to 1914, the time to which that treaty might be extended; and we also objected to other minor provisions, which I will not go over.

That time limit was unsatisfactory, especially to the gentlemen on this floor representing those western parts of the United States, where the Chinese laborers are found in great numbers. Your conferees have steadfastly resisted the incorporation of those words into this law, and to-day the Senate conferees, after many conferences day after day, yielded, so that the only words left of this limitation, after the declaration of the continuance of the existing laws, are that they shall extend so far as is not inconsistent with treaty obligation until otherwise provided by law.

This measure further prohibits immigration of Chinese laborers into our insular possessions, and the passage of the Chinese from the islands to our mainland is forbidden.

The provision in the Senate bill requiring Chinese laborers in the Philippines to procure certificates through a system of United States officers delegated and appointed from Washington is stricken out and the provision in the House bill is adopted, that all this should be done by those appointed by the Philippine Commission, already on the ground. This, in brief, is the short

Chinese-exclusion bill on which we have agreed and which I think all gentlemen who have kept pace with this long discussion will agree is the essence of all that was desired and needed and substantially that for which the House contended.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was considered; and the conference report was agreed to.

STATE OF MARYLAND, OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE,
Annapolis, April 25, 1902.

Hon. LOUIS E. MCCOMAS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Complying with the request contained in the joint resolution of the general assembly of Maryland of 1902 I inclose herewith a copy of the same.

Very truly,
WILFRED BATEMAN,
Secretary of State.

JOINT RESOLUTION.

Joint resolution of the general assembly of the State of Maryland to Congress to complete the "inland waterway" connecting Chincoteague Bay and the Delaware Bay.

Whereas Congress in several of its past river and harbor acts has appropriated several sums of money for the purpose of creating an inland waterway between Chincoteague Bay and the Delaware Bay, which appropriation has been recommended by the Chief of Engineers and disbursed under the authority of the Secretary of War; and

Whereas said internal waterway has not yet reached the stage of completion intended in the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers heretofore accepted: Therefore be it

Resolved by the general assembly of Maryland, That the delegation in Congress from this State be, and is hereby, requested to urge upon Congress to make a suitable appropriation for the early completion of this work.

Be it further resolved, That the secretary of state be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit a copy of these resolutions, under the seal of the State, to each of the Senators and Representatives now in Congress from this State.

[SEAL.]

JOHN HUBNER,
President of the Senate.
NOBLE L. MITCHELL,
Speaker of the House of Delegates.

I, John Walter Smith, governor of the State of Maryland, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of a joint resolution of the general assembly of Maryland in reference to "inland waterway" connecting Chincoteague Bay and Delaware Bay.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Maryland this 25th day of April, 1902.

[SEAL.] JOHN WALTER SMITH.

By the governor:

WILFRED BATEMAN,
Secretary of State.

Mr. McCOMAS. I present a petition of the legislature of Maryland, praying that an appropriation be made to acquire and enlarge the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, in order that it may be used by the warships of the Navy and the merchants' shipping as an inland waterway for the purposes of public defense and international commerce. I ask that the petition be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF MARYLAND, OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE,
Annapolis, April 25, 1902.

Hon. LOUIS E. McCOMAS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Complying with the request contained in the joint resolution of the general assembly of Maryland of 1902, I inclose herewith a copy of the same.

Very truly, JOHN WALTER SMITH, Governor.

JOINT RESOLUTION.

Whereas the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, extending from Elk River in Cecil County, Md., to Delaware City, on the Delaware, connecting the waters of the Chesapeake and Delaware bays, furnishes a direct route to sea for war ships of the United States Navy and vessels trading at the ports of Baltimore and the upper part of Chesapeake Bay, thereby shortening the distance from Baltimore to European ports and New York and New England seaboard cities 225 miles, and avoiding the dangerous and tedious route doubling Cape Charles; and

Whereas the speedy acquisition of said canal by the Federal Government for the purpose of widening and enlarging it to accommodate war ships and seagoing vessels of the largest size can be accomplished by a very small expenditure of the public funds compared to the paramount importance of such waters to the large and increasing commerce of Baltimore and the great agricultural sections of the Southwest, the West, and the Northwest, all of which finds its nearest and most natural outlet at Baltimore; and

Whereas the Federal Government has expended and is expending large sums of money to improve and extend the Naval Academy grounds at Annapolis, and from year to year is also increasing the size and importance of the national capital; and

Whereas the said canal enlarged and deepened would afford the cheapest and most effectual means of defending the cities of Washington, Baltimore, and Annapolis on the south side, and Philadelphia, Chester, Wilmington, New York, and the New England seaports on the north side, in case of war by enabling the naval forces of the United States freely and speedily to pass from bay to bay, and enabling our Navy to pass up the Atlantic coast by an inland waterway for the defense of said cities when threatened by hostile fleets, and would also enable our merchant shipping to retreat from one bay to the other in case of danger from a hostile fleet; and

Whereas the Federal Government is charged with the public defense, and it is its duty to adopt the most complete mode of rendering the capital and Annapolis and the great seaboard cities impregnable, and the interests heretofore mentioned are of national as well as international importance, and the acquisition and change in said canal necessary to fit it for the purposes aforesaid can be effected at a comparatively small expense when the vast importance of the work is considered: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the general assembly of Maryland, That the Representatives and Senators from Maryland in the Congress of the United States are hereby requested to use their best efforts to secure an appropriation by the Federal Government of sufficient money to acquire and enlarge the said Chesapeake and Delaware Canal in order that it may be used by the war ships of the Navy and the merchant shipping as an inland waterway for the purposes of public defense and international commerce.

And be it further resolved, That the governor of Maryland be, and he is hereby, requested without delay to transmit a copy of these resolutions to each of the said Representatives and Senators from Maryland.

Given under our hand this 10th day of April, 1902.

JOHN HUBNER,
President of the Senate.
NOBLE L. MITCHELL,
Speaker of the House of Delegates.

CONFERENCE OF AMERICAN STATES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of State, submitting the report, with accompanying papers, of the delegates of the United States to the Second Conference of American States, held at the City of Mexico from October 22, 1901, to January 22, 1902.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, April 29, 1902.

AGREEMENT WITH INDIANS OF ROSEBUD RESERVATION.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I ask that we may take up Senate bill 2992, the first bill on the Calendar under Rule VIII, and that the discussion may proceed without the five minutes' limitation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2992) to ratify an agreement with the Sioux tribe of Indians of the Rosebud Reservation in South Dakota, and making appropriation to carry the same into effect, and that the debate upon the bill shall not be subject to the limitations of Rule VIII. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been read at length as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GAMBLE. The amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] is pending.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. When the bill was up before, I proposed an amendment, which does not appear on the bill. I have not the amendment with me. If I could find the RECORD I would turn to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, page 6, line 18, after the word "acre," strike out down to and including the word "that," in line 25, and insert the word "and;" so that the additional proviso, if amended, would read:

And provided further, That the price of said lands shall be $2.50 per acre, and homestead settlers, who commute their entries under section 2301, Revised Statutes, shall pay for the land entered the price fixed herein.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. At the request of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], I yield to him for a few moments.

FOOD ADULTERATION, ETC.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I should like to have unanimous consent that Senate bill 3342, which is the pure-food bill, be taken up after the routine morning business, upon the final disposition of the bill now under consideration, and proceeded with without limitation of debate. I do not understand that such an arrangement will interfere with any other bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a unanimous-consent agreement in regard to the union railroad station bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish Senate bill 3342 to follow that and the bill now under consideration when those bills are disposed of. I ask that it may follow Senate bill 4825 after the disposition of Senate bill 2992, which is now under consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota asks that Senate bill 3342, the pure-food bill, may receive consideration in the morning hour after the union railroad station bill and the present bill are disposed of. Is there objection?

Mr. KEAN. Not to interfere with appropriation bills.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The appropriation bills always have preference.

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course those, I suppose, will take precedence anyway.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. What is the proposition?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request is that the pure-food bill, so called, may receive consideration in the morning hour after the union station bill is disposed of and after the bill which is now before the Committee of the Whole is disposed of.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The proposition, then, is to make a regular order by unanimous consent to take up the morning hour for a number of days to come.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think it will take the morning hour for any great length of time.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. When the time comes to consider the bill I shall not object to taking it up for consideration, but I do not believe we ought to have an agreement of this sort made by unanimous consent. The Senate is not now half full.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to say to the Senator from Arkansas that the bill will come up in its regular order on the Calendar to-day, and I wish to have such an agreement made at this time instead of waiting until it is reached.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am perfectly willing that it shall come up then.

Mr. RAWLINS. Will the Senator from North Dakota yield to me for a moment?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. RAWLINS. I wish to make a personal explanation.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let us settle this matter first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. That disposes of it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That disposes of it. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. RAWLINS. I ask the Senator to yield for a personal explanation.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Not to take long?

Mr. RAWLINS. Only a minute or two.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Very well.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, on Thursday last the Associated Press reported that I had charged, in my speech in the Senate, General Chaffee with being a dastard villain, who had brought disgrace upon the American name and the American people. Usually the press is very accurate and fair, but in this instance it failed to properly interpret the meaning and intention of my words. I spoke extemporaneously and without notes, but the following is an exact copy of my language as taken down by the Official Reporter and transcribed by him:

> I am unable to fix the responsible head and emanation of these barbarities, which would disgrace the annals of even a semicivilized country, not to speak of the nation which claims to hold aloft the escutcheon of honor and justice and fair dealing. Did Chaffee alone, unaided, in coldness and in brutality, and in savage and unrelenting disregard of every humane sentiment or possibility of human suffering, conceive this iniquitous scheme? Whence? From what diabolical source was it derived? The American people ought to know. Is there any penalty beneath the sun adequate to be meted out to the dastard villain who has thus brought dishonor upon the American name and the American people?
> I fear, Mr. President, that there has grown up in our midst a little cabal, a coterie of military upstarts and parvenus, all unconsciously to the great, broad-minded, humane people constituting the American Republic, within gunshot almost of where I now speak, who are the authors of all these things, and upon whom the responsibilities of these iniquities ought justly to be made to rest. I am loath to hold up to criticism the men who take their lives in their hands and go out and fight the battles of the Republic, who are willing to take upon themselves those responsibilities which may end only in death or in honor. I am unwilling, without conclusive proof of the fact, to presume that any one of the men who have gone out and have actually done battle in the Philippine Islands ever conceived this line of policy which has recently been carried out there.

Mr. President, it will be noticed that I did not make the charge against General Chaffee imputed to me. I did not intend to make such a charge. I do not think I could truthfully speak of him as a dastard. The Associated Press unintentionally has done both him and me an injustice, which, I have no doubt, it will be glad to correct.

AGREEMENT WITH INDIANS OF ROSEBUD RESERVATION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2992) to ratify an agreement with the Sioux tribe of Indians of the Rosebud Reservation in South Dakota, and making appropriation to carry the same into effect.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, this bill and the amendment which I have proposed to it present a very serious question of our public policy. I regret that other matters have so engrossed my attention that I am not particularly prepared to present the question which is thus raised. I may say in the outset that the question involved here means a great many millions of Government expenditure if it should be decided in one way, and it incidentally affects our whole Indian policy.

This is a bill for the opening of the Rosebud Reservation in South Dakota. I do not remember at this time the exact number of acres which are thus to be opened by the bill, but the price to be paid to the Indians is something over a million dollars. The question is whether the Government, in opening the lands to settlement, shall give the lands thus purchased from the Indians to the settlers under the homestead law, or whether it shall require the settlers who take up these lands under the homestead law to pay for them a sum per acre equivalent to what the Government pays the Indians for them. In other words, in opening the Indian reservations which already remain, what is to be the policy of the Government? Are we to pay the Indians a high price for the lands which we obtain a cession of, and then give those lands to settlers free of cost, or shall we require the settlers to pay as much for the lands as will make up wholly for the amount which we have paid for them? That is the question, and Senators will see that it is a far-reaching question.

I do not know how many million acres still remain in Indian reservations which must in the future be opened to public settlement, but there are many millions, and, at the rate we have been paying the Indians under the agreements made with them for such lands, the amount to be expended in the not very distant future will run up into the millions. At a rough calculation I would say that probably the Government in opening the reservations already existing and paying the Indians for the lands at the rate which we have been paying under the agreements negotiated with them will expend somewhere in the neighborhood of $50,000,000. That may be over or under the mark, but approximately and for the purpose of presenting this question it may be assumed as a fair statement.

Now, shall the Government pay these millions of dollars to acquire the Indian title and give away the lands to the settlers, or is it but just that if settlers require these lands they shall pay for them per acre the same which the Government pays to the Indians?

It has seemed to me, Mr. President, that there is no injustice whatever in asking a settler who may go upon the lands thus acquired from the Indians to pay for them what the Government pays the Indians. I am not satisfied that the Government has been doing the right thing in paying to the Indians the high prices which it has agreed to pay for the lands thus acquired. Of course, the Indian title is an occupancy title; it is not a title in fee. The title to these lands is in the Government of the United States, subject to whatever rights the Indians have, whether by treaty or otherwise, to hold the lands so long as they remain a tribe and occupy them. There is no question about the nature of the title. If the Indian tribe became extinguished or ceased to occupy the lands they would be Government lands and belong to the public domain.

Now, it seems to me that in negotiating with the Indians for the cession of their reservations the Government ought not to pay them what those lands are worth in fee, or indeed anything approaching it, but that they should be negotiated with upon the theory that their title is worth what the lands are worth for their occupation and without reference to the enhanced value which has come to be put upon the lands in fee on account of the settlement of the country surrounding the Indian reservations. But another policy seems to have prevailed.

Of course it goes without saying that where there is an Indian reservation all the settlers upon the public lands in the vicinity of that reservation are anxious to acquire the lands which are not needed by the Indians, and so there is a pressure that each Indian should have an allotment of lands of 160 acres, or as the case may be, and that then the remaining lands should be open for settlement. That pressure is very great. It presses upon every Indian reservation. The reservations are now within the States largely.

The State of South Dakota has, I think, something like 8,000,000 acres of land still contained in Indian reservations, and in other States and in the Territories there are other quantities of land in reservations.

Now, the pressure for the opening of this land is great. I do not think anyone who does not live in the vicinity of those reservations understands how great it is. Therefore, it is insisted that the Interior Department shall negotiate with the Indians for the opening of the reservations, and a bill passes here without any consideration at all directing that the Secretary of the Interior shall negotiate with this or that tribe of Indians for an agreement for the allotment of their lands and the ceding of their surplus lands to the United States, and a commission goes there for that purpose.

Indeed, we have a general bill which has been passed without much consideration providing that the Interior Department may send an inspector to negotiate with the Indians for the opening of the surplus lands of the reservations to settlement, and then the settlers and Senators representing the inhabitants of the States press the Interior Department to hurry up the negotiations, and a commission or an inspector is sent out to negotiate with the Indians, the result of which is that the Indians say, "Why, these lands are worth five, ten, fifteen, twenty dollars an acre. Look over there, just on the other side of our reservation, you can not buy any lands for less than that sum, and we must have what the lands are worth." Then the inspector or the commission feeling that an agreement must be made, negotiate as well as they can with the Indians, and when they get them down to the lowest price it is accepted, and an agreement is sent here to be ratified.

Now, this particular agreement comes here to be ratified upon a payment to the Indians of about $2.50 an acre for the surplus lands within their reservation which are under the agreement to be ceded to the United States and become part of the public domain. The Indians in negotiating said that was not a fair price for the lands and they were worth a great deal more, but finally the negotiation was concluded. The agreement comes here. So far as the Senate considers it, it is an agreement to open a reservation—to pass ordinarily without any particular examination or any thought of the consequences to the Government in the matter of expense. I will not go into the history of the negotiations as to these lands, but the price paid or agreed to be paid to the Indians is $2.50 an acre for the entire acreage which is to be brought under the public domain by cession to the United States.

The bill proposes that the land thus acquired shall be open to homestead settlement without requiring any payment for the land settled upon from the settler. My amendment proposes that the settler shall pay $2.50 an acre, being the same which the Government has agreed to pay to the Indians, and that thus the Government shall be reimbursed for the amount expended for the purchase.

Mr. President, this is said to be in opposition to a policy of the Government supposed to have been declared when we passed last year what was known as the free-homes bill, and that opens a large question. Before I come to that, however, I wish to say that we have already passed two bills in the Senate in which there was incorporated a provision that the settlers should pay to the Government for the land settled upon a sum equivalent to that which had been paid by the Government to the Indians for opening the reservations. The Devils Lake Reservation was one of them, at $3.50 an acre, and the other, which was passed on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] the other day, was the Red Lake Reservation, at $3.90 an acre.

The Senate has, then, in the passage of those two bills adopted the principle which I ask to have adopted on this amendment. It is but fair to say that it has passed one bill, for the opening of the Crow Creek Reservation, in which no such provision has been made. If Senators ever remember what other Senators have said they would remember that when that bill was under consideration I called attention to it, but under the circumstances I did not at that time propose such an amendment as I have proposed to the pending bill.

Now, coming to the question whether by the passage originally of the homestead act and by what has been more recently known as the free-homes bill we are bound to buy lands from the Indians for settlement and then give those lands to the settlers or not, I have some observations to make upon that subject. I can not see what obligation there is upon the Government on account either of the homestead act or the free-homes bill to continue the policy of buying lands from the Indians to give to settlers any more than to buy them from citizens of the United States to give to settlers.

I can not see why we should spend a million dollars to buy Indian land and then give it as a free gift to anybody who chose to settle upon it any more than we should spend a million dollars to buy the farms of citizens in Connecticut and South Dakota or in any other State and give those lands to people who desire to settle upon them. I can not see how in South Dakota we should buy lands from Indians on a reservation, paying a million dollars for them, and then give away those lands to settlers any more than we should pay a million dollars to people residing just off the reservation for the purchase of their farms and give the land thus acquired to people who desire to settle upon it. Neither the homestead law nor the free-homes bill commits the Government to any such policy as that.

Now, we go back to the homestead law. At the time the homestead law was passed we certainly had not been buying lands for the purpose of giving them away to settlers. Certainly that had not been the policy of the Government up to that time. We had been extinguishing Indian titles in the West at a very moderate price, sometimes as low as 5 cents an acre and even less. We had been extinguishing the Indian title until we had acquired a vast domain of public land which was then being sold.

I do not know that I can state exactly what the old laws were, but up to the time of the passage of the homestead act the Government had been selling lands or offering them for sale at a specified price, and if the price was not obtained opening them under what is called the preemption laws, allowing people to enter upon them. Up to the time of the passage of the homestead act we had certainly not been buying lands to give away. Neither did we do it under the homestead act. We had the lands. They had been acquired, not for the purpose of immediate settlement, but for the purpose of extinguishing the Indian title and holding the lands as a part of the public domain.

Then came the agitation of the proposed homestead law, and it passed. It dealt with and had reference to a great bulk of public land which we had thus acquired, which under our policy of sale had not netted the Government as much as it ought to have done, and in regard to which there had been great frauds and speculators had acquired large portions of the public domain without paying any very adequate price for them.

Then the homestead act was passed, and the lands were taken up under the homestead laws, which required a settler in order to obtain final title to his land to live upon it and cultivate it for five years or to commute it at a specified rate. That policy was continued from 1862 up to 1880. I do not think that during all that time it can be said that any lands were bought of the Indians for the purpose of immediate settlement.

But in 1880 there were a large number of Indians roaming over the State of Colorado. The bands of the Confederated Ute Indians were occupying very large portions of the State and negotiations were had with those Indians by which they agreed, without going into particulars, to surrender their claim—their title to lands in the State of Colorado—and to remove southward into Utah and elsewhere, under an act of Congress, by the terms of which the lands thus surrendered by the Indians should be sold and the Indians paid for them at the rate of $1.25 an acre, and that the settlers, when they took the lands, should pay $1.25 an acre to the Government.

That, to my mind, changed the policy of the Government, and we adopted a new policy; that is, that when we bought lands from the Indians and opened them to settlement, we would require the settlers to pay the Government for them as much as the Government had paid to the Indians. Colorado has been settled under that act, and the settlers have paid $1.25 an acre for the land, and that money has been passed over to the Confederated bands of Ute Indians. That policy continued up to the time of the opening of public lands in Oklahoma and in South Dakota. We went forward, and we paid the Indians large prices for their lands.

It will be remembered that as to the Cherokee Strip, we paid, I think, an average of $6 an acre for those lands; and for lands occupied by Indian tribes in Oklahoma we paid all the way from $1.25 to $2.50 and even $3 an acre.

In the act which opened those lands to settlement there was a provision that the settlers should pay to the Government a certain price per acre, which was enough to reimburse the Government. That went on in South Dakota and in other places, and wherever land was purchased from the Indians it was required in the act which opened the land for settlement that the settlers should pay enough to reimburse the Government.

Senators will remember the agitation which arose for the remission to the settlers of the money which they had agreed to pay in settling upon these lands in Oklahoma. The question arose first in Oklahoma. It was put upon the ground, not so much that the Government ought to buy lands from the Indians, and then give them away, as upon the ground that these lands belonged to the subarid region, and that it was impossible for the settlers upon them to make off of the farms, upon which they had thus settled, money enough to meet their obligations to the Government. Senators will remember the maps which were brought in here, on which the arid and subarid regions were pictured, to show where the settlers had gone. The demand that the obligation should be released in Oklahoma was taken up in South Dakota, so as to embrace all the lands as to which this policy had prevailed, of requiring payment from the settlers to reimburse the Government. As in various other cases where great pressure is raised, that bill was passed. The people interested in it got it into the platforms of both political parties, where, of course, very little was known as to the effect of it, and the bill finally went through the Senate.

Shortly after the bill passed the Senate there came a change in the estimate of the value which was placed on these lands. I think I am not mistaken in saying that within a year after the free-homes bill passed the school-fund commissioner of Oklahoma made a report in which he said the average value of the land belonging to the school fund in Oklahoma was $30 an acre.

We have been told that on account of the subarid conditions it was impossible for the farmers or settlers upon these lands ever to discharge their debt to the Government, and the time of payment has been extended and extended year after year because they could not meet their payments. But immediately after we passed the bill they began to boast of the value of their lands.

Very soon after the passage of the free-homes bill, indeed, at the time of its passage, there was an act providing for the opening of the Wichita Reservation, and in that act, as in the other acts we have passed, there was a provision that the settler should pay for the lands he took, so as to reimburse the Government. Those lands had not been opened at the time of the passage of the free-homes bill, and so that bill did not apply to them; the settlers were not released from the obligation to pay a dollar and a quarter an acre for those lands, and that law stands. Those lands in the Wichita Reservation have not been taken up under the act requiring the settlers to pay $1.25 an acre for the lands settled upon.

I think, Mr. President, that is true with regard to the opening of the Kiowa and Comanche Reservation. It will be remembered that there was such a rush for those lands that the question had to be determined by lottery, and that, I imagine, will be the case with reference to the lands referred to in this bill. There will have to be some method to determine as to how the settlers shall take the lands.

When we opened the Colville Reservation, if I am not mistaken, we required the same policy to be pursued; that is, that the settlers should pay for the lands.

So, since the passage of the free-homes bill up to the time of the passage through the Senate of the Crow Creek Reservation bill, we have been insisting that the settler should pay a sum sufficient to reimburse the Government for the land he takes. As I said before, I see nothing inconsistent with either the policy of the homestead law or the policy of the free-homes act in that respect. It is true that the question of free homes was talked about at the time of the passage of that bill; but that was not a bill to buy land of the Indians at full prices and then give the lands away to settlers. It was to release the settlers from their obligation to pay the Government what they had agreed to pay in taking up the lands. It was put, in the first instance, upon the ground of their inability to pay the amount. So that this comes up as a new question. It has got to be settled now, and as it is settled now it will probably remain the policy of the country.

We gave away to the people who had settled upon Government lands, under an understanding and agreement that they were to pay for them, a good many million dollars—say $20,000,000—and it has been stated to be a larger sum than that. I put it within bounds when I say that we released to them $20,000,000. If that was right—if the settlers were entitled to free homes without paying the Government for the land what the Government had paid to the Indians—we ought not to stop there, but we ought to refund to the people who have settled Colorado a dollar and a quarter an acre; we ought to refund to the people who have settled the Wichita Reservation their dollar and a quarter an acre, and wherever at any time we have required that settlers should pay for the lands thus opened we ought to refund to them the price paid. It is just as much our duty to do that as it was our duty to release from their obligations those who had made agreements with the Government. We should make no distinction, as it seems to me. But that is neither here nor there. The question is, What are we going to do in the future?

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. I came into the Senate Chamber while the Senator was speaking, and he may have referred earlier in his remarks to the point concerning which I should ask him a question. I ask the Senator if there has been any estimate of the number of acres in the reservations yet to be acquired from the Indians in this country which will probably call for a determination of this question of policy, whether we shall continue to do what we have done, or stop?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I said in the opening that I had not any accurate figures, but I thought it was safe to say that we had still remaining Indian reservations, which were in the near future to be opened to settlement, which would cost the Government in the neighborhood of $50,000,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. How much did the Senator say?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Fifty million dollars. I should like the opinion of the Senator from Missouri on that. I am not speaking accurately.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have been looking for the exact data, but I have not been able to arrive at the precise sum. It is, however, a large sum—many millions.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Take the State of South Dakota. We are paying her $2.50 an acre for these lands, and they have remaining something like 8,000,000 acres. That is $20,000,000 by itself. If we continue to open up lands at the same rate and we continue paying to the Indians for these lands, it is a question of $20,000,000 for the State of South Dakota; and I think that, running through my mind other reservations, I am entirely within the limits when I say that if we go on paying the Indians at the rate we have been paying them for their title, the Government will expend in the very near future at least $50,000,000.

Mr. President, there is really no necessity for this. It will be observed that the taking up of these lands, thus purchased from the Indians and thrown open to settlement, has become very much of a lottery. There is a rush for them, with the "devil take the hindmost." The opening of the Oklahoma Reservation, the Cherokee Reservation, was not so long ago but that the circumstances attending it are in the recollection of Senators. People camped for months on the borders of that reservation, and we were required to send troops down there to prevent the people going in until the time came for the President's proclamation, when they could go in, and then there was a mad rush to get the best lands, with the usual result of a whole crop of claims of fraud in getting upon those lands. Then came the opening of the Kiowa and Comanche Reservation only last year, where similar scenes would have been enacted if it had not been that the Government established a kind of lottery there, and the applicants drew lots as to who should have the first opportunity to make settlement.

So the settlement upon those lands, thus acquired from the Indians, has come to be largely professional. The first push for them is by people who think they are going to make something and get something for nothing. So that in the settlement of these lands it has come to be well known that there are three classes of settlers upon the public lands, first, the professionals, who rush in and through their smartness acquire valuable holdings, with the intention of disposing of them just as soon as they can; second, the people who remain behind, who do not get in at the first rush, and who buy from the speculators and the professional settlers who get in in the first rush. They may be called the middlemen. Finally the land is sold to the real settler, who goes there to make a home and get a living off the farm. Am I not right about that?

Mr. President, why should this be? Why should we buy land from the Indian, giving him practically the value of his land, as if he held it in fee simple, then open it to settlement under the homestead law, and give it to the man who can first get onto it, any more than we should buy land from the citizen adjoining the reservation for the same purpose? I do not know but that I have said all I desire or need to say upon this subject. I wished to place the matter clearly before the Senate as it seemed to me. Certainly we have got to do one of two things. We either must, I think, having the interest of the Government in view, stop paying these high prices to the Indians for their land, or we must require the settlers to reimburse the Government.

In regard to that subject, there is a sentiment in the country which holds amongst philanthropists and humanitarians that we ought to pay the Indians what their land is worth at the present time, upon the idea that it belongs to them. I do not share in that idea. I think that when we make an Indian tribe rich we delay its civilization. The easiest Indians in the country to civilize are the blanket Indians, and they have no money, no funds, no lands, no annuities. The Indians in this country who make the most rapid advance toward civilization and citizenship are the Indians who have not any great funds to their credit in the Treasury. The hardest Indians to civilize or to start on the road to advancement to civilization are those who have the largest funds in the Treasury to their credit.

I might illustrate by the Osages, whose fund is the largest per capita of any Indian fund—indeed, the Osage nation is per capita the richest community in the world if their lands and their funds were to be divided among them per capita. It is and has always been utterly impossible to break up their tribal customs or to change their tribal habits or to get them to cultivate the land to any extent. They simply regard themselves as rich people who are under no obligation to work. I remember, when visiting their reservation at one time, I said to one of them, through an interpreter—a very intelligent Indian, I thought—"Why do not you Indians take up these lands in small holdings, cultivate them, raise wheat, corn, and vegetables, have some stock, and farm the lands as men in my country farm?" "Why," he replied to me through the interpreter, with an air of superiority, "sir, do your rich men work?"

So, if not impossible, it is almost impossible, to change the habits and customs of the Indians if they have large funds from which they can draw annuities.

I do not want to extend these remarks on the Indian policy in the discussion of this bill; but, as I said, either one or the other policy I have indicated ought to be pursued. We ought not to recognize the fact in dealing with the Indian for the opening of his reservation that he can claim that the land which he cedes to the Government should be paid for at its full value, or we ought to require that, if we are obliged to pay, and do pay, full value or what approximates full value for the land, the Government should be reimbursed.

There is another feature of this case which I wish to present, and which I think should commend itself to the Senators from South Dakota. We have passed here an irrigation bill, and passed it unanimously in the Senate. Its friends—and I think we are all its friends—desire that it shall prevail in the other House; but whether it does or not at this session of Congress, it is apparent that in the near future the Government is to take the money derived from the sale of public lands and apply it to irrigation purposes. But the Government lands from which money can be derived to be applied to irrigation purposes are pretty much gone. It is the lands which are to be acquired by the opening of these Indian reservations upon which our irrigation friends must rest for their hope that they will acquire any large money from the Government lands for irrigation purposes.

If we make the settlers reimburse the Government for what it has paid the Indians for their lands, what is the result? The Government is going to get back the money, to be sure, but it is going to take it immediately and hand it over for the purposes of irrigation. I do not know how it is in South Dakota, but I think South Dakota is one of the irrigation States in which it is proposed to take the money which is derived from the sale of the public lands and apply it to that purpose. I think this view of the subject should commend itself to those Senators who wish to commence and to extend the irrigation of the arid lands. I think the necessity of enriching those arid lands by irrigation is just as great, to say the least, as the necessity of opening lands not needed to be irrigated to free settlement.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, it seems to me there is only one thing to do in this case. When the free-homes bill was passed, it set a precedent which I think we are almost bound in honor to follow. I had the honor to be the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands when the free-homes bill was being pressed. I was opposed to it, and I was opposed to it to such an extent that the Senators interested took it out of the charge of the Committee on Public Lands and passed the bill through the Committee on Indian Affairs, where it did not belong. Some Senators, as you know, were very much interested in it.

I was opposed to the free-homes bill unless it should be applied to future reservations as much as to those which had already been opened; and that was, I think, a perfectly logical and sound position. Now we are again confronted with the question, and we shall be confronted with it every time we open an Indian reservation. The argument in favor of the free-homes bill seemed to be sufficiently sound. At any rate, it convinced both branches of Congress, and the bill was passed.

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] speaks about the settlers reimbursing the Government. The reason the free-homes bill was passed was that the settlers could not reimburse the Government. A commission is sent out, for instance, to conduct negotiations with a tribe of Indians for the relinquishment of certain of their lands on the reservation. All the settlers near by, and more especially if there is a town adjacent, are exceedingly anxious that a treaty shall be made. The Indians understand this perfectly well, and they put a price on their land which is far beyond what it is worth to anybody. Here is this pressure from all sides, from the settlers, naturally enough, to have these lands opened, thinking that it is going to build up the country at once, and they urge the commissioners to make any trade they can. After four or five conferences the commissioners make an agreement with the Indians and bind the Government to pay them more for the land than it is worth. In the past the settlers have gone in and taken all these lands and found out that they could not pay for them. Every Senator here from the middle West is old enough to know that when a man goes upon public land and reclaims it it costs him sufficient money without paying anything in addition for the land. It is a very hard matter to reclaim wild lands, whether they are timber lands or sagebrush lands. It requires a sufficient expenditure without anything added.

We have an illustration in my State, and I thought the Senator from Connecticut was going to mention it. When the free-homes bill was passed, at the same session, but a little later, we opened up a reservation in Idaho—the Fort Hall Reservation—a large section adjacent to a town of five or six thousand people. I recollect going down and addressing the Indians myself.

Mr. SPOONER. In what language?

Mr. DUBOIS. In their native language—through an interpreter. [Laughter.]

We were very anxious to have these lands opened up adjacent to this town of five or six thousand people. The town is the center of the Indian reservation. The commissioners made an agreement with those Indians by which they were to pay $15.75 an acre for some of their lands. They were to pay $10 an acre for land lying along a water course, $5 an acre for perpetual water rights, and 75 cents annually for maintenance charges. The people will not take up that land. The proclamation opening the reservation will be issued in a month probably, and I know very well what will happen. The people, just as soon as they have taken the land, will appeal to Senators and Representatives in Congress to have the free-homes act applied to them; and that will be the case in almost all of these reservations.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. DUBOIS. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Does the Senator think we ought to go so far as that—when we open up irrigable land and require the settlers to pay for the improvement and irrigating the land we ought then to refund that money to the settlers?

Mr. DUBOIS. No; I do not go so far as that. I think in that case a fair price should be fixed or the land sold to the highest bidder. For the other lands in this reservation, which are entirely outside of it, we have to pay $3.75 an acre; but the Government had already built this canal; it is Government property, and the Government owns it. In the States of Wisconsin, Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa the public lands were given to the settlers.

Mr. SPOONER. The Government owned those lands.

Mr. DUBOIS. The Government owned those lands, and they were given to the settlers under the then existing land laws. You put the Indians on large tracts of lands in the Western States, and in our country, which we are now trying to settle up, you segregated large sections of land and put Indians on them. They got about as good lands as there were out there. And there is no reason—and this point was thrashed over and was the cause of the passage of the free-homes bill—why our people should not have these lands from the Government the same as the older States had their public lands.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator, but I think he will agree with me that lands in Illinois and Indiana and Ohio——

Mr. COCKRELL. And Missouri.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Were not taken up under the homestead law. They were taken up under the preemption laws and paid for.

Mr. DUBOIS. I do not care how they were taken up. This proposition is to have the lands taken up under the homestead law, which is one of our public land laws. The lands in Missouri, Illinois, and so on, were taken up under the then existing land laws. I thoroughly agree with the Senator from Connecticut that we are paying too much for these Indian lands, and I am willing to go with him and adopt a policy of paying for the Indian lands what they are worth on a fair appraisement and paying no more for them, and not pay a fictitious price set by the Indians on account of the pressure from white men on the outside, and then turning these lands over to settlement under the homestead act. But I am very much opposed to making the settlers reimburse the Government for what it pays for the Indian lands, knowing as well as the Senator from Connecticut does that in every instance almost the commissioners appointed by the Government have fixed too large a price, and knowing, as we from the West do know from experience, that our settlers can not reclaim these lands and pay this price for them.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, there are many embarrassments arising from the unfortunate policy adopted in the early days in the treatment of the Indians. It was assumed that they were different from other human beings and that they would not work. That was not assumed in Mexico or South America, and the result there has been that the Indians constitute probably four-fifths at least, and perhaps nine-tenths, of the population; and they are good, honest, working people, and they have improved. It has not been assumed, either, in British Columbia. I was there a few years ago, and in Victoria I found the Indians of the same tribe that I had found on this side taking contracts, etc. It is a mistake to believe that they will not do under like circumstances as other human beings will do. We commenced with the system of buying them off, of feeding them, of nursing them, of assuming that they would continue to be the wards of the country.

At an early day Chief Justice Marshall held that it was the policy of all European countries to disregard the title of the natives, and that discovery gave title to the country which made the discovery. It was said that the governments of Europe had title to the land and were not under the obligation of recognizing the native title, and it was not recognized in Spanish-American countries. It was disregarded, and the Indians were treated like other human beings who were poor and dependent and had to work for a living.

Wherever they have been thus treated the Indians have developed a great capacity for improvement. In my State I saw something of them before I came here, and I opposed reservations. I opposed the feeding of them. I claimed that the Indians were better off if let alone, and we find that is true. They are scattered all over the State in little camps. We find them at work and improving, and they are superior to other Indians. They are different Indians. Of course they are. They are very much superior. You can distinguish them at once from Indians who have been on a reservation. The reservation Indian has not developed at all. Go to the school at Carson, and you can very readily pick out the Indians who come from reservations from those who have been on farms and at work and let alone.

If we had adopted that policy in the beginning we would have had three or four or perhaps ten or fifteen million good Indians. Take human beings, particularly before they have been developed by civilization, and feed them, supply their wants, and they will not exert themselves to supply their needs. I remarked once of the people of this city that if they were surrounded by an army and could not go out of Washington for a couple of generations and were fed and nursed and cared for they would come pretty nearly down to the level of the ordinary Indian; that they would degenerate very rapidly. That is the way we have been treating the Indians.

Now, by Executive order a very large portion of the West has been reserved. We are attempting to open those reservations. Let me tell the Senate some of the difficulties we meet with. There are a lot of leases out. The men who want land for that purpose stand between us and negotiations—ranchers and such. There are men putting up a fancy price on the Government. There are speculators with the Indians. The Indians see the price of land adjoining theirs, where farms are, selling at a certain price, and they ask the same price, and they will always demand that price. Why should they not? They are fed anyhow; they are independent; they do not have to work for a living; they are in comfortable circumstances, and they can wait.

If the lands can be leased and they get the proceeds, while the Government is feeding and educating them, they are not under the common necessity to become civilized. If we continue the policy of letting the Indians fix a fancy price on these lands and we buy them and give them away we shall involve the Government not in $50,000,000, but in more than $100,000,000.

The question is whether that is wise policy. The Committee on Indian Affairs have been discussing it during the whole session. They have been discussing the question—what could be done under those circumstances; how far we are bound by the possessory title of the Indian to submit to his terms; whether the Government, having agreed to take care of the Indians, having some right to regulate the contributions it makes and the price it shall pay for the land——

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Nevada allow me?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. I desire to ask the Senator from Nevada if it be not true that the Indians have possessory title?

Mr. STEWART. No; not in the sense in which that term is used by the Senator from Wisconsin—possessory title which would give him affirmative rights. If a white man was in his position, going on and off the reservation when he pleases, would he get possessory title to 160 acres of land? The Indian is simply a wanderer.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Indian has not possessory title or the right of occupancy, which is the same thing, he has nothing to sell to the Government, has he?

Mr. STEWART. Oh, a sentimental right.

Mr. SPOONER. A sentimental right?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; and we pay a large amount of money for it. He has no other right but a sentimental right. He does not occupy the land. He goes off of it. He will not stay on the reservation. He does not occupy it at all. He does not have a possessory right in the sense of getting a possessory right to land by occupying it. He has not fenced it in. He has made no improvements. He goes there occasionally when he wants to and when he does not he stays away. That does not give a possessory right to the land in any legitimate sense. He has a sentimental right. It has been decided that the Indians have no title to the land.

We treat them as if they were our wards, and, I say, treating them as our wards and recognizing the fact that they may roam over this piece of land as long as it is not wanted for any other purpose, and having fed them and taken care of them as wards, never having sold them the land, never having given title but the sentimental title, to say we must pay them their price before we shall open the reservation, is going a long way toward barbarism.

Mr. SPOONER. How did the Indian get the right of occupancy?

Mr. STEWART. He never had it. He does not live on the land. It is only the sentimental right of which I have spoken. He gets that right in Philadelphia. He gets it from the Indian Rights Association, which has pauperized him. Those associations have killed more Indians than ever were killed by the sword, by feeding them and pauperizing and allowing them to become indolent and diseased and to perish from the face of the earth. The great murderers of the Indians are the Indian Rights Associations, I say, because if the Indians had been let alone there would have been millions of them. But you can not support a community and feed them and still have them independent. They are dependent upon you for food, and therefore they will not work.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to be permitted to ask a question of the Senator from Nevada, who knows a great deal about this subject, as he does about almost all subjects. I do not want to vote to pay to anybody for nothing money belonging to the people, and if the Indians have nothing to sell I hardly think it is right, in the faithful discharge of duty to the people, to appropriate money received from taxation to buy it of them. I have always supposed if I had a right to occupy a farm as long as I lived or until I surrendered the right, that that right existed whether I lived on the farm or not.

Mr. STEWART. That is too technical for this purpose. It will not apply at all.

Mr. SPOONER. I am asking for information.

Mr. STEWART. I will give you the information if you will let me talk.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. I admit that they have a sentimental right, and that is the only right they have to the land. It was decided in the beginning that they had no title to the land. We undertook to take care of them, to make them our wards. They were permitted to occupy so much land. We did not give them title, and they ought not to hold it and they have not any right to hold it longer than is for their benefit. We have been educating them. We have supplied schools for them. We have supplied places where they can learn trades, and all that. We are trying to develop them into responsible human beings; and the great drawback is, as the Senator from Connecticut said, that they have money and they are rich and will not work. It is the money which is demoralizing them. There never was a dollar of money given to a hearty Indian that did not do him harm under any circumstances. There never was a time that it did not take from him part of his manhood and degrade them. Anyone can see the difference between those who have been degraded by being fed and those in the North and South who have not been fed. See how superior they are. That is the situation.

But this policy has been established, and we can not destroy it at once. I do not propose to do anything radical. I am in a responsible position as chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs. I will not disturb a condition of things that has grown up and been established, but in dealing with this subject we ought to consider what is for the benefit of the Indians and not let them dictate our policy; not let them say, "We must have so much for this land or we will not sell it," when at the same time the Government is feeding his children and educating them.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAIRBANKS in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Have we not had treaties with the Indians for two hundred years by which for certain considerations they have assigned to us as white people their title, whatever it might be, sentimental or otherwise? Does the Senator suppose we are going to change that policy now——

Mr. STEWART. No.

Mr. TILLMAN. And go to war with the remnants who are living——

Mr. STEWART. No.

Mr. TILLMAN. In order to finish up the job of murdering——

Mr. STEWART. No.

Mr. TILLMAN. And killing them all in order to get what little land is left?

Mr. STEWART. No.

Mr. TILLMAN. What does the Senator propose?

Mr. STEWART. I was speaking of the reservations in the West.

Mr. TILLMAN. Are not they there in consequence of treaties made by the Indians with the Government?

Mr. STEWART. Very few of them are of that kind.

Mr. TILLMAN. Whence has come the practice of buying the lands and giving the Indians the money or setting it apart here in the Treasury and using it to educate the Indians and build houses and do different things of that kind? Whence did the authority come?

Mr. STEWART. Congress assumed the authority.

Mr. TILLMAN. Congress assumed authority, under the Constitution or unwritten laws, which are just as binding.

Mr. STEWART. Unwritten laws can not be enforced against the Indians.

Mr. TILLMAN. I believe the Senator has disclosed here that old Western feeling, that there is no good Indian but a dead Indian.

Mr. STEWART. I beg your pardon. I have been a friend of the Indian always. Go to my State where the Indians are. They come to me as soon as I get there. They tell me their troubles, and I have been their friend; and I can say that our Indians are superior to those of any other Western State, because they have not been fed and kept in idleness. We have taught them something of the lesson that they must work.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is it not because your State is so much of a desert that no white man wants to get in there at all and it is a wonder that Indians can live there?

Mr. STEWART. No; it is not that. We pick our white men.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am not casting any reflection upon the Senator or the citizens of Nevada. It would be against the rules to do that. I am merely asking the Senator for information.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I wish to suggest, in all good nature, that the Senator from South Carolina is violating a rule of the Senate in speaking disrespectfully of a State.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have been thinking some one would draw that rule on me. I saw it torn to tatters by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW], and nobody seemed to care about it; and I have seen it torn into tatters a half a dozen times since, and I did not think anyone would spring it on me.

Mr. STEWART. Nevada always receives such suggestions with indifference, because Nevada always considers the source, no matter what State it comes from. It is a matter of envy. We understand that.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Nevada allow me to apologize to Nevada for having even suggested that its arid condition and its heat and its sand and other undesirable qualities alone are responsible. I have great respect for Nevada.

Mr. STEWART. I will allow the Senator to apologize for his gross mistake in regard to Nevada. Nevada has numerous agricultural valleys which will compare favorably with any on earth. It has great agricultural capacity. She is situated away from the market. Ultimately, as the country develops, she will support a large agricultural population.

With respect to mineral resources, I do not think Nevada is equaled in the United States. We labored under disadvantages for a while. The Comstock gave out practically; silver was demonetized, and our people were engaged in silver mining, and did not take to other business very readily. It took some time. Besides, there was in San Francisco a board of stockbrokers who told people there was nothing in Nevada but the Comstock. The Californians kept away. We worked under great disadvantages for years.

I am happy to inform the Senator, and also the Senate, that within the last eighteen months there have been important mineral discoveries made in nearly every county in my State, and some of the richest mines ever known have been discovered. It is not confined to gold or silver or copper or lead, but it contains all the minerals. It is a great mineral State and is forging to the front very rapidly, and instead of sneering at Nevada he will find the people of South Carolina emigrating there very rapidly in the near future. There is no doubt about that. People are coming there from every State in the Union. Nevada will be the pride of the Union. She has produced, it is estimated, about eight hundred millions of gold and silver with her small population. I am glad to have this opportunity to speak for Nevada. It has been reported by the agents that Nevada has the best Indians of any State in the Union, and it is because her people have allowed them to be industrious and have not fed them. They have not been panperized.

The question is presented right squarely here, Shall these millions of acres of land which have been withdrawn—because they have all been withdrawn without any treaties—for the temporary occupancy of the Indians, whom we are feeding, remain shut up from population, and the people be taxed to feed the Indians in idleness, or shall we make reasonable arrangements with them? Shall we take care of them as intelligent people shall? Shall we reduce the sentimental right they have to a practical right? The Indians do not need the lands. Why should two or three hundred Indians have four or five million acres of land which they do not cultivate, which they do not utilize, when there are white people around who want homes? Those same white people, poor as they are, are taxed to feed the same Indians. Why not utilize the land which the Indians have? Why not let civilization have some show and not allow sentiment and prejudice and folly and bribery of the Indians to pauperize them? That has been the policy too long.

I shall not do any act or cast any vote against the policy of the Senate. As a Senator I shall go with the policy of the Senate. If it is the policy of the Senate to tie up these lands until the Indians shall consent to sell them at an enormous price, and in the meantime we shall continue to educate the Indian children; if we are to treat the Indians as our wards, while not exercising any of the power of a guardian over them, but upon the other hand allow the ward to dictate to the guardian, I will be governed by the policy. The policy of allowing the Indians to put a fictitious price upon lands valuable to the surrounding whites and which the Indians will not occupy, when they are merely put there temporarily, while the Government is the guardian and takes care of them, will result in much evil and much embarrassment. Much fraud and embarrassment exist now.

I wish to call attention to one point. These lands ought to be opened. There is no doubt about that. In the condition in which the Indians had them, and if it had not been for the labor of the whites, they would not be worth 5 cents an acre. I think we are paying a pretty large price for these lands. We have passed one or two bills in which I thought the price fixed was reasonable. The one in Montana was very reasonable, and the North Dakota Senators have had some rich lands there, and they consented to an arrangement. If the Government pays this price for the land and gets nothing back, it is simply one of the hardships. There are plenty of other cases. There are millions of acres of land in this situation. You have to meet it. As the Senator from Connecticut says, there is a great question involved, and it should be met soberly. Think about it and get at it and do right. Do nothing to offend the Indians. Do nothing that will violate any right.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, it seems to me that this discussion has drifted somewhat from the real subject-matter under consideration. There is no use in discussing the past policy with reference to the Indian question. We are confronted with a condition. The Indians hold their reservations under treaties, and there is not any use in beating about the bush. We are met primarily by the proposition, Can the Indians dictate the price which the Government shall pay for the reservations? If they can, then it is idle to say that we pay too much or that we ought not to pay what they demand. They are either in a position, owing to their title under the treaties, to demand a price or they are not; and there is no halfway ground with reference to these treaty rights.

Mr. President, the people of the United States must gradually absorb these reservations for two reasons. In the first place, it must be done for the benefit of the Indian himself, for it is demonstrated by experience that the more rapidly the Indians are separated the better it is for the Indians. Then civilization demands that the reservations shall be gradually absorbed. So I say we have to contemplate the acquisition of these reservations, and the Senate is not ready, nor is the House ready, nor is public opinion yet ready, whatever may be the abstract right of the Indians, to ignore that right and say that we may proceed upon our own motion to acquire the reservations. It seems to me that that absolutely disposes of the question, not only with reference to this treaty, but other treaties, whether we pay too much for the lands or not. In each case the question must present itself whether the interest of the Indians and the interest of the people warrant the price paid; or, in other words, warrant the opening of the reservation.

Now, when we come to the disposition of the lands thus acquired, it seems to me that we do not stand at the threshold of the adoption of a policy and that no question of policy is concerned, for the reason that in every one of these reservations the value of the land depends upon the surrounding circumstances. It was only last week, I think, that we secured the ratification of a treaty with Indians in northern Minnesota, where we most gladly permitted a price to be put upon the land in its sale to settlers, because that reservation was surrounded by a settled community and the land had a value beyond ordinary public land. The land itself was valuable in its own character.

There may be another reservation entirely separate and distinct where the land around it has not been taken, where settlement has not given the land in the reservation a value, or where the character of the reservation itself is such that it does not possess inherently any value.

So it seems to me, Mr. President, it is not the adoption of a policy and it has no reference to the free-homestead policy whatever, but it is a simple proposition whether as to this reservation or that reservation we should make the land free or whether we should put a price upon it. It seems to me that as to this reservation, in view of the situation of the land, in view of the want of settlement around it, in view of the want of value in the land itself, it would be a mistake to place a price upon the land, and therefore we should put the land upon the free list independent of and without any reference to any policy whatever. The opening of each reservation should stand upon its own merits and be determined by the conditions and circumstances which surround it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I desire to ask the Senator from Minnesota a question just for information. I know nothing about the merits of this bill. I was merely paying attention largely to the general subject of Indian reservations as brought out by the Senator from Connecticut. I happened to be in Oklahomas in the past year, and I found some Indian reservations still existing there, the farm lands on all sides of them now occupied by white people, and given to those white people under the homestead act, worth from $15 to $40 an acre.

It seems to me it would be rather queer that we should buy those remaining reservations in the future at some arbitrary price, much below the selling price of lands immediately adjoining, and then give them away, because how are we to give them away without making favorites of somebody? When the Kiowa Indian Reservation, in the western part of Oklahoma, was opened last year to settlement under the homestead act all will recall that there were, I think, 16,000 allotments, and about 100,000 applicants for the 16,000, and the only way to determine as to who should have them was a sort of wheel of fortune or a drawing. What right had anyone to authorize that those lands should be drawn for? In other words, what fairness was there in it to home seekers to thus dispose of the land?

This is rather a long question; it is something of an argument also; but if the Senator can give us any idea in regard to the special bill that is now pending and the value of the surrounding lands we can better determine—at least I would be better satisfied to vote on the proposition—as to what we shall do.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator asks two questions. One is as to the wisdom or authority of the method employed in opening the reservation as it was opened with a system of drawing lots. That is a matter I know very little about. It occurred before I was on earth, figuratively speaking.

The other question is along the line of what I was urging, that each instance should be determined by its own surroundings. If there is a reservation here and the land around the reservation is valuable, and the land in the reservation itself is valuable, then it is a mistake to make that land free. On the other hand, if there is a reservation and the land around it is not valuable and the land in the reservation itself is not valuable there is no reason why the settlement of that reservation and that section of the State should be retarded by placing a price on the land simply because some other reservation is surrounded by valuable land and is itself valuable.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him right there if he has ever known of any Indian reservation which was sought to be opened or purchased and the title of the Indians vested in the Government, so that it could either sell or homestead it, that was not valuable? In other words, do we not allow the Indians to live on the lands that are not valuable without any disturbance, and is it not those alone which are sought for homes or for minerals that we are trying to buy from the Indians?

Mr. CLAPP. Not necessarily. Here is this reservation in South Dakota. Of course the Senators from South Dakota can speak more specifically of the character of the reservation and its surroundings than I can; but because we have to pay the Indians a certain amount for that reservation, as a matter of progressive Indian policy, for the purpose of separating the Indians and extinguishing the reservation or for the purpose of meeting the advancing demands of civilization for the use of the lands, it does not follow that the land is primarily and inherently worth so much an acre. Another reservation may be valuable, as I stated in my earlier remarks, where we very gladly accord in the bill a provision that the land should be sold at the very price that the Government paid for it, because the surrounding land is settled and the land within the reservation is valuable. Now, because the Government feels that it is necessary under existing treaties to treat with this tribe and pay them something, that does not in itself involve a proposition that the land is primarily valuable by any means.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator tell us where this special Indian reservation lies?

Mr. CLAPP. The one under consideration?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLAPP. It is in South Dakota.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is it east or west of the ninety-ninth meridian?

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE] can tell the Senator.

Mr. GAMBLE. It is west, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. TILLMAN. How far west?

Mr. GAMBLE. It is in the southern part of the State, west of the Missouri River. The reservation proposed to be opened is bounded on the west by the existing Rosebud Indian Reservation and also on the north. On the east it is partially settled. The balance of it is bounded on the east by the Missouri River.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is it not splendid grazing land?

Mr. GAMBLE. It is fair land. I think the price agreed to be paid by the Government of $2.50 per acre is a fair consideration for the land.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator allow me to give him a little information about this land?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly, I will be glad to have information from any source.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. In the departmental letter signed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs the following appears:

> Respecting the terms of the cession, Inspector McLaughlin states in his report that he was greatly handicapped in the beginning by the fact that most of the Indians who favored a cession at all held the lands at an enormous price—from $7 to $15 per acre; that only a very few expressed their willingness to accept as low as $5 per acre, and this in cash and all in one payment; that upon his arrival all the white men connected with the agency, as well as those of the surrounding country with whom he talked, held the lands in question as worth $5 per acre; that it appeared that adjacent lands in Gregory County and in Hoyt County, Nebr., were selling at from $5 to $10 per acre; that a syndicate of cattlemen in Sioux City, Iowa, expressed its willingness to pay $5 per acre for the entire tract, and that these current rumors and fictitious values placed upon the lands which were circulated among the Indians exercised them very much and had to be overcome by reasoning, which required time and a great amount of patience.

Mr. CLAPP. What I was arguing against was more the idea of a cut-and-dried fixed policy without any flexibility. What I was trying to urge was that each one of these treaties should stand upon its own merits. From what I know of that country I believe that the demands are such as to warrant throwing this land open for free homes, but as to the details, the value of the reservation and its surroundings, of course the Senators from South Dakota are better able to speak than I am.

Mr. DUBOIS. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Minnesota, who is a member of the committee as well as myself, that after a number of years of trial we finally released all of the settlers from paying what they had agreed to pay. They entered into a definite contract with the Government to pay a specified amount for land, and notwithstanding that fact Congress released them from the payment of the money and the agreement they had entered into. While I am very much in favor of this bill because it has the homestead act in it, I do not think we ought to have a flexible arrangement. Congress ought to determine on something definite.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, how are we going to determine, where the conditions are so various as they are? In the very case that was passed here last week there is absolutely no comparison in value between that land and the land involved in this case. I know that from what little I know of the situation, although I do not profess to know of it as the Senator from South Dakota.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I ask the Senate to agree to go on with this discussion to-morrow morning after the routine business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that the South Dakota reservation bill may be considered to-morrow morning after the routine business. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, returning to the Senate, in accordance with its request, the bill (S. 312) providing that the circuit court of appeals of the eighth judicial circuit of the United States shall hold at least one term of said court annually in the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado, or in the city of Cheyenne, in the State of Wyoming, on the first Monday in September in each year.

Mr. CLAPP. I move to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. I offer the amendments which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "year," in section 1, line 8, it is proposed to insert:

And is hereby authorized and required to hold one term of said court annually in the city of St. Paul and State of Minnesota on the first Monday in June of each year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "provided for," in line 6, page 2, it is proposed to insert:

So to be held either at the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado, or at the city of Cheyenne, in the State of Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill providing that the circuit court of appeals of the eighth judicial circuit of the United States shall hold at least one term of said court annually in the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado, or in the city of Cheyenne, in the State of Wyoming, on the first Monday in September in each year, and at the city of St. Paul, in the State of Minnesota, on the first Monday in June in each year."

CHINESE EXCLUSION.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It will be remembered that the Senate acted on the bill (S. 2960) to prohibit the coming into and to regulate the residence within the United States, its Territories, and all possessions and all territory under its jurisdiction, and the District of Columbia, of Chinese persons and persons of Chinese descent. That bill was finally amended by the substitute which I offered, and then we took up the House bill and incorporated the language of the substitute into that bill. The Senate bill still remains in charge of the Secretary, and I move that it be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2295) temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Are there any amendments pending?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are no amendments pending. Some amendments offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] have been printed and laid on the table.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I have been informed by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] that he desires to discuss this bill before it comes to a vote. I ask that it be in some way laid over or postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. LODGE. It is impossible to lay over the bill from day to day without any action upon it. There are abundance of amendments here to consider. There have been a large number of amendments offered to the bill. It seems to me that we ought to go on with the bill and not put it over from day to day without either debating it or acting upon it in any way. I do not desire to cut off any Senator who wishes to discuss the bill, but on a measure of this importance I think we are entitled either to vote or debate or to have a time fixed for voting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is but one thing for the Chair to do.

Mr. PETTUS. The senior Senator from Massachusetts has been compelled to go home on most important business, not of his own, but concerning the welfare of one of the great institutions there and concerning matters of vast importance to that institution. I know that he desires to debate this bill. He will be back, as I am informed, in a short time, but I do not know the exact time. For that reason I move that the bill be temporarily laid over until to-morrow.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, that would simply displace the bill. I see no reason why my colleague will not be back to-morrow. There will be abundance of time for him to speak. Everyone knows that this debate is going on. Everyone knows that the bill is not going to be disposed of to-day or to-morrow, but I do not feel that I am justified in allowing the bill to be put over from day to day without anything being done, either in the way of debate or action upon the amendments. The table is covered with amendments, any one of which can be taken up and considered. There is not the slightest difficulty in finding something to do in regard to the bill. I repeat, I think I am justified in asking that if we can not vote upon the bill we shall debate it and dispose of the amendments, or that a time shall be fixed when the vote can be taken. I will then accommodate, so far as I am able to do, the wishes of Senators and the convenience of the Senate; but to have it wait day after day for the convenience of Senators who are not ready will drag the debate out to a length which will carry the session into the summer. I can not, as responsible for the bill, assent to delays of that kind. I think I am justified in asking that the consideration of the bill shall proceed.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee, when he complains that we are not ready, whether the debate has ceased on the other side of the Chamber? Is there to be any further discussion from that side? We have had none practically on this bill.

Mr. LODGE. I do not know how many Senators desire to speak on the bill. I desire to speak upon it myself, and I intend to speak upon it before the debate is closed. I had intended to speak upon it, and I have a very great desire to do so, but I will not allow my desire to stand in the way of the business of the Senate. If the Senate is ready to vote on the bill, no desire of mine to make a speech shall interfere with it. If I am not ready to speak and the Senate is ready to vote, I shall not ask the Senate to delay for me.

I do not mean to be in the least unreasonable in regard to this measure with any Senator, but I do think that in view of the importance of the measure and the approach of the hot weather, I am entitled to say that we ought to have on it either a vote or debate or a reasonable time fixed when a vote shall be taken.
